Thousands Slaughtered In Bolivians' Chaco Trap

Paraguayans Rush Into Deadly Cannon Fire at Jungle Fort.

World War Ruse Fails to Save Day

Defenders "Mop Up" Field, Then Celebrate in Last Stronghold.

Buenos Aires, June 23 (AP). — Bolivian dispatches from the Chaco war front tonight claimed 2,000 Paraguayans had been killed or wounded in an unsuccessful attack on Fort Ballivan, backbone of the Bolivian defenses.

Wholesale slaughter of men under a withering artillery barrage on a front only half a mile long was described in the advices from La Paz, which asserted Bolivian casualties totaled only 61 dead and 170 wounded.

The Paraguayan command did not put out a definite estimate of casualties and was silent beyond claiming that withering machine-gun fire had caused irreparable losses to Bolivian forces.

Fort Still Held.

Advices indicated that the Paraguayan army had been unsuccessful, however, in its third major offensive since March against the Bolivian stronghold.

The survivors in Fort Ballivan celebrated a victory tonight.

Bolivian sources said a complete Paraguayan division, led by Col. Brizuela, had smashed through a Bolivian defensive line only to run into an artillery trap.

Cannon of large and small calibre as well as mortars were used by the Bolivian defenders to blast the Paraguayan attackers, stalled in their attempt to encircle the fort behind Condado in the Pilcomayo sector.

Recalls World War Tactics.

Military tactics were brought into play by the Paraguayan command reminiscent of World War days in Europe. A general strafing directed toward "Canada strongest" and "Canada el Carman" sectors was served up to attract the attention of the Bolivians at the northern end of their line. This strategy failed to draw in the Bolivian points, however, but sensing the maneuvre the high command directed a consolidation of positions at Condado.

The Paraguayans under Brizuela, unmindful that the Paraguayan feints had failed, drove directly at Condado.

The shower of munition was described as the fiercest yet seen in the Chaco. The massed Paraguayans were cut down like wheat before a scythe.

Suddenly the bombardment ceased and wave after wave of Bolivian troops poured over the field. A general mopping-up consolidated the Bolivian position. The Paraguayans straggled back to what safety they could find, but the strategically planned coup had been turned into ignominious defeat, Bolivian advices stated.

8 Dead, Heat's Toll in Midwest

Mercury Reaches 103 at Kansas City; Many Prostrated.

Chicago, June 23 (U.P.)—A sultry June heat wave sent temperatures to the 100 mark in mid-America today, causing a mounting toll of prostrations and drownings and bringing new threats to farm crops.

The heat hung over the upper Mississippi and Missouri Valleys following rains that supplied humidity and made the temperatures more difficult to bear.

At Kansas City the temperature reached 103. Des Moines had 100; St. Louis, 98, and Minneapolis, 96.

The death toll from drownings in the Chicago area was eight, with numerous heat prostrations.

Two more persons were overcome by the heat in the District yesterday as the mercury, temporarily checked by Friday night's violent storm, climbed to 96. Fair and possibly warmer was forecast for today, with a shower possible this afternoon.

Meanwhile Watt Wrigley, 93-year-old Civil War veteran and a native of England, who suffered a heat stroke Friday, died in Casualty Hospital, the first hot-weather fatality of the year here.

The maximum temperature, which was accompanied by variable winds, was reached at about 3:30 p. m. The minimum early yesterday was 69.

MRS. ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT.

Elliott's Child, Wife Greeted By Roosevelt

President Enjoys Beer on Motor Trip to Hyde Park.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Hyde Park, N. Y., June 23—President Roosevelt returned to his rambling Hudson River home today to meet for the first time, Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, the wife of his second son, and to see his new granddaughter, born six weeks ago at Fort Worth, Tex.

With Mrs. Roosevelt, he paused for lunch during a long motor trip from New London, Conn., at a roadside lunch stand, which served him with two "hot dogs" and two glasses of beer. Then they hastened here to be greeted by Elliott and the former Ruth Goggins, who were married in Texas a little more than a year ago.

The President ended two days aboard the yacht Sequoia at New London this morning, coming ashore at the Coast Guard Academy to begin a five-hour motor trip over the Berkshire foothills to the Hudson Valley. He intended to reach here for luncheon, but soon after crossing the border into New York State he called for a halt at the next lunch stand.

President Enjoys Meal.

Sitting in his open car under the gaze of several score of excited motorists, the President finished off one "helping" and signaled for more. Mrs. Roosevelt contented herself with one wiener and a glass of water. During the simple meal, which the President ate with relish, State Troopers and Secret Service men guarded the automobile.

Neither Elliott nor his wife, who came here two days ago to be introduced to the family, were on the portico when the President's car rolled up to the Roosevelt mansion. But the meeting—a strictly family affair—took place a few minutes later. This afternoon the President was driving them about the estate in his old touring car.

They went to the "cottage," two miles back of the home, where the family is wont to gather in the late afternoons for tea on the lawn or a swim in an open swimming pool. Here also is the site of the Val-Kil furniture shop of Mrs. Roosevelt, who has the cottage furnished in early American style.

Studies Farm Bill.

Secluded within his own broad acres, the President tonight went over the Frazier-Lemke farm moratorium bill and the railroad pension measure. After a visit to the home, Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre reported the President's promise of giving out some "big news," made in New London, Conn., yesterday, would not materialize. In fact, he may not act on either measure before returning to Washington, it was said.

The two bills were among a batch sent here from the Capital for the President to look over on his vacation. An earlier stack of bills was signed by the President aboard the Sequoia, as he cruised about the Thames River before the Yale-Harvard regatta yesterday.

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, an old friend, will be a luncheon guest at Krum Elbow tomorrow.

Loss of Eagle May Compel Mill to Close

653 Employes Facing Loss of Jobs at Hosiery Plant.

Firm Cites Trade Drop, Urges Restoration of Emblem.

Unable to operate without a Blue Eagle, the Harriman Hosiery Mills, Harriman, Tenn., may close Tuesday and throw 653 employes out of work.

An urgent request for restoration of the emblem was made yesterday by J. Asbury Wright, jr., vice president and attorney of the plant. He said failure to regain the insignia would force the factory to shut down Tuesday.

A. R. Glancy, an NRA official, told Wright his only chance would be to appeal to Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson tomorrow.

Although officials estimated NRA has produced jobs for 3,000,000 men and women, this is the first case on record where the livelihood of a substantial number of workers has been threatened by its rulings.

Cites Business Loss.

Wright protested the mill's business has fallen to the lowest levels on record because code restrictions prevent jobbers and retail stores from doing business with any manufacturer not in good standing at NRA.

He cited recent loss of an order from the State of Pennsylvania for 30,000 dozen pairs of hose. The order was cancelled because Federal relief funds could not figure in such a transaction.

NRA officials intimated the eagle would not be restored until the mill reemployed all of 350 men and women reported to have been dismissed because they joined a union. Wright said 149 union members have been reinstated.

Town Split by Ruling.

The Harriman case first gained National attention several months ago when Johnson revoked the mill's eagle on recommendation of the National Labor Board.

Soon after the emblem was withdrawn more than 50 irate Harriman merchants telegraphed Johnson offering to surrender their own insignia unless the mill's eagle should be returned. Johnson refused to restore the bird.

Meanwhile, the Harriman public refused to patronize the merchants who sided with the mill. As a result all except four or five of the business men hurriedly returned their eagles to show windows.

The Harriman case was referred to the Department of Justice for prosecution last March, but no action has been instituted.

Extended Negotiations.

The NRA was only about four months old when the Harriman strike was called last October 26, after alleged dismissals of employes for union activities.

The case was called to the attention of both the National and Atlanta labor regional boards in an attempt to reach a settlement. Negotiations proceeded until January 10, when the National board announced here the company had promised to bargain collectively with its employes.

One month later, however, the board, in a statement, said the company's rejection of an agreement with its employes "impugns the good faith of the company and is indicative of a desire to perpetuate discord, foster industrial unrest, and to obstruct the forces of recovery."

Rules Against Company.

No action was taken by the National Recovery Administration following this statement. The National Labor Board continued its investigation and, after a series of meetings, issued another statement in March declaring the company had infringed the rights of its employes to bargain collectively by entering into negotiations in bad faith with definite intentions not to make any agreement with employe representatives.

Harriman is a typical one-mill town of approximately 3,000 population. Practically all the business of the village centers around the mill and its workers.

Bi-Partisan Group to Study U. S. Policies; 17 Leaders Join

Seventeen prominent Democrats and Republicans have joined to form the nucleus of a National advisory council for the Crusaders, an organization formed to provide a vehicle for free discussion of Governmental acts, policies and tendencies, Fred G. Clark, commander in chief, announced yesterday. Offices have been established in New York City.

Those accepting membership on the council are Sewell W. Avery, president Montgomery, Ward & Co., Chicago; Francis H. Brownell, president American Smelting & Refining Co., New York; John W. Davis, New York; Cleveland E. Dodge, vice president Phelps Dodge Co., New York; Percy H. Johnston, president Chemical Bank & Trust Co., New York; Prof. E. W. Kemmerer, Princeton University; Fred I. Kent, director, Bankers Trust Co., New York; Martin W. Littleton, New York; Kenneth U Meguire, president Harlan Coal Co., Louisville, Ky.; Frank Purnell, president Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., Youngstown, Ohio; Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president General Motors, New York; Charles F. Thwing, president emeritus, Western Reserve University; James P. Warburg, president International Manhattan Co., New York; Edwin S. Webster, Stone & Webster, Boston; William Woodward, New York; Edward Bushnell, Cleveland; James K. Watson, former police commissioner, Detroit.

"The Crusaders propose to organize to make articulate the voice of the great mass of unorganized citizens of this country," Clark said in announcing the advisory council. "They propose to provide an unselfish vehicle by which the public, and through it the Government, can know the good and bad effects of Governmental experiments. The National Advisory Council of the Crusaders will give the unorganized majority of American voters the benefits of judgments based upon sound and clear thinking by men who are outstanding leaders and who have the best interests of the country and its citizens at heart."

Glass Voted 'Ablest' Democrat in Senate

Reporters Call Reed Most Capable Republican and Wagner Most Industrious; Huey Long and "J. Ham" Dapper Dresses.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, was designated the ablest Democrat in the Senate, with Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, a close runner-up, in a poll of Washington newspaper correspondents made public yesterday. Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, received the largest vote as the ablest Republican.

Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, won overwhelmingly the title of best orator in the Senate, while Senator Henry W. Keyes (Republican), of New Hampshire, received the distinction of being the "most silent Senator" in a body which spends its time chiefly talking.

The most liberal Senator was declared to be George W. Norris (Republican), of Nebraska, with Senator Simeon D. Fess (Republican), of Ohio, as the most conservative. Senator Wagner received the highest number of votes both for the "most popular" and "most industrious" Senator and was tied with Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson for the Senator most helpful to the press.

A majority of those voting regarded Senator Arthur R. Robinson (Republican), of Indiana, as the "Senator who would be least missed." There was no decisive trend toward the "Senator least inclined to work," but first place on that question went to Senator Park Trammell (Democrat), of Florida, with 10 votes out of the 82 questionnaires returned.

Senator Millard E. Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, regarded as one of the Senate's most eligible bachelors, won by 1 vote the title of "Senator with most sex appeal." Senator Huey P. Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, was held to be the best-dressed Senator, with Senator J. Hamilton Lewis (Democrat), of Illinois, as the "flashiest dressed Senator."

With many Senators mentioned, Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat),

Capt. Poderjay Faces Charge Of Murder

Vienna Police Declare Evidence Found Is Sufficient.

Vienna, June 23 (AP).—The famous Vienna International Police organization today completed its investigation of Capt. Ivan Poderjay and its chief announced that he considers the evidence developed sufficient to support a charge of murder.

Poderjay, husband of Miss Agnes Tufverson, missing New York and Detroit lawyer, was turned over to the prosecuting attorney, who will offer American authorities an opportunity to come and get him if they want him.

At the same time an explanation of the indifference toward Poderjay of the authorities of Yugoslavia was given by local Yugoslavs, who said that he has powerful connections in his native land, partly through a former wife there.

Poderjay's possession of trunks and clothing of Miss Tufverson and evidence that he sent one trunk filled with dresses to a sister form the most important evidence against the man, said Bruno Barber, head of the International Police organization.

While there have been persistent reports that Poderjay is wanted in Yugoslavia, Belgrade police have ignored the case.

Local citizens of the country said today that Poderjay's former wife, Zhivka Bradic, is a niece of the noted Yugoslavian patriot-prisoner, Punisha Rachich, and that the Poderjay family has a high standing.

Relatives of the former wife were said to oppose any action which would take Poderjay back to his native land as a prisoner.

Rachich was sentenced to prison in 1928 for shooting coalition leaders in the Yugoslavian Parliament, an act which precipitated a dictatorship. Nevertheless, he is regarded by many as a national hero who saved the nation.

Poderjay's own family was said to be devotedly religious and to strongly disapprove of his career as a marrying adventurer.

One brother is a priest in Solenia and another is a missionary in India.

Brothers Die In Gun Battle

Officer in Line of Fire Unable to Avert Va. Tragedy.

Norfolk, Va., June 23 (AP).—Two brothers died today after a gunfight at St. Bride's, near here, which a Norfolk County policeman was unable to prevent although he stood almost in the line of fire.

The dead men are Charles and Cliff Gibbs, aged 40 and 29, respectively. The shooting took place on the former's farm after a bitter argument over money. County Officer J. W. Peoples, who had accompanied Charles Gibbs, witnessed the duel.

The elder brother died in a truck while being brought to a hospital here. The younger man died after being admitted to St. Vincent's Hospital.

Peoples said he went to the farm and talked with Cliff, who agreed to drop the argument. A few minutes later Charles drove up. The argument began again, Cliff demanding that his brother give him $20 and the older man offering $5.

Peoples calmed the men and Cliff went to the house. Peoples and Charles remained outside. A few minutes later Cliff emerged with a shotgun.

Cliff fired at his brother. The load struck Charles in the chest. Falling, Charles drew his pistol and opened fire. Four shots from the automatic struck Cliff Gibbs. Both men fell.

Langer Loses Support of 6 In His Cabinet

Wary of Backing Acts Until Court Decides Who Is Governor.

Bismarck, N. D., June 23 (AP).—Six members of Gov. William Langer's cabinet, all elective officials, revolted today and joined Lieut. Gov. Ole H. Olson, who claims he is legal governor. They refused to recognize Langer's authority, since he was convicted of a felony recently.

Today's action was a climax to a series of events which began last March when opponents of Langer engineered a split in the nonpartisan league, a Republican faction.

Langer's conviction with four others a week ago was in the foreground of the developments which came at the height of the campaign for the State primary election Wednesday, two days before the chief executive was scheduled to appear for sentence. He faced a sentence ranging up to two years imprisonment or $10,000 fine or both.

In a statement announcing their position the revolting officers, several of them serving with Langer on important State boards, said they believed the Governor's conviction automatically disqualified him from holding office. His opponents were Lieut. Gov. Olson, John Husby, Commissioner of Agriculture and Labor; Robert Byrne, Secretary of State; Alfred Dale, State Treasurer; S. A. Olsness, State insurance commissioner, and Fay Harding and C. W. McDonnell, members of the State railroad commission.

In a statement the six expressed fear that acts performed in conjunction with Langer might be illegal, and declined to "participate in any of his executive acts until the courts have clarified" the question of his right to hold office.

Woman Mistakes Divorce Mate for Prowler, Kills Him

Atlanta, June 23 (AP).—George Eckford, member of the State Legislature, died today from a wound his divorced wife said she inflicted last night when she fired on what she thought was a prowler in the yard of her home.

Eckford, who served two terms as a member of the legislature from Fulton County, died from a pistol bullet wound through the abdomen shortly after his wife was acquitted in police court in connection with the shooting.

Rule for 1st ad in type

Recorder A. W. Callaway dismissed Mrs. Eckford after she told how she fired from a bedroom window of her home when she saw a man she believed to be a burglar in her back yard.

She said at the time her only thought was of her children in a nearby room.

Eckford recently served a term in the city stockade for drunkenness.

2 Women Confess Killing Man, Report

Oneonta, N. Y., June 23 (AP).—District Attorney Harold Grant announced today that two women held in connection with the death of Harry Wright, 49, had admitted running over him with an automobile in an effort to collect his insurance.

Mrs. Martha Clift, 28, the prosecutor said, signed a statement saying she ran over Wright on Crumhorn Mountain on June 14, after Mrs. Eva Coo, 45, had hit him with a mallet. Grant said Mrs. Coo also signed a somewhat similar statement.

The purported Clift statement said that Mrs. Coo, proprietor of a roadhouse, was the beneficiary under Wright's life insurance policies to the extent of $3,000 in case of death by accident.

Ickes Bares Widespread "Kick-Backs"

Walsh Probers Told of Disregard for Law on Wages.

Stringent Regulations to Be Formulated to End Practice.

Violations of the prevailing wage law on Government projects have been widespread throughout the country, Government officials admitted yesterday before the Senate committee investigating "kick-backs" and other wage and hour violations.

Government agents investigating complaints on many projects have discovered dozens of instances of "kick-backs," Secretary of Interior Ickes told Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, committee chairman, in a letter the Senator made a part of the record.

Five instances had been discovered on postoffice buildings in New York, and the facts in each case were forwarded to the Treasury Department for action, it was said.

New York Complaints.

The sum of $4,262.15 was alleged to have been taken in "kick-backs" by the paint subcontractor on the New York postoffice last year. The employer paid the painters $11.20 a day, but forced them to kick back $5.20, it was said. The Joseph S. Fulton Co., plastering subcontractor on the same building, was said to have collected $833.15 from ten plasterers to whom it ostensibly paid $8.50 a day, but forced to kick back $2.50 a day, it was said. The John Swanson Co., floor subcontractor, same building, was said to have paid his workers 50 cents, instead of the prescribed $1, an hour.

More than $1,000 was paid back by seven bricklayers employed on the Flushing and Jamaica postoffice buildings by David Slote & Son, it was charged. The contractor got back $4 of each $8 paid the men, it was said.

At least one plasterer on the postoffice at Hempstead, Long Island, paid back $2.50 for each $8 he was paid by Martin Conroy & Son, it was charged. Carpenters were paid only 50 cents an hour, instead of the prescribed $1.25, by the Jerome Construction Co., carpentering subcontractors on the building at Mitchel Field, Long Island, it was said.

'Kick-Back' on Rents.

Employes of other contractors who have contracts for a number of projects in the vicinity of New York were forced to live in an apartment building owned by the employers, it was said. The employers were Del Turco & Bro. and Tozzini Tile Works, Inc.

"Rentals on these apartments," Secretary Ickes said, "are higher than average, and it is claimed that this, in effect, is a means of receiving 'kick-backs.'"

The Celemente Construction Co., of New York, collected $1.40 a day from bricklayers working on Letchworth Village, a New York State project, according to a news-

Byrd Has Narrow Escape From Gas

Spread of Monoxide Fumes at Base Revealed.

Little America, Antarctica, June 23 (AP).—Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd described by wireless yesterday a narrow escape from carbon monoxide poisoning on June 17 in his solitary base, 123 miles south of here.

Carbon monoxide from his kerosene stove and lights and from the engines used in scientific work is one of the major hazards of the admiral's "farthest south" position. His report of the spread of fumes on June 17 explained why he broke off a wireless conversation abruptly that day.

"I felt rocky," he reported, "and decided it would not be wise to continue operating the small engine mounted on a shelf in one of the tunnels leading from the shack."

U. S. Horses Run Wrong Way! Frenchmen Lose All and Riot

Longchamp, France, June 23 (AP). Ah, zees Americains! Even their horses are crazy!

Crazy? They were a riot—such a riot that it took police reserves coming all the way from Paris to quiet things down again.

And, even despite the police, several betting booths were burned and there was all kinds of damage, including cracked heads.

Up until those American horses went to the post, today's affaire at the Longchamp race course was one of the most chic avenements sociales which la grande semaine has seen.

The trouble was that the racing fans assembled were thinking about "Lafayette, we are here" and other hands-across-the-sea matters and had bet their chemises off on two American horses in the second race.

One of the horses was Kantara, owned by Joseph E. Widener, and the other was Jock, owned by A. J. Duggan.

Kantara and Jock showed their sturdy American background by forgetting all about their French training and trying to run the race in the American fashion, which is counter-clockwise.

Now French horse races, for some unknown reason, are run clockwise. The American horses were having none of that.

The fans did not know American customs, but they did know that they were getting taken to the cleaners. So they did the only thing that was left for them to do:

They rioted.

They tore down the fences. They screamed, they poured out all over that track, tossing policemen about in their fury.

Authorities put in a hurry call for reinforcements from Paris. The reinforcements arrived. Heads were cracked. The melee went on and on.

Finally the battle and everything else, including the other four races scheduled for the day, were called off with the approach of twilight. Here's the biggest headache: A horse called Pepino won the race and paid $45.50 to $5.

House Unit Set To Probe NRA's Fight With Ford

Probe Witness

MAJ. GEN. McARTHUR.

Quiz Opens Tomorrow; Seeks Results of U. S. Policy.

MacArthur Called By Sub-Committee

Summoned Only for Views on Legislation, Members Say.

By Robert C. Albright.

What promised to be the first Congressional probing into Government enforcement policies under the NRA was officially sanctioned yesterday by the House Military Affairs Sub-committee investigating Army purchases.

In the absence of Chairman William N. Rogers, the sub-committee in closed session decided to inquire immediately into the Government's move to bar the Ford Co. from bidding on automobile and truck contracts.

Following conferences with sub-committee members, Representative Paul Kvale, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, announced the inquiry will probably get under way tomorrow, with Maj. Gen. L. H. Bash, quartermaster general of the Army, on the witness stand.

NRA Men May Be Called.

Representatives of the Comptroller General's office and even the National Recovery Administration, may be called to show just what denial of bidding rights to Ford has meant in increased Government procurement costs, and who has benefited most from the policy. The inquiry will further develop reasons underlying Ford's refusal to sign an NRA compliance certificate, said Kvale.

The sub-committee was closeted all morning with Maj. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the Army, who denied direct knowledge of Army procurement policies, and withheld his views on committee recommendations that Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois be relieved as Army Air Corps chief.

MacArthur was questioned regarding testimony of Col. Joseph I. McMullen, of the Judge Advocate General's office, that he (McMullen) had accepted fees for private services while on duty with the War Department.

But MacArthur consistently denied any information other than what he had read in published reports, and the committee turned to the chief of staff's legislative recommendations on Army promotions and National defense.

Members insisted MacArthur was

Dr. Marshall Considered as Steel Mediator

Labor Board Official Is Pushed as Chairman of Group.

Dr. Leon C. Marshall, vice chairman of the National Labor Board, last night was reported as under consideration by President Roosevelt for appointment to head a board of mediation for the embattled steel industry.

Secretary Perkins has directed recent negotiations to avert a prospective strike of 100,000 steel workers. The conferences, it is said, have emphasized the need for creation of a presidential board to conciliate differences between manufacturers and workers.

Friends of Marshall advanced his name on learning Administration plans called for establishment of the mediation body. They pointed out Marshall has a National reputation as an economist and has had wide experience as acting chairman of the National Labor Board in the absence of Chairman Robert F. Wagner.

Empowered by Congress.

The new board could be appointed under authority of labor legislation enacted in the closing days of the recent session of Congress. Both Houses provided by joint resolution for establishment of a board or boards to investigate issues in any labor controversy and, if necessary, to conduct elections among employes for collective bargaining.

Marshall formerly was professor at Johns Hopkins University. He also is a past dean of the College of Commerce and Administration at Ohio Wesleyan University. He holds degrees from Ohio Wesleyan and Harvard and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa Fraternity.

He is the author of "Readings in Industrial Society," "Business Administration," "The Story of Human Progress," and "Production in the Modern Order."

Served on Advisory Council.

During the war he was secretary to the advisory council of the Department of Labor and director of industrial relations for the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Observers believed the steel board would handle disputes in that industry in a manner agreeable to both sides and would function along the same general lines as the automobile industry mediation board, headed by Leo Wolman.

The recent Pittsburgh convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Stel and Tin Workers adopted a resolution calling on the President to name an impartial board of three to mediate all differences.

Cuban Gunboat Revolt Ended

Ship's Commander Nabbed Without Bloodshed on Vessel.

Havana, June 23 (AP).—A mutiny on the gunboat Cuba, largest unit of the Cuban Navy, was suppressed quickly and bloodlessly late today. The Cuba's commander, Capt. Evaristo Ulloa, was placed under arrest.

Capt. Ulloa had sent a message to the new chief of the navy, Angel Gonzalez, stating that he did not recognize the chief's authority.

Within three hours Secretary of the Navy Felix Granados announced that new officers sent to Antilla, where the Cuba lay, had taken charge and that the mutiny was over.

Capt. Ulloa, a member of the old Havana aristocracy, apparently was taken into custody by two army officers who flew to the scene.

A detachment of soldiers had been sent from San Diego to Antilla before the mutiny was suppressed.

$10,000 Offer By U. S. Spurs Dillinger Hunt

Federal Reward Bill Is Invoked First Time by Cummings.

Uncle Sam posted a $10,000 reward yesterday for capture of John Dillinger, the desperate Midwestern killer, who has been hunted for weeks in every corner of the country.

A reward of $5,000 was offered for the capture of Dillinger's pal, Lester M. Gillis, better known by his crime world tag, "Baby Face" Nelson.

The Department of Justice, in addition to these offers, also announced it would pay $5,000 for information leading to Dillinger's capture and $2,500 for information leading to the arrest of "Baby Face" Nelson.

In posting these offers, which will be broadcast throughout the country, together with photographs and other identification data, Attorney General Cummings took first action under the new Federal reward bill recently passed by Congress, which permits him to put up as much as $25,000 for the head of any public enemy. Officials or employes of the Department of Justice are not eligible to the rewards.

Posting of these rewards comes after weeks of futile effort by thousands of law officers all over the country to bag the most desperate killer of recent crime history. Dillinger, just 32 this week, has a record of cold blooded killings, bank robberies, jail breaks, and other offenses to make him without question the Number 1 Public Enemy. His ability to escape arrest after shooting his way out of one tight place after another so stirred Congress that it put through in the last session the measure under which the Department of Justice is now making the captured head of this criminal worth almost literally its weight in gold.

"I wish to express my gratification to the many local and State authorities who have entered so wholeheartedly into the Nationwide hunt for Dillinger and the members of his gang," said Attorney General Cummings in announcing the reward.

He said he wished especially to commend the valor of the two police officers at Waterloo, Iowa, Paul Walker and Emil Steffin, who shot down one notorious member of the Dillinger gang, Tommy Carroll, a few days ago. Carroll died within a few hours with his lips sealed despite every effort of police officers to force from him some clew as to Dillinger's whereabouts.

The death-dealing bandit has been reported seen in various parts of the country, blind trails have led across to Canada and to Europe, he has been reported dead, any number of recent bank holdups have been attributed to him, one Indiana police officer swore recently that Dillinger rushed into the station house and beat him up—but the best detective brains in the country have been unable to get a clew that has up to now produced any real footprints of this phantom criminal.

Text of Announcement.

The Attorney General's announcement of the rewards read as follows:

"I, Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, by virtue of the authorty vested in me by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1934, and by virtue of all other authority vested in me, do hereby proclaim and offer the following rewards:

"1. For the capture of John Dillinger, $10,000.

"2. For information leading to the arrest of John Dillinger, $5,000.

"3. For the capture of Lester M. Gillis, alias "Baby Face" Nelson, $5,000.

"No part of the aforesaid rewards shall be paid to any official or employe of the Department of Justice."

Center of Record Hunt.

A reward of $5,000 for capture of Dillinger was posted more than a month ago by a proclamation signed by the Governors of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Minnesota and Michigan.

From the time Dillinger, on March 3, escaped from the jail at Crown Point, Ind., with the aid of a wooden gun, and fled in the automobile of the Widow Holley, the sheriff, he has been the center of a man hunt the like of which the country has never seen.

This was not the beginning of his spectacular crime career. At 20 he was convicted for robbery and assault. He was paroled in 1932. Within a year officers were searching for him as a suspect in a bank robbery in Indiana. Then he was jailed at Lima, Ohio, on robbery charges. Last October three men shot up the jail, killed the jailer and escaped with Dillinger.

Gathering around him a gang of former convict pals out of Indiana State Penitentiary, he terrorized the State, robbing banks, shooting policemen, and last January he was trapped with three others at Tucson, Ariz. Police recovered $40,000 in cash and $12,000 in jewels. He was taken by airplane to Crown Point, Ind., to face a charge of murdering a policeman.

Reported in Dozen States.

He became friendly with the widow who became sheriff when her husband was killed by a bandit. He became friendly also with the prosecutor—so much so that the prosecutor and the lady sheriff posed for news photographers with Dillinger, the prosecutor with his arm around the criminal. A few days later, he pulled a wooden pistol on the deputy sheriff and with a colored accomplice, they seized guns from the jail, hopped into the sheriff's car and escaped.

Police officers went into frenzied search. Dillinger was reported in a dozen States simultaneously. It is certain he was in St. Paul March 31, when he shot his way out of an apartment house and escaped. His father says he visited the family home at Mooresville, Ind., April 7 to 9, while police were searching the whole Middle West. On April 20 he and his gang took over a summer resort near Mercer, Wis., and when it was surrounded by Department of Justice officers he shot his way out, leaving behind two dead and four wounded as victims of the hundreds of shots that were exchanged. Since then there has been nothing but rumor as to his whereabouts.

"Baby Face" Nelson was with Dillinger in the battle.

Since then nothing but rumor has developed as to Dillinger's whereabouts.

Last week a warrant was issued for Nelson's wife, who was charged with failure to report to probation officers at Chicago. She was under an 18-month sentence for harboring Dillinger and his gang near Mercer, Wis.

Indianapolis, June 23 (U.P.).—Officers picked up fresh clews to the will-o'-the-wisp trail of John Dillinger today.

Capt. Jesse McMurtry issued a warning to all police squad cars that confidential information had been received indicating Dillinger and members of his gang are in Indianapolis. The source of the information, which was regarded by police as authentic, was undisclosed.

Probers Are Told by Ickes Of Growing 'Kick-Back' Toll

paper investigation, Secretary Ickes said and added: "State prosecution was contemplated, but an applicable law could not be found."

Other Violations.

San Francisco, Philadelphia and other places were enumerated as places where complaints had been made and evidence "found of "kick-backs," underpayment, and other violations of the wage and labor laws. Bradley B. Smith, of the investigation division of the Interior Department, outlined the methods pursued by the department to run down violations. Action was taken on all complaints, he said. Special agents were assigned to investigate them. Regular inspectors on the jobs were not used for that work, he said.

Apparent violations had been discovered on several hospital and soldier homes jobs, Herbert Baruch, representing the Veterans' Administration, testified. Herbert S. Wood outlined the procedure of the Board of Labor Review which was created to handle labor questions and problems incident to the emergency construction program.

Opinions of officials in charge of regular construction projects is being sought on what new legislation or Executive order within the power of the President is needed to protect labor conditions on those projects, Senator Walsh said.

To Talk With Roosevelt.

The situation was thrown into confusion by an Executive order suspending provisions of the Bacon-Davis prevailing wage law because administrative confusion and delay resulted from its operation and operation of the emergency regulations. As soon as he has worked out a definite plan to meet the situation he will confer with President Roosevelt on the subject, Senator Walsh said. The session yesterday brought the hearings to a temporary halt. They will be resumed later at call of the chairman. Meanwhile, Senator Walsh said, investigators for the committee will go ahead collecting data and preparing necessary information for the committee.

All PWA and other emergency construction projects continue to be governed, so far as wages and labor conditions are concerned, by the PWA rules which were described by Senator Walsh as much more stringent and effective than were the provisions of the suspended Bacon-Davis law.

Neither will the suspension affect regular Government construction projects contracted for prior to June 16, 1933, the date the National Industrial Recovery act became effective. All projects and the bidding on them also will be affected by provisions of the NRA building codes.

The suspension is not expected very materially to affect Government building in the National Capital because those projects which are not within scope of the PWA were begun prior to June 16, 1933.

Miss Perkins' Aid Asked in Donovan Case

Urged to Head Probe Board in Ousting of NRA Union Head.

Secretary Perkins was requested yesterday to head a board to investigate the discharge of John Donovan, president of the NRA workers union, for the American Federation of Government Employes.

E. Claude Babcock, president of the federation, who asked Miss Perkins to fill the post, had not been informed several hours later whether she would accept.

"Our federation," he wrote Miss Perkins, "does not desire to hamper in any way an administrative service of the Government. This federation is totally and fully loyal. We do feel, however, that we must adjudicate this manner in some way in which either the official of the Government will be publicly vindicated or this local union president will be vindicated.* * *

"We all agreed that the best thing we could do would be to ask persons totally unbiased and unprejudiced in the case and of such high standing that their judgment would be accepted by all parties concerned, to assist us in the determination of whether or not this lodge president was removed for his union activities.

Donovan was dismissed by Recovery Administrator Johnson, who accused the lodge president of insubordination and inefficiency.

The lodge has begun raising a defense fund to be used in seeking Donovan's reinstatement.

Meanwhile, Nancy Luke, a clerk recently dismissed from NRA and reinstated by Johnson on the insistence of the union, wrote Donovan a letter of appreciation. She wrote:

"If and when the NRA heads will willingly cooperate with A. F. G. E. and recognize the union's rights to intercede for employes without retaliation, a spirit of friendliness and new life will course through the structure of the entire organization which will reflect no small credit to the New Deal."

Third Darrow Report on NRA Due This Week

Likely to Tell President of Situation Facing Little Business.

(Associated Press.)

Clarence Darrow's National Recovery Review Board, whose two previous reports had wordy repercussions in Hugh Johnson's office and on Capitol Hill, will make its third and final report some time this week.

This done, the board will disband and go home.

Darrow said yesterday the report was virtually completed. It will cover those codes not commented upon in the other two reports. In addition, it is expected to inform President Roosevelt what the board thinks in general about the manner in which one of his major recovery plans has worked out with relation to little business.

The 77-year-old veteran of historic court battles, in shirt sleeves and familiar suspenders, was working over the final pages of the report yesterday, in his hotel room a stone's throw from the headquarters of NRA.

Darrow Going Home.

To questions, he said:

"Yes, it's about done, we'll have it out in a few days."

Then with a weary smile:

"I'll be going home then."

The board has considered only NRA codes upon which complaints have been made, but the list already includes some of the biggest industries and involves some of the hottest controversies arising out of the National recovery act. Steel and bituminous coal were covered in the first group.

When the board made its second report, Darrow prepared to include at least a dozen more codes in the third report.

In the three months of the board's existence, it has received more than 600 complaints on something over 140 codes. The number of complaints climbing slightly after the first report was made public.

Monopoly Charge Made.

Reiterated repeatedly in the review of many of the previous codes were charges that monopoly had been fostered under the NRA law which was put into operation after suspension of the antitrust act. The Darrow board particularly emphasized this monopoly charge in its discussion of the steel industry.

Price fixing features of NRA codes, linked with the monopoly charges, figured in the previous reviews. After the first report, the Recovery Administration, through an Executive order of President Roosevelt, released a number of service trade industries from fair trade practice provisions, allowing them to agree on trade practices and prices in regional groups.

Darrow subsequently called this order a "complete verification of the criticisms we made in the first report of existing evils in certain codes."

The third report, covering studies of recent weeks, is expected to embrace comment on investigations of charges made against the effect of codes for the building material, cotton garment, hosiery, coat and suit and structural clay products industries.

Texas Peace Officers Indicted as Slayers

Rio Grande City, Tex., June 23 (AP).—Eulalio Elizondo and Jose Cantu, county peace officers, were indicted today for the slaying of Pablo Solis and David Gomes at a bloody political rally held here May 30. Both were arrested and released on $1,500 bonds. The men will be arraigned Monday.

The killings occurred at a political rally held by the forces supporting F. W. Seabury, of Brownsville, for State Senator against Archie Parr, choice of the Guerra faction, long rulers of Starr County politics.

summoned only for his views on legislation, and questions on the policies of Gen. Foulois and the practices of Col. McMullen were merely incidental. They pointed out that MacArthur will retire as chief of staff before Congress reconvenes, and the committee wanted the benefit of his recommendations.

The sub-committee's decision to look into NRA restrictions on Government purchasing, entirely unrelated to the chief of staff's appearance, came after Congress consistently sidetracked every effort to investigate recovery agencies and recovery policies.

Although NRA implications will be reached indirectly through Army truck and automobile purchases, both Kvale and Representative Edward W. Goss (Republican), Connecticut, said before they are through a complete picture will be offered.

"The policy of this committee has been to open up bidding wherever possible on a stiff competitive basis, and if Ford competition is to be eliminated, we have every reason to look into it," said Kvale.

"It is no small item in Government costs when the price paid for trucks jumps more than $50 a unit. If for no other reason, we want to develop the matter so the President will have information at hand on which to act."

The decision of the sub-committee was announced as the Detroit automobile manufacturer, who is willing to comply with code conditions but has refused throughout to sign a compliance certificate, was being barred from Government business on a broad front. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, last of the Federal agencies to move against him, ruled Thursday that not a dollar of the millions appropriated for loans to industries may be spent on materials supplied by firms not pledged to NRA allegiance.

Meantime, the House Army purchase investigating group, prepared to call former officials of the War Department in their search for irregularities in Army procurement.

Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War under President Hoover, and a number of former assistant secretaries may be asked to supplement testimony already presented by Assistant Secretary Harry H. Woodring, and others. Col. McMullen may be called again this week.

Department of Justice operatives assigned to the committee several weeks ago are watching the case for developments.

The sub-committee yesterday received a letter from Gen. Foulois, whose retirement as chief of the Army Air Corps has been demanded by members.

They declined to disclose its contents, other than to reveal "he asked for certain information." The sub-committee drafted a reply last night, which they sent to Chairman Rogers, in New Hampshire, for approval.

Appearing before the sub-committee tomorrow, Gen. Bash will be questioned again on preparation of specifications for trucks and automobiles, to determine what changes, if any, have been made, and what manufacturers they benefited.

Vare's Defeat Alters Line-up In Quaker City

Ward Leaders Who Stayed Faithful Still Control Many Ballots.

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—The sudden revolt which ended the reign of the Vare dynasty in Philadelphia politics is expected to bring about new line-ups in the Republican organization here.

Followers of the Vare brothers for the last generation in ward and city politics say they are not to be eliminated as was their leader, William S. (Bill) Vare.

There will be an election for mayor next year, and already reports and speculations are rife as to what some of the leaders who stuck by Vare in his hour of defeat will do in that campaign.

Vare, broken in health and spending most of his time in his summer home at Atlantic City, has remained silent on his elimination as leader of the party in Philadelphia through the defeat of his candidate for reelection as chairman of the city committee. Vare's name has been taken down as honorary chairman, and other officers who owed allegiance to him were not renamed.

Edwin R. Cox, president of the city council, who was elected city chairman, likewise has made no announcement of plans beyond the statement that everybody will get a square deal.

Cox, a follower of the Vares for many years in south Philadelphia, and later a Vare man of much influence throughout the city, has had nothing to say as to whether he will try to unhorse Vare ward leaders still in the saddle.

Two important offices, with approximately 600 employes, still are in the hands of Vare men, but whether they will go along or fight the now dominant anti-Vare group is not yet apparent.

City Panning Boards Grow To 739 Total

Maryland and Virginia Are Among Leaders in Work.

Increasing emphasis on the value of long-time plans for public works and civic improvements has resulted in the establishment of 739 city planning boards, the National Planning Board reported yesterday to Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Under these boards, comprehensive city plans have been prepared in 218 cities. In addition, 39 States have adopted the planning board scheme.

Leading many States in planning work are Maryland and Virginia, the board reported. Under the direction of George Radcliffe, Baltimore, regional director, Maryland has nine committees at work on planning. These committees range in interest from sociological development of the Georges Creek area of western Maryland to a group studying improvement of the sea food industry.

In Virginia, 18 committees are at work on education plans, public works programs, coordination of transportation, vital statistics and health, water supply, port development, and similar subjects. County and local governments are being studied in both States.

In Virginia, the planning board is aiding with research work in State schools. Preliminary reports are expected from most of the committees by August 1, and all are expected to have their final recommendations ready for the Legislature in January, 1936.

The National board reported to Secretary Ickes that "planning must appeal to the public as the sensible and economical method of determining the long time public works program. This can be accomplished, however, only by continuous educational efforts aimed at thoroughly acquainting each and every citizen with the purposes or objectives and advantages of planning well in advance of development."

Pact Is Signed To Cut 'Hot Oil' Output in West

Leading Companies Will Buy Surplus From Independents.

Moves to stabilize the petroleum industry in the Nation's two oil "trouble spots"—Texas and California—were undertaken yesterday by Secretary Ickes, the oil administrator.

To cut production of "hot oil" in the east Texas area, the administrator announced signing of a cooperative agreement whereby principal oil companies would buy up surplus stocks of gasoline held by refiners on condition the refiners would refuse to purchase crude oil produced in excess of quotas. For California, an "agency agreement" designed to end price wars was approved by Ickes.

The Texas agreement was announced as "a cooperative effort" by the industry, the Department of Justice and the Oil Administration. Ickes termed it "a real move toward stabilization," and Oil Administration spokesmen said it should go a long way toward curbing the troublesome problem of oil produced in excess of quotas unbalancing markets.

Under the California agreement, refiners agreed not to purchase or run any oil produced over allowables, and to post prices for gasoline. Surpluses held by independent refiners are to be bought up by companies party to the agreement.

The agreement also set a 3-cent margin for retailers, which the Oil Administration said was designed to halt destructive price wars recurrent in the area.

A large force of Department of Interior investigators has been working recently in the East Texas field to stop "hot oil" operations.

Tariff Board Order Ready For President

"Yankee Traders" Hope to Show Benefits of Reciprocal Deals.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

President Roosevelt's "Yankee traders" yesterday completed arrangements for showing off to the home folks to best advantage the "horses" they expect to get in their foreign trades.

They had prepared the rough draft of an Executive order, to be issued by President Roosevelt immediately upon his return here, to set up machinery for public hearings on tariff changes proposed in connection with reciprocal trade deals to be made under the new tariff bargaining act.

The group of experts which will negotiate the reciprocal trade agreements are expected to attend the hearings, which will be conducted by a special "Presidential trade committee" to be named by the President.

The committee is expected to have one representative each of the State Department, Commerce Department, Treasury Department, Agriculture Department, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, U. S. Tariff Commission, and the Peek foreign trade organization.

Same Groups Represented.

The same departments and organizations are represented on the executive committee on foreign trade policy, which has active charge of the trade agreement negotiations. It was considered advisable, however, to appoint entirely different personnel to the "Presidential trade committee" for the hearings.

At these hearings all industries and individuals affected by the proposed tariff changes can present their views and objections, if any. The committee which negotiates the agreements will rave representatives to explain the proposed agreements, their advantages and reasons why tariff changes are wanted.

The "Presidential Trade Committee" will make recommendations at the conclusion of the hearing. The committee, it is anticipated, will sit almost continuously after the negotiations get under way.

Most of the evidence presented at the hearings, the executive committee on commercial policy believes, will be submitted in the form of legal briefs, thus saving industries the time and expense of sending special representatives here.

Cuban Treaty First.

The first reciprocal treaty to come under this procedure is expected to be the new commercial treaty between the United States and Cuba, which is now almost completed. The reciprocal trade agreement with Colombia was negotiated before the present committee was formulated.

Cuban treaty negotiations are being handled by the committee, however. It is expected to be completed within two or three weeks, and will give the first practical working test to the "Yankee trading" machinery.

This treaty, it is generally conceded, will provide for reduced tariff rates on a number of Cuban products, notably sugar and tobacco, imported into this country in large quantities. In return, the Cuban government will grant reduced tariff rates to a number of American products, including American agricultural products. The reduction in the sugar tariff is expected to be about a half cent per pound.

Members of the negotiating committee expect protests from a number of industries and trade groups, but particularly from sugar and tobacco producers. These will afford the new "Presidential trade committee" an opportunity to swing into action and "sell" to American industry and business as a whole the proposals put forth in the new treaty.

A Lot of Us Must Have Quit Smoking

8 Billion Fewer Cigarettes Made During 1933.

A drop of more than 8,000,000,000 in the number of cigarettes manufactured in the United States last year as compared with 1931, is reported by the Census Bureau, according to the Associated Press.

Tobacco companies rolled out a 1933 total of 112,704,260,156 cigarettes, nevertheless.

The bureau reported that both wages and cost of materials decreased, but that there had been an 11.8 increase in the number of wage earners employed in the cigarette field.

Baruch Terms World 'Great Armed Camp'

Menace of War Is Cited to Army College Graduates.

While standing armies may not be up to full strength and the wheels of munition factories are lacking full tempo, Bernard Baruch said yesterday he believed the world today is as "great an armed camp as it was in the World War."

The New York financier and chairman of the World War Industries Board in an address before the Army War College's graduation class declared further he was of the opinion the world powers in their struggle for economic existence have turned peace even further from its goal than if blood actually were being shed.

"Each government," he asserted, "sits behind a bristling fortress equipped with terrible economic weapons of destruction, instead of mere guns" * * * and, "National economies are more highly organized than ever before, and all on the basis of offense or reprisal."

Urges Government Control.

Outlining his views for planning in days of strife, Mr. Baruch advocated complete Government control of all industrial activities during wartime "to take the profit out of war." He said the Government should fix a "definite ceiling" above which war prices and profits could not go.

"Thereafter," he said, "a tax program must be enacted that will take away, in totality, the spread between the selling prices and costs, plus a reasonable return.

"By parallel planning there must also be a control over all prices, goods, foods, rents, wages, services; in short, of all activties that yield profit. All must be denied the right to indulge in a joy ride at the expense of the Nation. The control of dollars must be made applicable to the entire citizenship, regardless of their classification.

War Profits Assailed.

"Incidentally, I hold the belief that the last war was profitable to nobody—neither to individuals nor to nations. They made apparent profits, but none of permanent nature. We should avoid even a first appearance of profit, for war is too horrible a thing to permit any advantage to be gained therefrom.

"Plans to eliminate war profiteering should provide that each man, each business, everything and every dollar shall bear its just proportion of the burden. These plans should be designed to avoid the prostrating economic and social aftermath of war, and, finally, should be laid with full recognition that modern war is a death grapple between peoples and economic systems, rather than a conflict of armies alone.

"Your studies have already shown you that in any major conflict the entire population must cease to be individuals following a self-appointed course and become a vast mechanical unit composed of correlated moving parts, all working to the end of directing practically all the National material resources to the single purpose of victory. Modern war requires that the full power of the Nation be exerted in the shortest possible time, not only for the purpose of destroying the enemy by material forces, but also by the process of slow and often insidious economic strangulation and political isolation. * * *

Pictures Activities.

"War on the modern scale we now know has disturbed our normal economic structure so greatly that, irrespective of the side which wins, the aftermath of the struggle prostrates both the conquered and the conqueror. To war's aftermath we must give such thought and make such plans that we shall not suffer again, what has become a burdensome 16 years after the war, as at any time during the war."

Mr. Baruch declared it is not generally realized how embattled the world is at the present time. He stressed that while it is true that the primary purpose of the present struggle was not to kill or maim," yet it has for its object the restriction of international commerce with immediate reactions upon the life and happiness of others."

Besides setting up tariff barriers and other methods of economic warfare, Mr. Baruch pictured activities as:

"Airplanes and navies are being increased and from some far distant places we can faintly hear the tramp of increasingly greater masses of men under arms. Surely in these circumstances you must study well the forces at work and be ready if the dreadful day comes to meet it.

Cites War Danger.

"It has been said that in the passing of dynasties of kings and princes who could make war, there would be less chance of war. There already is established in the world, governments under dictatorship with powers greater than that possessed by any of the modern princes before the World War.

"There is no doubt that peaceful as may be their intentions and their avowals, either Stalin, Hitler or Mussolini can plunge the world into a war that could not be localized.

"Yet I feel hopeful that this very situation—a world bristling with economic armaments — will soon bring home to the nations the necessity of sitting down together again and reestablishing some fair relationships, so that men and women may carry on their lives with a decent regard for the rights of all.

"That can be done; it must be done, and in that better day this country will hold its place, as it does now, as the chief evangel of peace and its blessings."

Borah Terms Sheppard Dry Plan Mistake

Thinks It Would Be Source of Political Corruption.

(Associated Press.)

Senator Borah (Republican) Idaho, yesterday expressed his opposition to the new Sheppard prohibition plan, asserting it would be a "source of eternal legislative turmoil and political corruption."

The plan, proposed by Senator Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, calls for a Constitutional amendment to clothe the Federal Government with authority to regulate or prohibit alcoholic beverages.

Sheppard was a coauthor of the eighteenth amendment. He offered his amendment in the closing hours of the last session as a substitute for National prohibition.

Drys Rally to Sheppard.

At that time he declared conditions under repeal had shown that States were unable to handle the liquor traffic. He said he was offering his proposal for discussion and consideration in the approaching elections. Several dry leaders have since rallied to his support.

On the other hand, Borah, in a statement written for the Associated Press, indicated he favored a thorough trial of the State control method, with strong Federal protection for dry States against importations from their wet neighbors. The Idaho Senator, who fought side by side with Sheppard for retention of the prohibition amendment, said:

"I am unable to bring myself to believe in the amendment proposed by Senator Sheppard. I do not want to be amending the Constitution every fifteen minutes—like we would some poorly designed statute.

"Source of Corruption."

"I do not want to leave this matter to Congress—we would have it eternally with us, dominating legislation and politics. It would be up for consideration at every session, a source of eternal legislative turmoil and political corruption.

"The amendment would hamper and emasculate the police powers of the State without anything effective being substituted therefor. There are other reasons."

In offering his amendment, Sheppard said he was still a believer in the old eighteenth amendment as the best way to regulate the liquor traffic. He emphasized, however, that his proposal would be more flexible in that it would permit Congress to prohibit, to regulate, or to do nothing about the liquor problem.

Air Branch Name Will Be Changed

Department of Commerce Bureau Formed.

The name of the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce will be changed to the Bureau of Air Commerce, effective July 1, it was announced yesterday by John Dickinson, Acting Secretary of Commerce. The office of director, now held by Eugene L. Vidal, will be known as director of Air Commerce.

Authority for the change is contained in an order signed by Secretary Roper just before his departure for the Pacific Northwest.

The name more accurately describes the duties and functions of this organization, Dickinson said. It has enjoyed the status of a bureau, but it has never been so designated.

American Smelting Charge Dismissed

Trade Body Admits Lack of Jurisdiction.

Admitting lack of jurisdiction, the Federal Trade Commission yesterday dismissed its complaint against the American Smelting and Refining Co., alleging violation of the Clayton act.

The commission held that acquisition of the stock of the Federated Metals Corporation by the American S. & R. Co., violated provisions of the Clayton act regarding acquiring stock of a competitor. The smelting company denied the acquisition lessened competition, and asserted it had not acquired securities of another corporation in commerce as defined in the act.

In dismissing the complaint, the commission held it lacked jurisdiction, but indicated "that the acquisition complained of might well be the basis for court action."

Two State Jobs For One Man Held Illegal

Arlington Liquor Store Manager Gets Ruling on New Post.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

A new angle developed yesterday in the Alexandria school board situation when Albert V. Bryan, attorney for the Commonwealth, in Alexandria, handed down an opinion in the case of Emmett Lawler, a member of the school board, who has recently been appointed manager of one of the liquor stores in the city.

Mr. Lawler had requested the Commonwealth attorney for an opinion in the matter, and the reply states: "In my opinion you could not act as a member of the school board while serving as manager of the government store. My reason is that section 786 of the Code of Virginia provides:

"'No State officer, except a notary public, no city officer, no member of council, or any officer thereof, shall during his term of office be chosen or allowed to act as a school trustee.' A manager of a government store under the alcoholic beverage control act is, in my opinion, a State officer."

Mr. Lawler and Arthur M. King were elected members of the Alexandria school board by a 1-vote majority on October 24 last, to succeed Orlando H. Kirk and Dr. John T. Ashton, whose terms expired and whose reappointments were urged by many civic, fraternal and patriotic organizations in the city.

Alexandria has two liquor stores. Mr. Lawler was named manager of the store at 423 King street.

Committee to See Ickes.

Mayor Edmund F. Ticer, City Manager Wallace Lawrence and City Attorney Carl L. Budwesky, acting as a committee appointed by the City Council of Alexandria, have been granted an appointment tomorrow with Secretary Ickes, to urge an additional loan to erect a new high school in Alexandria.

Alexandria was granted a loan of $300,000 some time ago, $250,000 of the amount for the proposed new high school, but plans submitted will exceed that amount for building and equipment.

The City Council of Alexandria has obtained title to the right of way of the old Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Electric Railway. This trolley line was abandoned April 10, 1932. The right of way extends from Hooffs Run at the west end of King street to Four Mile Run, and south on Royal street to Hunting Creek. With its abandonment, the owner, R. L. May, was required to remove the tracks and place the streets in a condition similar to the surrounding streets. Mr. May proposed to give the right of way to the city in lieu of the track removal and required street work, which proposition was accepted by the council.

Grand Lodge to Convene.

The Grand Lodge of Virginia, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, will convene in the George Washington National Memorial Temple tomorrow in a special communication. Members of Alexandria-Washington Lodge, Andrew Jackson Lodge and Henry Knox Field Lodge, of Alexandria, will participate in the program as guests of the Grand Lodge of Virginia.

Announcement was made yesterday that effective July 1 next, all employes of the Fruit Growers Express will receive a 4 per cent pay increase. A 10 per cent cut was made February 1, 1932, and this increase leaves a decrease of 6 per cent from the original pay rate.

John George Eberhart died yesterday at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. A. Nugent, 513 South Lee street, Alexandria. Besides his daughter, he is survived by two sons, William E. Eberhart, of Falls Church, Va., and J. C. Eberhart, of this city; also four grandchildren and two great grandchildren. He was a member of the Holy Name Society.

Labor Session at Geneva Puts Off Action.

Geneva, June 23 (AP).—Predictions that the influence of the United States will force adoption of a world-wide policy of the 40-hour week were made today at the final session of the international labor conference.

The American membership will be in effect at the 1935 session, the French delegate Jouhaux warned, and "you will be obliged to accept reductions of hours."

He made the statement after the conference had postponed for a year action on a resolution proposing advocacy of the 40-hour week.

Tuberculosis CampFund Plea Gets Results

Grant, executive of the association, yesterday.

The gifts so far received for this special health camp deficit amount to $15,000.

NRA Is Lauded, Johnson Hit By Clyde Kelly

Says General Fails to Grasp Philosophy of Recovery Act.

Neaut Lake, Pa., June 23 (AP).—Represenative Clyde Kelly (Republican), Pennsylvania, a member of the Congressional sub-committee of three which wrote the original National industrial recovery act, told Pennsylvania newspaper publishers today he believes the NIRA "fundamentally is sound," but that "tragic mistakes" have been made in administration.

"Fundamentally the NIRA is sound and has qualities of permanency," Kelly told the P. N. P. A. delegates attending their annual summer convention. "In my opinion, however, Gen. Johnson has not understood the philosophy back of either the act or the NRA, resulting in administrative abuses."

Kelly, a veteran publisher himself, urged the others to fulfill "your great mission of furnishing raw material for the manufacture of public opinion."

The speaker asserted hundreds of press bureaus at Washington are sending out "bales of one-sided propaganda," and said the brain trust today should be the newspapers, "presenting actual facts from both sides of any question and a carefully considered, fair view" for the public.

"The publishers' great mission is the furnishing of raw material for the manufacture of public opinion," Kelly said.

Officer Fires When Attacked in Ashton, Md.

Reich Cabinet Now Divided Into 3 Camps

One Ultra Radical, 2d Backs Von Papen, 3d Leans to Hitler.

Berlin, June 23 (AP).—A division of the cabinet of Chancellor Adolf Hitler into three groups became evident today as discussions based on Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen's criticisms of some Nazi policies continued.

One group would have the Government adopt even more radical measures than the present policy; a second favors the reforms suggested by the more conservative von Papen, and the third is ready to follow Hitler, but hope he will be influenced by the conservatives.

Von Papen, who is tied to President Paul von Hindenburg by close personal friendship, was invited to visit the President at Neudeck for the week-end, but decided it was wiser to postpone the trip.

Moratorium Discussed.

He will attend the German Derby at Hamburg tomorrow, and will visit the President's country estate next week after the country has had more time to think about his advocacy of a free press, free speech and non-interference in religious matters.

The Cabinet has met repeatedly to discuss the speech since its delivery Sunday, but the matter went into the background temporarily today as the moratorium discussions occupied Government officials.

Outstanding in the "radical" group in the Cabinet are Joseph Goebbels, minister of propaganda, who suppressed Von Papen's speech; Walter Darre, commissioner of agriculture, and Ernst Rohem, minister without portfolio.

Favor Wider Action.

These men believe the Government has not gone far enough in suppressing opposition, in the press and church as well as in other phases of life, and impressing Naziism on the whole German people.

With Von Papen in advocating conservatism in economic matters and more freedom for critics of the government are Franz Seldte, minister of labor; Franz Guertner, minister of justice; Konstantin von Neurath, minister of foreign affairs, and Werner von Blomberg, minister of defense.

Those who would follow Hitler blindly, while hoping he will see fit to become more conservative, include most of the other members of the cabinet, one of whom is the influential minister of aviation and premier of Prussia, Hermann Wilhelm Goering.

Slain Baby's Body Reveals Mystery

Police of Five States Join Search in East.

Darien, Conn., June 23 (AP).—The police of five States sought tonight to penetrate the mystery surrounding the discovery today of the body of a child in a field not far from the Boston Post road, as Darien authorities became convinced that death had rseulted from violence.

Dr. William H. Slaughter, medical examiner for Darien, said the body probably had been in the field four months or more. A check of missing persons records by police here and in surrounding communities failed to show any child unaccounted for.

Dr. Fred A. Reininger, examined 20 teeth found in the skull and said from their condition the child probably was between three and five years old.

Two Are Injured As Auto Hits Pole

Silver Spring Men Victims in Frederick Pike Crash.

Two men were injured seriously last night on the Frederick pike near Rockville, Md., when their automobile left the road and crashed into a telephone pole.

The injured men, Lewis C. Miller, 23, and Richard Goyens, 20, both of Silver Spring, Md., were taken to the Montgomery County General Hospital by the Rockville Rescue Squad.

Miller, said by police to be driver of the car, was treated for concussion of the brain and a sprained arm. Goyens was treated for a badly lacerated ear, cuts on the head and shock.

Teacher's Link In Lost Bride Case Is Probed

Letter to Poderjay Gives Clew; Sister Aids in Tufverson Hunt.

New York, June 23 (AP).—Information concerning Ivan Poderjay and his missing bride, Agnes Colonia Tufverson, was sought today by police from an unidentified Connecticut school teacher.

Two New York detectives were in Hartford and Waterbury to determine what knowledge the teacher, a friend of Miss Tufverson, has of Poderjay's mysterious activities.

The teacher was said by police to have sent a letter to the polished Yugoslavian, addressed to Miss Tufverson's East Side Apartment.

There it remained unclaimed for months, until police began their exhaustive search for her. It was hoped the teacher might be able to assist authorities whose long hunt for the talented attorney has been futile.

Stains Examined.

Chemists of the police department, examining brown stains found in the apartment have not yet made a report of whether they had been made by human blood.

A slim blonde girl is proving an untiring, valuable aid to police in their search for Miss Tufverson. She is the "baby sister" of Miss Tufverson.

Miss Selma Tufverson, known to everyone in the missing persons bureau as "Sally," is an able lieutenant, Capt. John H. Ayres, head of the bureau, said today.

Day and night in the painstaking search for clews she assists him, Ayres said, devotes her entire strength to a solution of the disappearance.

Resembles Sister.

Sally Tufverson, say those who knew both sisters, resembles Agnes in many respects. She is younger, not so large, but her face, her voice and her hair bring out the relationship in sharp relief. Sally is 30, her sister was 43.

The office telephone jangles. Miss Tufverson answers.

Outwardly calm, she tells a questioner:

"No, we haven't determined definitely yet that Miss Tufverson is dead."

The caller doesn't know he speaks with a sister of the missing woman.

Five sisters there were in the Tufverson family, devoted to each other, and all accustomed to hard work.

Gave First Clew.

Until the strange disapperance of her sister catapulated Miss Sally Tufverson into the midst of a mystery which Capt. Ayres describes as the most perplexing of the 350,000 cases he has handled, she was secretary to an attorney in Detroit.

Never once has there been a letup in the persistency of Miss Sally Tufverson. It was she who first discredited a cablegram which Poderjay since has admitted he sent in his bride's name, saying she had arrived in London.

"Agnes didn't write that," she said. "It isn't like her."

Then she told Capt. Ayres:

"My sister wrote to us every week without fail. That is—up until December. She would now, if she could."

And that remark, to Capt. Ayres, is significant.

Woman Is Firm In Slaying Denial

Mrs. Madison Awaiting Death Sentence.

Los Angeles, June 3 (AP).—Convicted of murdering her husband, Mrs. Nellie Madison, 39, former Montana cowgirl, calmly insisted in the county jail today that she was innocent. She awaited the formal pronouncement of a death sentence next Tuesday, the jury which found her guilty last night not having recommended leniency.

Madison, 45, auditor for a movie studio, was slain last March 25 by five bullets fired into his back in the couple's Burbank apartment.

Madison's body was found several hours after he was killed. Mrs. Madison was found two days later at the home of a rancher friend 50 miles away. Prosecutors contended she was in hiding, but she denied this, insisting she had not heard of her husband's death until officers came for her.

Hitler Studies Britain's Bid For Debt Talk

Acceptance Is Expected; Move Seen as Victory for Dr. Schacht.

Berlin, June 23 (AP).—Distinctly encouraged by the British invitation to talk over the problem of foreign debts, German government officials, led by Chancellor Hitler himself, devoted their attention today to a series of conferences on the problem.

The chancellor was understood to be taking an active part in the deliberations, and it was evident that eventually Germany will accept the British proposal, after a policy has been decided upon and negotiators named.

The British invitation, coming in the midst of threats to collect interest on the Dawes and Young loans by impounding German commercial accounts, was regarded in banking circles as a distinct victory for Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank.

Dr. Schacht had said that Germany would retaliate by cutting off commercial relations with countries setting up clearing houses as has been proposed in Great Britain and France.

While government and Reichsbank officials carried on their talks, Kurt Schmitt, minister of economics, and Sir Eric Phipps, the British Ambassador, had a long conversation at the American Embassy, where both were luncheon guests.

American banking circles here adopted a policy of watchful waiting, emphasizing that the United States is not likely to take any steps with regard to the moratorium unless it develops that some arrangement is made whereby American holders of German bonds are discriminated against.

3 Counties Begin Harvesting Barley

Yield in West Virginia Exceeds Expectations.

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Harvesting of the barley crop was started this week in the producing sections of Berkeley, Morgan and Jefferson Counties. Continued hot weather which is rapidly ripening wheat and rye, and these harvests will be started the coming week.

The barley is turning out slightly better than had been expected. A below-average yield had been indicated. Although some barley fields are bare after the shocking, the majority are thickly shocked, and seemed well filled to the handlers.

Wheat crop indications continue about average, with enough spotty fields to bring down the average of some sections where a high yield is expected.

Wheat sold at 83 cents Friday at local elevators. AAA payments to those who joined the crop reduction program will add about 15 cents per bushel to the return to the producers.

Minnesota PWA Fund Probe Asked

Forced ContributionsFrom Workers Charged.

Minneapolis, June 23 (AP).—Charging that men employed on Federal public work projects "have been forced to contribute to the Farmer Labor Association," Republican leaders today requested Secretary L. Ickes, public works administrator, to investigate the handling of Federal funds in Minnesota.

Ward F. Senn, chairman of the Hennepin County (Minneapolis) Republican committee, demanded that Gov. Floyd B. Olson, Farmer-Labor, submit to the taxpayers of Minnesota "a detailed statement" covering the expenditure of approximately $24,000,000 in Federal funds which, G. O. P. leaders claim, passed through the Governor's hands.

There have been charges that men hired for conservation work in Minnesota had been working for the Farmer Labor party.

Texas Refinery Blaze Kills Two, Burns Ten

Kilgore, Tex., June 23 (AP).—Two men were burned to death and ten were injured today in flames which swept the Southport Petroleum Co. refinery. Damage was estimated at more than $100,000.

The charred body of George Travis, nephew of M. M. Travis, vice president of the company, was removed from the ruins of the refinery building. A man named Rowe, Dallas, died from burns.

"ERA" Brand Will Designate New Deal Cattle

Half Million Animals Will Be Pastured in Old South.

A new alphabetical designation appeared yesterday when Harry Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, announced that some 500,000 cattle, which will be taken out of drought areas and fattened on more plentifully watered pastures in the South, will be branded with a uniform "ERA" insignia, to indicate they are New Deal property.

First shipments were ordered yesterday, 10,000 head to Alabama, the first of 75,000 which will go to that State, as fast as pasture is made available. Arrangements were made at a conference between Hopkins, Governor-elect Bibb Graves of Alabama, Thad Holt, director of FERA in Alabama, and several other officials.

Only thrifty beef-type cattle under 6 years old will be shipped. After fattening they will be taken to the last round-up and canned for distribution to relief families.

Other shipments ordered yesterday were 10,000 head to Tennessee; 5,000 to Oklahoma and 800 to Virginia. They are coming from Wisconsin and the Dakotas.

U. S. Emergency Outlay in Year Four Billions

Roosevelt's Six - Month Borrowing Estimated 3 Billion High.

(Associated Press.)

The Government's emergency expenditures during the fiscal year to end June 30 likely will total more than $4,000,000,000.

The Treasury yesterday set the figure for June 19 at $3,824,895,985. The last 11 days will carry that amount over the four-billion mark at the present rate of spending. Borrowing of the Government during the six months ending June 30, however, will be upwards of $3,000,000,000 short of the $10,000,000,000 estimate made by President Roosevelt in his budget message to Congress January 4.

The total was set by Treasury officials yesterday at $7,197,000,000, including $75,000,000 of Treasury bills to be sold this week. Of this, $3,162,000,000 represents new money and the remainder refunding.

No further important borrowing is expected until September.

Debt Exceeds 1919 Peak.

The National debt, standing at $26,981,458,205, June 20, exceeded the 1919 peak by $384,756,557, but was far short of the 29,847,000,000 named by the President as prospective for the fiscal year end.

Expenditures will come substantially under the $9,403,066,967 figure he set, having reached $6,851,124,353 June 20. On the same day, receipts of $3,042,556,414 were within striking distance of the $3,259,938,756 sum included in the budget.

The opinion has never been widely held that the Government, even with its enormous emergency operations, would spend the huge amount projected by Mr. Roosevelt, and it has been looked on generally as an informal outside limit under most adverse developments rather than an attempt to gauge actual outgo in advance.

When the budget was prepared, expenditures were running at the rate of $800,000,000 a month, but since January they have never gone as high as $500,000,000.

Borrowing since the first of the year consists of $2,431,000,000 Treasury bills, $2,881,000,000 Treasury certificates and notes with maturities extending to 1939, and $1,885,000,000 bonds maturing from 1944 to 1948.

U. S. Reenters Coast Dispute

Labor Secretary Sends McGrady to Settle 'Longshore Strike.

Breakdown of peace efforts in the Pacific Coast longshoremen's strike yesterday prompted Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins to send her First Assistant Secretary, Edward F. McGrady, back to the strike area.

Proposals for mediation advanced by Miss Perkins broke down last week, and yesterday dozens of messages from citizens and civic organizations on the Coast demanding some kind of settlement poured into the Labor Department. Miss Perkins' answer was to dispatch McGrady to San Francisco by plane.

The Assistant Secretary only recently returned from the strike area, where he sought to bring the strikers and employers into agreement. The chief issue is control of the "hiring halls" where longshoremen are hired.

It is believed McGrady will "observe" the situation and press for acceptance of Labor Department proposals that the longshoremen, employers and the Labor Department sit in on management of the halls.

Mailed Bombs Blamed On French Politicians

Paris, June 23 (AP).—Paris police today switched from the madman theory of the bombs mailed by "the three judges of hell" and worked on the theory that terrorists in some extreme political group are responsible.

From the spies in the ranks of both rightist and leftist groups detectives sought tips which might lead to the laboratory where the bombs are made.

23 Hurt, 20 Arrested In Lorient, France, Riot

Lorient, France, June 23 (AP).—Saturday night riots, now a routine calendar event in France, centered here tonight. Twenty-three were wounded and 20 arrested.

Political manifestants, entrenched behind a stone wall, threw bottles, rocks, and paving blocks at police, who charged the line without effect. The fire department finally dispersed the rioters.

Marion Davies' Portrait Withdrawn at Exhibit

Venice, Italy, June 23 (AP).—A tempest in an art gallery came to a peaceful end today as Marion Davies' "Portrait Without a Country" was pulled out of the pavilion of the American exhibit at the Venice biennial exhibit.

The removal satisfied the objections of Mrs. Juliana Force, director of the Whitney Museum of Art, who had ordered the American paintings withdrawn because of the unauthorized hanging of the portrait.

Glass Is Voted 'Ablest' Democrat In Senate; Reed Leads G. O. P.

Wagner Called 'Most Industrious,' Borah Best Orator.

of Oklahoma, was decreed the "handsomest Senator," while Miss Catherine Blanton, secretary to Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, was voted the "most beautiful woman employe of the Senate," getting 1 vote more than Miss Alice Uphoff in the office of Senator Felix Hebert (Republican), of Rhode Island.

"Not Up to Standard."

The consensus was that the present Senate was not up to the standard of previous Senates. Many of the voters commented on the submission of the Senate to domination from the White House and in a few instances it was likened to "a rubber stamp."

These were the high lights in the poll which was taken when Capitol Hill correspondents decided to go collegiate during the last few days of the Seventy-third Congress and let the world know what they thought of the Senate. Of the 435 correspondents listed as members of the Congressional galleries, 82 filled out the 28 inquiries of the questionnaire. But of the number who voted the majority were those whose work brings them frequently to the Senate gallery.

Among the correspondents voting were men and women representing newspapers in every section of the country and reflecting every shade of political opinion. Although there was nothing official about the poll—the standing committee of correspondents having no connection with it—the result where decisive might be regarded as a cross-section of opinion in the corps of Washington correspondents.

29 Call Glass "Ablest."

In reply to the question "ablest Senate Democrat," 29 correspondents named Senator Glass, the man who has been more bitterly opposed to many of the major items on the "new deal" program than any other Democrat. This tribute to the 76-year-old former Secretary of the Treasury was apparently based on the qualities he displayed in making what was a hopeless fight against some of the Administration's measures.

But 21 correspondents regarded Wagner as the "ablest Senate Democrat." The New Yorker is a stanch supporter of the "new deal" and has fought for two years for measures to decrease unemployment and to protect labor in its right to organize for collective bargaining. Democratic Leader Joe Robinson was third, with nine votes, while Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, was favored by five reporters.

Senator Reed, a conservative Republican, received 30 votes as the ablest Republican. Senator Norris was favored by 16 correspondents, while Republican Leader Charles L. McNary and Borah each received 10 votes.

65 for Borah as Orator.

There was a greater unanimity of opinion that Borah was the best orator than on any other question. He received 65 votes, while Senator Hiram Johnson (Republican), California, the runner-up, was favored by only seven correspondents. Two voters thought Norris the best orator.

While Senator Keyes received 31 votes as the "most silent Senator," Mrs. Hattie Caraway (Democrat), of Arkansas, was close behind him with 22 votes. Senator Marcus Coolidge (Democrat), of Massachusetts, went into third place with five votes.

The consensus was that the "best looking" men come from the wide open spaces of the West because the tall, silvery-haired leader of the inflation bloc, Thomas of Oklahoma, was first with 15 votes, while the tall, windsor-tie-wearing Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas, was second with nine votes. Senator Walter F. George (Democrat), of Georgia, was third with seven votes and Senator Gerald P Nye (Republican), of North Dakota received six votes. Not a member of the Senate from a State north of the Potomac and East of the Mississippi river was the choice of more than two voters.

Wagner Most Popular.

Wagner was deemed the most popular Senator by 26 votes, with McNary receiving 12 and Harrison seven. Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, was held by 27 correspondents to be the "most ambitious Senator" while 10 favored Long and six Reed. In the opinion of 22 voters Vandenberg has the best chance of all of being President.

Long was the choice of 17 voters for "best dressed Senator" with Thomas of Oklahoma getting 10 votes. Reed received seven votes. Next to Borah's oratorical ability the voters seemed more strongly convinced that Lewis was the "flashiest dressed Senator." The bewhiskered displayer of fancy waistcoats and colorful handkerchiefs from Illinois was favored by 56 voters while Long won second place with 21 votes.

On the other hand, 17 correspondents favored Senator M. M. Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, as the "Senator caring least for dress," with Borah being favored by 11 voters. Norris received 10 votes on this question. Most of those mentioned were from Western States.

Norris was named the "most liberal Senator" by 36¼ votes, the fraction resulting when one correspondent named four among whom he could not make a choice. Senator Homer T. Bone (Democrat), of Washington, was second with 15 votes, while Senator Robert M. La Follette (Republican), of Wisconsin, went into third place with 10¼ votes.

Fess Far Ahead of Field.

Fess was the favorite of 23 reporters for "most conservative Senator," with Senator Hamilton F. Kean (Republican), of New Jersey, receiving 12 votes, and Senator Jesse Metcatlf (Republican), of Rhode Island, 9 votes. Two Democrats, Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma, and Glass were held the "most conservative" by three voters each, while two reporters thought Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, the "most conservative."

Tydings won the honor of having "the most sex appeal" by one vote over Senator Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, receiving 18 votes to the latter's 17. Four candidates were tied for third place with 3 votes each, including Mrs. Caraway.

Apparently proving that people, even reporters, prefer voting against some one rather than for them, every voter designated a choice for the "Senator who would be least missed." Only one other question—the flashiest dressed Senator—was answered by all filling out questionnaires. For the Senator who would be least missed, Robinson, of Indiana, received 42 votes, while Trammell received 11 votes. Long was third with 4 votes.

McNary "Senator Politician."

Republican Leader McNary was the choice of 20 for the "smartest politician in the Senate;" Long received 11 votes and Vice President Garner and Byrnes were tied for third place with 7 votes each.

Senator Bronson Cutting (Republican), of New Mexico, who, like President Roosevelt, learned about the classics at Groton and Harvard, was named by 26 reporters as the "most literary Senator." Close behind, however, was Senator Henry F. Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, with 24 votes. Senator Bennett C. Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, received 7 votes.

Huey Long and 'J. Ham' Win All Honors as Dapper Dressers.

Ashurst, however, was the favorite of 23 for the "best mannered Senator," with Lewis receiving 20 votes and George of Georgia six votes. Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, was second in the race for "most industrious Senator," receiving 15 votes to Wagner's 18. Norris and Senator Morris Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, were each favored by six voters.

There was less unanimity of opinion regarding the "Senator least inclined to work" than any other. While Trammel got first place with ten votes; Erickson of Montana, seven votes, and Keyes, six votes. 25 other Senators received one or more votes.

"Robinson to Go Higher."

Democratic Leader Robinson was the choice for "Senator most likely to go higher and where;" 39 reporters believing he would be named to the Supreme Court bench and one thought he would go higher, but did not designate where; seven thought Wagner also would go to the Supreme Court; four thought Nye would be Vice President; 22 believed Vandenburg would be President; four thought Byrnes would get a Cabinet post.

Of the 82 questionnaires filed, 45 left blank a choice for "most beautiful Senate woman employe." Miss Blanton was favored by 14, Miss Uphoff by 13 and Miss Anna Hurwitz, secretary to Edwin A. Halsey, secretary of the Senate, by six. A woman correspondent replied: "Victor Russell in Senator Sheppard's office is the handsomest man. Why ask a woman to vote on the beauty of another woman?"

James D. Preston, Senate librarian and former superintendent of the Senate press gallery, was the choice of 19 for "most popular Senate employe." John Carson, secretary to Senator James Couzens (Republican), of Michigan, was second with 9 votes, while Leslie Biffle, secretary to the Senate majority, was third with 8 votes. votes.

Pecora, Landis, Mathews Seen On Market Job

Slated to Be Among Five Who'll Rule Exchange Under New Law.

(Associated Press.)

The Capital is pretty thoroughly convinced that three of the five men who will administer the stock exchange control bill will be James M. Landis and George E. Mathews, of the Trade Commission, and Ferdinand Pecora, counsel for the Senate Banking Committee.

Stock exchange officials and big business organizations have been deluging the White House with requests that two of the appointees be men versed in the ways of the market through long and actual experience with it.

The friends of the bill, at the same time, have been tugging the President in the other direction with the argument that an undivided commission would function best, and that precedent be given to men who favored enactment of the measure.

Landis was a prime influence in the drafting and subsequent revisions of the bill. He worked with the committees of Congress throughout their long consideration of the bill, and wrote the modifications of the 1933 securities act subsequently attached as a rider

Mathews has been in charge of the trade commission's administration of the securities act and has won acclaim from the elements that favored the enactment of the bill.

Pecora conducted the investigation of Wall street which led to the enactment of the present law. He has been anxious to return to his private law practice after nearly two years devoted to Government service.

The five commissioners are to be appointed for one, two, three, four and five-year terms, and it is believed that Pecora will accept the shortest of these.

Briton Cites World Spending for Arms

London, June 23 (AP).—In a speech at a Conservative meeting in North Worcester urging an adequate navy, Commander Bolton Eyres-Monsell, parliamentary secretary of the admiralty, today asserted that Britain is the only country which has decreased armaments expenditures in the past eight years.

During that period, the commander said, Italy has increased such expenditures 9½ per cent; the United States 10 per cent; Germany, 12; Japan, 80; France, 100; Russia, 197. England, he pointed out, showed a decrease of 16 per cent.

He declared, however, "It is about time we woke up in this country and that we look to our national and imperial defenses, because we can not go on pursuing an international dream of disarmament all alone."

Electric Woman Tests Fail to Prove Claims

Rome, June 23 (U.P.).—Anna Monaro, known as "the woman with the electric breasts," was dismissed from a neuro-psychiatric clinic today after a series of negative results in tests to observe the strange glow said to appear from time to time.

Scientists said the woman emitted no radiation from her breasts during 45 days of observation, despite the assertions of a number of physicians that the phenomenon had occurred while she was in a hospital at Pirano last spring.

Communism Hit By Junior Chamber

Maps Propaganda Fight and Adjourns.

Miami, Fla., June 23 (AP).—With a parting thrust at communism, the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce today ended its three-day National convention here.

E. R. West, head of the Los Angeles unit, was unanimously elected president of the National organization to succeed Leslie B. Farrington, of St. Paul. Columbus, Ohio, was chosen as the 1935 convention city to break a deadlock between Buffalo, N. Y., and Houston, Tex.

Reciting that the "avowed purpose" of the Communist party is to bring about "overthrow of the United States Government," the Junior Chamber mapped a program to fight propaganda with legislative and educational campaigns.

New Effects of Cosmic Ray On Atmosphere Discovered

Intensities Are Measured by Electroscopes on Ships.

Berkeley, Calif., June 23 (AP).—Measurement of the intensities of cosmic rays throughout the world through recordings made on electroscopes placed on ships was productive of new and fundamental knowledge of scientific interest, Dr. Robert A. Millikan, of the California Institute of Technology, reported to the American Association for the Advancement of Science here today.

Chief among these new conclusions, he said, was one that fully 90 per cent of the observable effects of the cosmic ray on atoms in the earth's atmosphere is not due primarily to the action of incoming particles, but to that of secondary particles—positive and negative electrons—liberated in the explosion of atoms struck by the incoming particles.

"We have found," said Dr. Millikan, "that the resistance supplied by the atmosphere of the earth is approximately 6,000,000,000 electron volts. That the ionization (wreckage or otherwise altering the structure of the atom and thus changing its behavior) of atoms in the earth's atmosphere is immediately due to positive and negative electrons and not to the heavier particles of atomic nuclei such as protons, that probably over 95 per cent of all ionization in atmosphere is immediately due to secondary electrons formed in the atmosphere by incoming photons (bits of light) and electrons."

The recent studies based on analysis of ship electroscopes also disclosed, Dr. Millikan stated, that the intensity of number of incoming cosmic particles in a given area has been found to vary longitudinally as well as in accordance with the distance from the equator.

Dr. Millikan said additional proof that the bulk of the ionization due to the cosmic ray is attributable to secondary electrons is to be found in the startosphere measurements. These revealed the rays are less penetrating as height is reached, he said.

Farley Makes Public Stamp Design Plans

Grand Canyon and Yosemite Issues to Be Ready During July.

Descriptions of the Yosemite 1-cent stamp and the Grand Canyon 2-cent stamp of the National Parks series soon to be issued by the Postoffice Department and also the Wisconsin 3-cent Tercentenary stamp have been announced by Postmaster General James A. Farley. Mr. Farley also announced the dates and places of first-day sales for these stamps.

The Yosemite National Park 1-cent stamp will be arranged vertically and is to be printed in green ink. It shows a scene in Yosemite Park, with the famous El Capitan Mountain at the right. In a solid panel across the bottom of the stam is the inscription "U. S. Postage," in white roman lettering. Resting on this base is a dark panel with curved top and ends, within which in a curved line, along the upper edge is the title "Yosemite," in white Gothic type. Below the title is the figure 1c in white Roman, flanked on either side by white line ornaments. The stamp is inclosed in a narrow double-line border.

Available July 16.

This Yosemite stamp will be placed on first-day sale in the Yosemite National Park Postoffice in California and also at the Philatelic Agency in Washington on July 16.

The 2-cent Grand Canyon National Park stamp is arranged horizontally and will be red in color. The central design on this stamp is a view of the Grand Canyon, depicting the temples of Deva, Brahma and Zorcaster, and also Bright Angel Canyon. On either side of the stamp are upright panels containing the words, "U. S. Postage," at the left and "Grand Canyon" at the right in white Gothic letters, arranged vertically within an ornamental frame work. In each lower corner is the denomination designation "2c" in white. The stamp is inclosed in a narrow double-line border.

First-day sales of this Grand Canyon stamp will be held in both the Grand Canyon postoffice in Arizona and also at the Philatelic Agency on July 24.

The one change in the National Parks stamps program, as announced by Postmaster General Farley, is the shifting of the Crater Lake National Park stamp from the 8-cent to the 6-cent denomination, and of the Zion National Park stamp from 6 to 8 cents.

Wisconsin Stamp Purple.

The 3-cent Wisconsin Tercentenary stamp, which is being issued in commemoration of the 300th anniversary of the arrival of the explorer Jean Nicolet on the shores of Green May, Wis., will be purple in color and will be arranged horizontally. Extending across the top of the stamp in a narrow panel is the inscription "1634—Wisconsin Tercentenary—1934" in white Roman lettering. The central subject is a reproduction of the painting depicting the arrival of the explorer on Wisconsin shores. At the base of the central subject is the title "Nicolet's landing on the shores of Green Bay" in solid Gothic lettering. Along the lower edge of the stamp are the words "United States Postage" in white Roman type. In each lower corner appear the figures "3 cents" in white.

The Wisconsin Tercentenary stamp will be first placed on sale at the Green Bay, Wis., postoffice on July 7 and it will be available at the Philatelic Agency on July 9.

Worm-Eating Mushroom Has Hunting Habit

Fungus Revealed as One of Civilization's Best Aids in Industry.

By Robert Shosteck.

It is news when a man bites a dog; so, too, it is news when a mushroom bites a worm. This reversal of "who bites what" is recorded in an interesting account of a threadlike fungus which extrudes a maze of threads which envelop and virtually engulf the luckless worm. Upon the death of the worm, the fungus slowly absorbs its nutritious juices.

It is only the unusual mushroom that hunts worms since most of our fungi find already decayed animal or vegetable matter a satisfactory diet. The fungi as a group include bacteria, mushrooms, smuts and molds, and constitute the great class of destroyers, reducing to simple chemical compounds the decadent or senile plant or animal body. The green plants on the other hand are the great class of builders, making food and foliage by means of tiny green bodies within the leaf which combine carbon dioxide gas with water and minerals, utilizing the sun's energy to accomplish this chemical reaction.

Mushrooms Best Known.

Mushrooms are the largest and best known of the fungi. Hundreds of species are native to this region, many of which are edible and quite a number known to be deadly poisonous. These are many very beautiful species, such as the coral fungus which resembles sea corals, the tongue of flame, the hedgehog hydnum, the morel and the wheel mushroom. While it may be safe for the experienced mushroom collector to gather wild edible kinds for the table, the amateur who does so flirts with death. It would be safer to place his hands in a rattlesnake den since two good antidotes are known for snake venom, while there is none for the poisonous amanita. Most deadly species may be recognized by the "death cup," a bag-like structure surrounding the stalk, and by the presence of white gills, the thin plates beneath the cap. The destroying angel fits this description.

In the matter of propagation, some of our fungi would put the salmon to shame. The common bracket fungus has been estimated to liberate 11,000,000,000 spores from a single bracket. That means that over a million spores go free every minute! Only one spore in 20,000,000,000 ever mature, scientists assure us.

Cultivated by Ants.

Mushrooms are domesticated not only by man, but also by ants and termites, which construct spacious mushroom cellars in which they cultivate small species of mushrooms for "home consumption." These gardens are carefully cultivated and watered by the insect farmers.

Different species of mushrooms and other fungi perform essential services for man. Yeast raises our bread and buns and ferments beer, while rocquefort cheese owes its flavor to a certain mold. Fungi make our buttermilk and cheese, tan our leather, cure our tobacco, ferment our sauerkraut and afflict us with "athlete's foot." Business men will be interested in the forgery-proof writing fluid obtainable from the inky coprinus mushroom, a slivery gray species whose cap reminds one of a partly open umbrella. People who enjoy both mushrooms and garlic may have both in the garlic mushroom, a variety easily found by the nose.

A mushroom's family relationships are often determined by the color of the microscopic spores which may be white, rose, ochre, purple, brown or black. The mushroom collector may make a beautiful circular "spore print" by removing the stem of a fresh specimen, and placing the cap on a piece of white paper, leaving it there undisturbed for two hours. On carefully removing the cap, a deposit of millions of spores will remain in the figure of a wheel, colored according to the family to which this specimen belonged.

Puffball Is Largest.

The giant puffball is probably the largest mushroom found in the United States. A single specimen, often 15 inches in diameter, will provide a meal for a large family. Prof. Buller calculated a large specimen to contain 7,000,000,000,000 spores; yet this species is rather scarce! While such fungi as the puffball are short-lived, certain of the bracket fungi live to the ripe old age of 10 years. Just visit the next oak tree bearing these brackets and count the number of concentric zones marked on it. Each zone, like the rings on the cross-section of a tree, represent one year's growth.

When Bill Farmer plans legumes one season in order to enrich the soil, he is employing the world's most efficient chemists A little fungus, known to scientists as pseudomonas, cause the formation of tubercles on the roots of legumes such as beans, peas and clover. Working day and night within these tubercles, these little fungi transform the nitrogen of the air into nitrate food which the plant can utilize. In exchange for this favor, the bean or pea plant gives shelter and food to the bacteria.

Poison Baited for Rats Menaces Neighbor Dogs

Rat poison, set for sleek rodents, is a menace to dogs in the vicinity of Webster, Allison and Buchanan streets northwest, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets, Postmaster W. M. Mooney said yesterday.

In warning dog owners of danger to their pets, Mr. Mooney pointed out that several rats and pigeons have been found poisoned within the past several days. The poison is intended for the rats, Mr. Mooney asserted, but dogs should be kept closely on leash and watched carefully.

Price Goes Up, But U. S. Has Enough Wheat

Short Crop After Drought Leaves Good Supply on Firm Market.

Despite drought which curtailed the Nation's wheat crop, Robert E. Sterling, editor of the Northwestern Miller, believes American granaries will be full this year.

By Robert E. Sterling

(Editor Northwestern Miller.)

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Kansas City, Mo., June 23.—We who live in the midst of the territory suffering from the unprecedented spring drought are likely to emphasize too much its effects upon food and feed conditions.

Talk of shortage in wheat supplies in this country or in the world is absurd. The world still has a burdensome surplus of wheat, and this country has much more than enough for its own needs.

As a matter of fact, when Northern hemisphere harvests are completed next August, the world will have a total stock of wheat within a few million bushels of last year's peak, far more than enough for current needs and ample to keep world prices from fully following the present American advance.

Prices Help Producers.

In the United States, the lowest estimates of combined spring and winter harvests suggest a crop of nearly 550,000,000 bushels. With the carryover added, this means a total supply of 800,000,000 bushels, against actual year's requirements for food, seed and waste of but 625,000,000 bushels.

Quite naturally, however, the virtual wiping out of the long troublesome surplus was bound to be reflected in the price level. Through our system of trading in wheat for future delivery, this advance has come at once, so that the growers will get the full benefit of it, instead of later in the year, when most of them would have marketed their grain.

Providence in a few weeks has done more to adjust production to needs than the Government has been able to accomplish in a year with a vast and complex machine and expenditure of about $125,000,000, collected through the processing tax on the people's bread.

Weather Still Supreme.

At the same time, public sentiment, working through the equation of supply and demand, has brought about an advance in the wheat price greater than the Government has been able to effect by use of a multitude of devices, including changing the weight and value of the dollar.

The present world situation in wheat simply demonstrates that all of the devices of international swapping and bartering of duties, quotas and allotments come to nothing in a contest with nature, sunshine and showers. These and these alone determine the world's crops of bread grains.

In this country, too, it is reemphasized that all of the things which the agricultural planning philosophers said were old fashioned and should be discarded, still are the determining factors. A month's drought has disposed of the surplus, a month's free play of supply and demand has restored prices.

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker

(Trade-mark Applied For).

Oregon passes in review today in the Federal Diary's Parade of the States. Tennessee will appear Tuesday; Rhode Island on Wednesday; New York on Friday and Virginia will conclude the parade next Sunday.

Toast to Oregon.

To know her is to love her charms;
Her scenic beauty which disarms
All who traverse this wonderland
Adorned by nature's lavish hand
When in her most endearing mood—
Columbia's Gorge, Cascades, Mount Hood—
The rich Palouse, the Siskiyous,
Multnomah Falls—go where you choose,
You'll find no place that can compare
In beauty here found everywhere.
Yet this is not her only claim
To leadership, or wealth and fame,
For this fair land is also known
Because of wheat and apples grown—
For lumber, salmon fisheries,
Herds, mills and shipping industries.
So, drink to Oregon a toast—
That rose of roses on the Coast!

SPANISH navigators in the seventeenth century were the first white men to see Oregon. The earliest authentic exploration of the coast was made by Capt. Juan Perez in 1774. Historians credit Capt. Bruno Heceta with the discovery of the Columbia River. The American Capt. Gray, who followed Heceta, named the stream after his ship, the Columbia.

BAKER.

The first whites to enter Oregon by land were, as usual, the English and French fur traders. But here, as elsewhere in their transient trading and hunting, they left no records of their explorations. The American expedition under Lewis and Clark reached Oregon and laid eyes on the Pacific on November 5, 1805. The expedition established winter quarters and a fort and spent the winter on the south bank of the Columbia River. They named the settlement of seven cabins and a stockade Fort Clatsop.

Lewis and Clark found the Northwest Indians good-natured and easy to get on with, but very sharp in trading. They were also addicted to petty pilfering, which made a constant vigil over supplies necessary. The Indians were exceptionally skilled in navigation; were expert canoe craftsmen.

Indian Woman a Guide.

No story on Oregon is complete without mention of Sacajawea, the faithful Indian woman, and her husband, Chaboneau. Sacajawea acted as guide, interpreter and good-will factor with the Lewis and Clark expedition. Handicapped by having to carry her papoose on her back, this Indian woman accompanied the Americans all through the three-year journey. Of all the States traversed and helped to open, Oregon is the only one which has expressed its gratitude to this faithful woman by erecting a statue in her honor. In one of the parks in Portland a monument stands to the faithful Sacajawea, who helped break the way to the Pacific.

Permanent settlement in Oregon was first made in 1834 by American Protestant missionaries to the Indians. Most famous of these missionaries was Marcus Whitman, who is regarded as the real opener of the Oregon Trail. He recrossed the mountains and plains in 1842-43 and returned with wagons. The final reward of the brave Whitman was to be murdered in 1847, together with his wife and 12 others, by the Cayuse Indians, who destroyed the mission.

Derivation of Name.

The name of Oregon is said to be derived from an Indian word, "Origan," "River of the West," which the Indians of the Mississippi headwaters used. John Carver, of Connecticut, published a book in 1778, in which he used the name "Origan," correct as it was spelled then. The syllable "gan" occurs in several Indian dialects in the sense of "water," as in Michigan.

Nicknames of this State are "Beaver" and "Webfoot," the latter pertaining to its rainy climate.

Oregon was made a Territory in 1848. With reduced limits it was admitted to the Union as a State in 1859, being the thirty-third in order of admission. It is the ninth in size and ranks thirty-fourth in population (953,786 in 1930).

THE name of the capital, Salem, was transplanted by the New England missionaries. The early history of Salem is romantic, with years of trade with China, the East Indies, Africa and South America. However, the modern Salem has a thriving coastwise trade in prosaic coal and ice.

"Alis volat propriis," ("She flies with her own wings") is the State motto. The State flower is the Oregon holly grape, a plant peculiar to the region.

For accurate information, courteously and promptly produced, on anything in connection with Oregon, we recommend Mrs. Helen Beelai (*), of Portland, who is employed in Senator Steiwer's office. Mrs. Beelai is a graduate of the University of Oregon.

Prominent Oregonians.

Among the prominent Oregonians in high Federal office is Charles Rogers Arundell, of Portland. Mr. Arundell was formerly in charge of public lands of Alaska in the General Land Office, Interior. He is now in his second term on the Board of Tax Appeals.

James T. Jardine, of Corvallis, formerly director of the Oregon Agricultural Experiment Station, is now a special agent with Forest Service, Agriculture. He has written numerous bulletins and reports on agricultural experiments.

Fred A. Rasch, of Portland, Rotarian, yachtsman and transportation expert, is now a technical adviser in Transportation Section, NRA. Mr. Rasch owns the sloop Viking, which won the Pacific Coast free-for-all event. His other hobbies are landscape painting and golf.

Always interested in fish and game conservation work, Carl D. Shoemaker, of Roseburg, former editor and publisher of a daily newspaper, is now secretary to the special Senate committee on conservation of wild life. Mr. Shoemaker is the former chairman of the Fish and Game Commission of Oregon.

Dr. Edward Dorris McAlister, of Eugene, prominent in American scientific circles is now with Division of Radiation and Organisms, Smithsonian Institution. Dr. McAlister has published numerous scientific articles and is a member of the American Physical Society and other honorary groups.

Artist and traveler, Miss Pherne B. Miller, of Eugene, is one of the most efficient and popular employes at Farm Credit Administration.

PORTLAND has a distinguished son here in the person of Calvin I. Kephart, an official in Bureau of Formal Valuation Cases, Interstate Commerce Commission. Three important titles are his. He is a major in the Q. M. Reserve, U. S. A.; holds a Ph.D. degree from American University and is an attorney. Dr. Kephart's other degrees are B. S. in engineering (with honors); LL.B., LL. M., D.C.L. and B.C.S.

KEPHART

In addition to Dr. Kephart's talents in engineering and law, he is a writer and poet, having had numerous pieces published in various papers and magazines. He married Miss Olga Ahlson von Zweigbergk, of Portland. They have four children.

Still a leader in the Oregon State Society is Miss Vella Alberta Winner (*), of Portland, one of its organizers. Miss Winner is director of publicity for the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the largest organization of its kind in the world.

IF your name is followed by (*), call in person on the Federal Diary editor the same day. You will receive tickets to Loew's Columbia (Warner Baxter in "Such Women Are Dangerous"), or to Loew's Palace (Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell in "Change of Heart"), or to Loew's Fox (stage, Joe Penner and other acts; screen, big list of stars in "Hollywood Party").

Diary office hours are: Daily, except Sundays, 12 noon to 1 p. m. and from 4:30 to 6 p. m.; Saturdays, 12 noon to 2:30 p. m.

Active State Society.

Although clear across the continent, there are many Oregon people in Washington. More than 400 of them are banded together in a thriving State society which takes a lead in the winter social season of the National Capital. Dr. Lewis R. Alderman is president of the society, recently succeeding Clyde B. Aitchison (). Other officers include Mrs. Carl Smith, first vice president; James T. Jardine, second vice president; Miss Vella A. Winner, secretary, and C. I. Kephart (), treasurer. Committee chairmen are Ben S. Fisher, membership and attendance; Fred A. Rasch, program and entertainment; Mrs. R. Bruce Horsfall (*), public relations; E. J. Adams, reception; Edward C. Kelly, alumni of Oregon colleges, and Senator Charles L. McNary, Oregon statues.

Miss Margaret Leona Stauff, of Marshfield, has a secretarial position in Procurement Division, Treasury. Miss Stauff is a leader in music circles on the Pacific Coast and has traveled alone in Europe, "off the beaten path, to see what it was like beyond the guide books." Edward C. Kelly, of Medford, is counsel at PWA. Significant of his high qualifications is the fact that he was graduated from high school when only 15 years old. He is a graduate of the University of Oregon.

Clearing House To Aid German Payment Urged

Speed of Debt Settlement Would Depend on Total of U. S. Purchases.

New York, June 23 (AP).—Establishment of a German-American clearing house for settling debts is being discussed here unofficially as a result of the Reich 6-month foreign debt payment moratorium.

The initiative would have to be taken by the U. S. Government, it is presumed here, but cooperation of American importers and German exporters would be necessary.

The public also would be obliged to cooperate to insure success of the clearing house, especially those elements which have pressed the Nazi boycott.

The recent moratorium was proclaimed, it was stated by Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, because Germany's export trade has dwindled and she has been forced to meet heavy reparation payments.

Accumulation of gold and foreign exchange to meet reparations and pay for imported goods is based on the amount of goods Germany can sell to foreign nations, the bank stated.

A German-American clearing house at a chief import point such as New York would collect dollars from Americans purchasing German exports, under the proposed arrangment, and the dollars would be applied by the Government against German obligations held here.

The German producer who sent the goods to America would be paid by the German government in Reichsmarks, the German government collecting its money in the form of canceled obligations owed the United States.

The rapidity and volume of payments by Germany on the U. S. debt would thus depend entirely on the amount of goods purchased by Americans from Germany.

15 Candidates For Governor In Four States

South Scheduled to Hear Heated Campaigns in Summer.

Columbia, S. C., June 23 (AP).—Fifteen candidates are shelling the hustings in four Southern States with only a quartet of gubernatorial offices to divide among them.

The majority, eight of them, are after the South Carolina job, with keen interest in the fight between the veteran firebrand, Cole L. Blease, and young Olin D. Johnston for the heavy textile mill vote upstate.

Economy in government, the old campaign standby, is as full of vigor as ever. Everybody, everywhere promises taxpayers that, if they will only elect this particular candidate, their worries of government expense soon will be over.

Actions and personnel of highway boards or commissions also are coming in for the usual lambasting by the outs and defense by the ins, with liquor, a dead issue in the South for many years, again raising its head in two States.

Old S. C. Custom.

The South Carolinians already have started their county-to-county campaign, an odd custom under which all candidates travel together and all speak at designated places on the same day. With eight out for governor and many minor State officials fighting for their posts, the speaking takes about all day.

Blease, former Governor and former Senator, who shocked the country when Huey Long was still in short pants by shouting "to hell with the Constitution," has dropped many of his bombastic ways and taken a cue from Al Smith with a "let's have a look at the record." He points with pride to his previous terms.

Johnston, Spartanburg lawyer, who was runner-up to Gov. Ibra C. Blackwood in the last contest, again is promising to fire the highway department from top to bottom and, a graduate of a textile mill college, is battling Blease where lies the greatest strength of both.

Four candidates, Lieut. Gov. James O. Sheppard, Tom B. Pearce, Wyndam Manning and H. Kemper Cooke, have thrown prohibition into the race by advocating legislation for sale of liquor, if the people desire.

Our candidates are Dr. L. B. Owens, former mayor of Columbia, and C. E. Sloan, of Greenville, the "mountain lion" of the Blue Ridge Foothills.

Interest in the Georgia race has centered in attacks of Judge Claude Pittman against Gov. Eugene Talmadge. The North Georgia jurist, who approves of practically nothing the Talmadge Administration has done, says the Governor, who threw out an unfavorable highway board at the point of bayonets of the State militia, has interfered with the highway situation by imposing his own will on the board; has issued too many pardons and failed to pay the teachers.

Governor Denounced.

He has particularly denounced the Governor for his opposition to certain policies of President Roosevelt, his criticism of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and his calling Washington a "mad house."

Pittman claims Ed A. Gilliam, Atlanta attorney and third man in the race, is a "stalking horse" for the Governor, while Gilliam, denying the charge, is calling for prohibition repeal and attacking the Governor on his record.

Talmadge has not started an active campaign, but was expected to base his plea for reelection on reduced utility rates, cheaper automobile tags, proposed divergence of highway funds and a promise to get the State out of debt in two years.

The only quiet spot on the Southern front is Arkansas, where neither Gov. J. Marion Futrell nor his opponent, former State Comptroller Howard Reed, has opened his campaign.

In Tennessee, where the Democratic McAlister-Pope contest is becoming something of a habit, Gov. Hill McAlister again is opposed by his old political enemy, Lewis S. Pope, Nashville lawyer.

They were rivals in 1928 when both were eliminated. Neither ran in 1930, but returned to the wars in 1932. Pope lost, took his case to the executive committee, lost again, and entered the general election as an independent only to lose the third time.

Both promise strict economy in government, both are drys and chiefly differ on the method of making constitutional changes.

Tennessee is one of the few States in the South where a Republican is taken seriously. The party has five candidates out for Governor, C. N. Frazier, of Camden; John E. McCall, of Memphis; William H. Clark, of Jonesboro; Waynes Maddox, of Huntington, and Howard B. Shofner, of Nashville. Some are expected to withdraw.

Tennessee gets the jump on the others by holding primaries of both parties on August 2. Arkansas votes August 14, and South Carolina August 28, while Georgia, which takes its campaign speeches and barbecue together, is in for a lot of eating before balloting on September 12.

Increase in Veteran Insanity Is Reported

Chicago, June 23 (AP).—What they described as a "rapid increase" in insanity among former service men concerned leaders of the American Legion's rehabilitation activities as they met today for a regional conference.

Watson Miller, of Washington, chairman of the rehabilitation committee, told the 200 men who attended that the number of former soldiers suffering from mental collapse far exceeded hospital facilities.

Woman, 107, Observes Birth.

Dover, N. J., June 23 (U.P.).—Mrs. Jane Talbot Thorne, who reads without glasses, still has most of her teeth and expects "to live a good many years more," celebrated her 107th birthday today.

Wales Bids Thirties Farewell; Anniversary Just Another Day

London, June 23 (AP).—Life of a new kind in the eyes of the public began at 40 today for the Prince of Wales.

Though it was not easy for the world to realize from his appearance, the cold figures of the calendar showed that the heir to the British throne is no longer a "boy prince charming" in his thirties.

On his fortieth birthday the world's most famous bachelor still seemed as far away from marriage as ever, and there was not even a rumor that he is engaged.

The gradual dying out of these engagement rumors gave strong support to a statement made four years ago by a close member of the prince's entourage to the effect that he is likely to be a bachelor king.

The prince spent the day quietly, putting in the morning at Fort Belvedere, his residence at Sunningdale, and lunching with King George and Queen Mary at Windsor Castle. Family birthday gifts accompanied the luncheon.

Greetings from heads of governments and other persons were received by the hundreds.

The prince gave no public indication that this birthday anniversary is any more than just another June 23.

He is still slim and lively and his restless energy is not diminished in any degree.

D. C. Merchants Are Welcomed By U. S. Fleet

Boosters Get Two Hours of Deep Sea Fishing Off Virginia Capes.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Aboard S. S. Southland, Hampton, Va., June 23.—Sleek greyhounds of Uncle Sam's scouting fleet and a squadron of Navy planes greeted the 125 members of the Washington Merchants and Manufacturers Association this morning as this steamer sailed into Hampton Roads on the twenty-third annual booster trip of the organization.

The battleships and cruisers are among those reviewed two weeks ago by President Roosevelt. They arrived at the Roads a few hours before the Washington party.

As the Southland sailed toward Old Point Comfort beach, flags on the mast of the scouting fleet's flagship, Indianapolis, under command of Vice Admiral Edward H. Campbell, ascended in a salute of welcome. After a short stay at Old Point Comfort, the Southland headed for the Virginia Capes, where the business men experienced real ocean sailing, with two hours of deep sea fishing.

Competition was keen in the fishing contest between George W. Offutt, chairman of the District Liquor Control Board, and William A. Van Duser, director of traffic, guests with the party.

Dusk took the party into Chesapeake Bay for a night of leisurely cruising, preparatory to arriving in Annapolis Sunday morning.

Time will be allowed in the Maryland capital for a tour of the Naval Academy and attendance at church.

The remainder of Sunday will be spent in further cruising in Chesapeake Bay and the return to Washington will be started Sunday night.

Due to a few delays, the merchants were unable to carry out their schedule as originally planned. One of these delays was caused by members of the party being late in returning from a visit to Norfolk.

The delay forced elimination of visits to the battleships. A visit to the Navy's new airplane carrier, the Ranger, also was canceled.

Vice Admiral Campbell, after giving his official welcome to the Washington merchants, was host on board the Indianapolis to Gov. Peery, of Virginia, members of his staff and official delegations from Newport News, Norfolk, Hampton, Portsmouth and Phoebus.

N. Y. Civil Service Hits Lehman Economy Plan

Rochester, N. Y., June 23 (U.P.).—A resolution condemning Gov. Herbert H. Lehman for his advocacy of the New York City economy bill was jammed through a session of the State Civil Service employes' convention late today by a group of delegates representing the metropolis.

The resolution, adopted unanimously, charged the Governor "coerced the State Legislature and compelled it to pass the Ripper bill, resulting in the discharge of 1,200 Civil Service employes and the reduction of the salaries of 12,000 others in New York City."

Sorority Reelects Head.

Benefits Boost Farm Income

AAA Payments Provide Prewar Prices for Commodities.

Benefit payments under AAA were responsible for one-fifth of the increase in purchasing power of the farmer in the first period of the agricultural experiment, according to an analysis revealed yesterday by L. H. Bean, economic adviser to AAA.

He said the farmers' purchasing power increased 28 per cent up to April as compared with the first four months of 1933, whereas for the country as a whole the increase was 22 per cent.

"The prices of the seven basic farm commodities averaged 51 per cent of the prewar level in March, 1933, and 76 per cent of the prewar level in May, 1934," Bean said. "However, when benefit payments are added, the average price on the domestically consumed portion for the cooperating producers in May, 1934, was 100 per cent of the prewar level, as compared with 66 per cent in May, 1933, and 51 per cent in March, 1933."

Ousted Board Members Back In Old Posts

Arlington County Votes $17,500 to Advance Road Work.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Greeted with huge baskets of flowers as tokens of appreciation of their friends, Col. Christopher B. Garnett and B. M. Smith resumed their seats as legal members of the county board at the adjourned meeting yesterday.

Garnett and Smith had been absent since May 29, when Chairman Lyman M. Kelley, acting on an opinion of Attorney General Abram Staples, ruled that they held their seats illegally. They returned with all the powers as board members following the opinion of the State Supreme Court.

Upon being greeted by county officials, members of the Bar Association and fellow board members, business of the board proceeded.

Upon motion of Garnett, the board unanimously authorized drawing of a warrant for $17,500, to be matched by like amount by the State, as its first share of $25,000 for purchase of the rights-of-way for development of the George Washington Memorial Parkway.

This action was taken at this time as money appropriated by the General Assembly must be used by July 1.

The total amount of money to be used in purchase of right of way is $100,000. Of this amount, the Federal Government pays $50,000 through the National Park and Planning Commission; the State of Virginia, $25,000, and the County of Arlington, $25,000.

The first unit of the parkway, which will extend from the Arlington Memorial Bridge to Great Falls along the Potomac, calls for construction from the Memorial Bridge to a point slightly beyond the Key Bridge in Rosslyn.

The appraised value of property in unit Nos. 1 and 2, which call for building to the Key Bridge, amounts to $81,604.72.

T. C. Settle, member of the Federal Commission, stated that he has assurance that during the summer 75 men from the CCC will be employed clearing the right of way.

He stated that of 20 projects now before the Public Works Administration this project is among the first three for consideration.

Another Garnett motion, which met unanimous approval, authorized the chairman of the board and clerk to sign the contract as soon as the Commonwealth's attorney is satisfied as to its legality.

Settle and Chairman Kelley will go to Richmond to present the signed contract to Gov. George Peery in order to receive the State's first $17,500.

Crashing through a guard rail along the Lee Highway at Leeway yesterday, a milk truck operated by Samuel C. Breckenridge for L. C. Carr, of Leesburg, sent more than 1,300 gallons of milk down the small stream.

Breckenridge, who stayed at the wheel as his truck rolled down the embankment, said a blowout caused the accident. He escaped with a slight cut on the right leg.

Woman Decrees Nude Girls In PWAP Art Stay Undraped

Southern Towns Turn Up Amusing Incidents for Art's Sake.

The issue whether two little girls, permanent residents in the Fine Arts Building of a Southern university, should remain unclad, as they are, or be given dresses, has been arbitrated by a woman staff member of Public Works of Art Project.

She ruled against the dresses.

The arbiter is Ann Craton, who was back in PWAP headquarters at the Treasury yesterday after a five weeks' inspection trip through Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia and South Carolina. Coordination of the functions of Federal relief agencies, which are now winding up the project, and regional art committees was the primary purpose of the tour.

Settling this particular outbreak of an ageless controversy—Are art nudes immodest?—was only incidental.

The little girls are part of a large mural, which aroused the cirticism of outraged faculty members and townspeople because they were au anturel. Serious consideration was being given to having the artist endow the cherubs with concealing frocks when Miss Craton arrived.

Argues With College Head.

She went directly to the university president and argued art's case. He said he was relieved to be assured they were all right by someone from Washington. So the girls will not be burdened with drapery.

Another humorous incident befell the coordinator when she reached a Mississippi gulf town, population 1,500. Seeking out the mayor, she found him in his feed store.

After listening to Miss Craton's self-introduction and explanation of her visit, the mayor gave his overalls a hitch, walked to the doorway and hollered across the street to several members of the town council loitering on the sidewalk:

"Hey, this ladys says we got muriels in our school."

The "muriels," which the city fathers had scarcely noticed before, are appraised by Miss Craton as being among the outstanding native art works in the South. They were painted by three brothers, residents of the little village.

Prophets without honor in their own bailiwick, the brothers were downcast when commencement arrived and no official notice was taken, no formal compliments were paid their masterpiece.

A Heretic, Too!

In a South Carolina village Miss Craton was approached by a women's group who told her in horrified pianissimo there was a heretic amongst them. A young woman, and on the PWAP payroll at that, who was telling her sister artists Michelangelo was only so-so.

"She asks the other artists to tell her what they think of Michelangelo," Miss Craton was told. "When they describe his genius, this awful woman delightedly shouts, 'Hooey! He was only a craftsman.'"

Miss Craton painted a dismal picture, keeping the figure, of art prospects in the South now that the Federal program of encouragement is practically over. Impoverished painters, now that Uncle Sam no longer is their patron and paymaster, are going back to barter in order to live. A painting for a sack of potatoes, a bust for the doctor's bill.

Clubs Promote Sales.

Clubs have been organized, under guidance of the regional art committees, to promote sale of their works. But the response so far has been very weak, says Miss Craton. Neither are the States and cities attempting seriously to follow the Federal Government's example in sponsoring and encouraging.

On the tour Miss Craton met all PWAP artists in the States visited, viewed all their works and contacted all relief administrators with the aim of having as many painters kept at work as possible on their small weekly dole.

Tomorrow she will leave for New York, where 800 artists were on the Federal pay roll when the project was in full sway. There she will make a report to Edward Bruce, director, and receive instructions on extension of the field tour. She is expected to continue westward to the Pacific Coast, coordinating art and relief activities as she did in the South.

Rites for Two In Family Held

Young Gun Victim and His Grandfather Are Buried Together.

Waynesboro, Pa., June 23 (Spl.). Double funeral services were held in the Reformed Mennonite Church here today for Jacob E. Miller, 82, and his grandson, Arvine Hixon, 20, of Massillon, Ohio, who was accidentally shot and killed by a companion Thursday.

Mr. Miller died at the home of his daughter at Roadside, near here, the same day his grandson was killed.

Hixon was shot by a gun in the possession of a friend, William Eckroate, 20, of Massillon.

According to relatives here, Eckroate was on his way to hunt groundhogs with a .22-caliber revolver when he met Hixon. Eckroate told police they sat down to talk and he laid the gun on his lap. Later the two youths started to get up. Eckrote asserted that the gun suddenly exploded, the bullet going through his right hand and hitting his friend in the forehead.

Battle-Scarred Fort Macon Being Restored to Early Glory

Fort Macon, N. C., June 23 (AP).—Battle-scarred Fort Macon, around which cannon often have roared, again will look upon the Atlantic with much of its pristine glory.

With brick walls 20 feet thick and a unique swastika design of ironwork, the century-old fortification, which one guarded Beaufort and vicinity from sea invasion, is being restored to mark another historic spot.

It required a dozen years to construct the present fort. The expenditure was $463,700. As a fort 100 years ago, it was considered a peak in military construction.

Now members of the Civilian Conservation Corps are busy repairing the interior brickwork, the masonry on the roof and the iron constructions. The three-arched brick stairways will be reproduced as authentically as possible.

Finlay Ferguson, jr., an architect, who spent two years on the colonial restoration project at Williamsburg, Va., is sparing no effort in trying to follow the plan of the original fort. A collection of photographs, taken from stereopticon views of the fort in 1866, have been found useful in the reproduction.

Historians record that forts have occupied sites here or nearby for more than two centuries. In 1712, a fort stood here to guard the section from Spanish raids. Construction of the present fortification began in 1824. It was seized by Confederates in 1861 and held one year, falling then to Gen. Park, of the Union forces.

Approximately 412 acres, including the fort site, now comprise a State park, granted North Carolina in 1924 by Congress.

Falls Church Split Ordered by Court

Citizens in Arlington County Urged Move.

Acting on petition of 91 of 123 qualified voters, Judge Walter T. McCarthy, of Arlington County Circuit Court, yesterday authorized that portion of Falls Church lying within the limits of Arlington County to withdraw from the town corporation and come under sole jurisdiction of the county. The portion of the town not affected by the order lies in Fairfax County.

Mayor L. P. Daniels, who opposed the petition, said an appeal will be taken to the State Supreme Court of Appeals.

Those seeking the transfer said the schools and the health department of the county are superior to those of the town and that the water system of Arlington County is betted suited to developments in that section than that of the town. Arlington County is installing a sewer system while a separate system for the town is said to be very uncertain.

Harrisonburg Boy Located in Ohio

Harrisonburg, Va., June 23 (Spl.). Charles Leonard Marshall, 16-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Marshall, who has been missing from here since May 26, was located last night at Green Spring, Ohio, according to a message received by Sheriff Charles R. Fawley from Ohio officers.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall left today to bring their son home.

Green Spring is the home of the parents of Cletus Runion, 27, who was working on the Marshall farm and who left about the time Charles Leonard disappeared. Runion sent a postcard to a friend from Green Spring and the information was given to Sheriff Fawley. After the sheriff's telegram to Ohio officers the boy was soon located. Marshall's parents can not explain the youth's departure. Officers learned that he caught a ride from Harrisonburg on a truck.

St. Mary's County Welfare Reports Cut in Relief Rolls

Leonardtown, Md., June 23 (Spl.). It is announced from the offices of the St. Mary's County Welfare Board that the work relief load has been cut from a peak of 97 persons the first week in May to 56 the second week in June.

This decrease is owing to the fact that the demand for farm labor has absorbed some of the employed, and also to the fact that fishing and crabbing, as well as the maturing of gardens, has brought in extra resources enabling families to provide for themselves.

The remaining men on the work relief will be taken off just as soon as employment opportunities are presented to them.

There still are many families receiving relief in the county. Most of these are cases of two types. Either they are too old or physically unable to work, or are without a bread winner and no children old enough to assume the burdens of supporting the family.

The county welfare board also is assisting many small farmers and tenants who have not yet sold their tobacco.

The staff of the county welfare board has been decreased by three persons, and other removals will be made whenever the decrease in demands indicates that this is advisable.

The board has made it one of its principal objectives to stimulate interest on the part of as many people as possible in the raising of truck gardens to meet food needs, not only for the summer but also during next fall and winter.

Up to now the office has been responsible for the planting of 200 gardens throughout the county. Every effort has been made to encourage families to plant a sufficient amount of vegetables, so they can can and store a surplus.

Schools' Head In N. Y. Joins Film Clean-up

Character of Youth Must Not Be Undermined, He Tells Will Hays.

New York, June 23 (U.P.).—The head of the largest school system in the world tonight backed up the growing protest by Catholic, Jewish and Protestant spokesmen against objectionable motion pictures.

In a letter carefully avoiding such words as "immoral," "salacious" and "indecent," Dr. Harold G. Campbell, superintendent of New York city schools, authorized Dr. John S. Roberts, associate superintendent in charge of visual instruction, to inform Will Hays that New York's school system "is determined that the character of its children shall not be undermined by inferior motion pictures."

The letter followed by a day a decision of the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America to urge upon Protestant consciences the boycotting of suggestive pictures, thus reinforcing the mandatory stand taken by Roman Catholic bishops at Cincinnati and the action of the Central Conference of Jewish Rabbis.

Dr. Campbell's mention of Hays, motion picture "czar," also followed a statement by the latter that action had been taken by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America "to amend its system of self-regulation."

"It Ain't No Sin" Due To Be Rechristened

Hollywood, June 23 (AP).—Paramount studios announced today they are considering a change in the title of Mae West's latest picture, "It Ain't No Sin," before it is released.

A decision on the question probably will be reached Monday in New York. If such a change is made, it was explained, the release of the film will be delayed several days.

The word "It" in the film title is "perhaps ambigious," the studio said. The studio said church agitation for "clean films" had nothing to do with the proposed title change.

Mt. Rainier Fee Report Asked After Audit

Payments to Judge, Five Policemen Since Oct. 2 Sought.

John Deuver, recently installed member of the Mount Rainier town council, has demanded on the floor of the council meeting an accounting of disbursements to the judge of the local police court and five of the town's policemen prior to October 2, 1933.

Deuver pointed out that the audit of town funds, just completed, credits $1,859.85 to their fees since that date, but says nothing of the amount paid these officials during the first half of the fiscal year.

The audit, however, does declare "the total amount of fines and forfeitures collected and deposited in the general town fund prior to the ordinance of October 2, 1933, was $1,818.70."

This, Deuver says, was the only surplus for this period and that no mention is made anywhere in the auditor's report of any total amounts received or amounts deducted for fees.

Ordinance Follows Writ.

Mount Rainier, the scene of recent bitter controversy over charges that the town is operating a "traffic light racket," passed the ordinance last October 2 after the American Automobile Association filed a writ of certiorari in the Prince Georges County Circuit Court.

The writ was filed to restrain the police court judge from accepting fees exclusively in cases of conviction and refusing them in cases of dismissal.

At the succeeding meeting of the town council the members were informed by Bird H. Dolby, counsel that, although Mount Rainier had originally had an ordinance providing that all police court fees be paid into a police court fund, from which peace officers were to be paid, the copy of the ordinance had been lost.

Another ordinance to this effect was then passed.

$3,068 In Receipts.

The auditor's statement, prepared and signed by John E. Parsell and J. Harrison Miller, show the grand total of receipts from fines, forfeitures, and costs received by the police court during the fiscal year amounted to $3,068.85.

According to a statement printed on tax bills during past years, these receipts for the fiscal year 1929-1930 amounted to only $347.75, and in 1930-1931 to only $152.25. The traffic lights were installed in 1931.

The salary of the chief of police, Eugene Plumer, is not affected by the fees as he is paid from the General Town Fund.

The town audit, according to a member of the town council, includes the following figures:

Receipts and disbursements for the Police Court Fund during the period October 2, 1933, to May 2, 1934:

Receipts:
Fines, Forfeitures and costs	$3,109.50
Disbursements:
Expenses and fees to Police justice and town officers	1,859.85
Surplus	1,249.65
Add overdeposit made December 6, 1933	.50
Amount deposited in General Town Fund	1,250.15
Total amount deposited prior to October 2, 1933	1,818.70
Grand total for fiscal year	$3,068.85

Park Project Closes Three Of 30 Missions

Colonies Planned for Ejected Shenandoah Families.

Charlottesville, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—The development of the Shenandoah National Park has wrought havoc with the mountain work of the Diocese of Virginia. There are 30 mission stations in the Archdeaconry of the Blue Ridge extending through six of the ten counties in which the Blue Ridge Mountains are situated. To date three missions in one county, Greene, have been affected by the park project.

The first to close was Upper Pocosan, located 12 miles from Stanardsville. The plant there consisted of a church, mission house and school house. All of the families in that section were forced out, as their land had been taken.

Personnel Changes.

The closing of this mission necessitated a change of personnel in adjoining mission fields. Miss Bessie Winegate was transferred from Upper Pocosan to the Middle River Mission, in the same county. Freeman Fisk was moved from Lydia to St. John's, and Miss Charlotte Edwards, from Middle River to Lydia.

The mission on Frazier, or Lost Mountain, will be closed shortly. Although the mission property is not within the boundary of the Shenandoah National Park, nearly every family on the mountain will be forced out, as their land has been taken. As soon as the people move, probably by November, the mission will be abandoned. Already Miss Clara Orwig has been moved from Frazier to Neve Hall.

The third mission affected is Simmons Gap, also in Greene county. In charge of this work are Misses A. P. Marchant and Ruth Cumneck, who will probably remain at their posts until the last family in that section leaves.

400 Families In Area.

According to the Rev. W. Roy Mason, of this city, associate archdeacon in the mountain work, there are in the whole park area 400 or more families. Of this total, probably 100 families will be ejected from their lands. Some have already moved into Albemarle county, just across the Greene line.

A plan is afoot to establish five colonies to take care of the ejected families, the funds to come from the Home Subsistence Loan. A house and ten acres will be given to each family. If the project is approved by Secretary Ickes, colonies will be established in Page, Rockingham, Madison, Greene and Albemarle counties.

Virginia June Tax Collections Gain

Miscellaneous taxes brought in $84,183.46 this year, as compared with $123,588.45 for last year. Processing taxes amounted to $191,630.59 and the tax on distilled spirits brought in $477.17. These taxes were nonexistent last year.

Corner Stone Of School Laid At Woodstock

Rites Are Conducted by Masons; Historical Records Preserved.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Woodstock, Va., June 23.—Newspaper accounts of present day happenings in the United States and historical records of the Shenandoah Valley with photographs portraying its natural beauty were preserved for posterity beneath the corner stone of the new $60,000 Woodstock High School building, which was laid at 6:30 p. m. today.

Cassia Lodge, No. 142, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, of Woodstock, was in charge of the ceremonies, with Maynard Hamman, worshipful master of the lodge, presiding.

Copies of several newspapers, carrying accounts of the plans for the high school building, were placed beneath the stone, with numerous other articles, including several United States coins and postage stamps; a history of Shenandoah county, prepared by C. V. Shoemaker, superintendent of county schools; a photograph portraying the development of the Woodstock Fire Department, emphasizing the new building and equipment secured during recent years; another photograph showing the seven horseshoes of the Shenandoah river, and a third photograph depicting the commercial apple orchards of the Shenandoah Valley in full blossom.

Woodstock has long been noted for its historical interest and today the Masons of the town placed beneath the corner stone a photograph of the old county courthouse, one of the oldest in the United States; a painting of the famous "Call to Arms," made by the Rev. Muhlenburg here during Revolutionary days, and views and books showing the natural wonders of the region, river scenes, views from nearby towers and caverns.

Also beneath the corner stone were placed the rosters of public officials, National, State, county and municipal.

A photograph carried the story of the breaking of ground for the new building. There was a short account of the cutting of the corner stone and its presentation to Cassia Lodge, while a final paper carried the roster of Cassia Lodge.

Tydings Denies He Wants to "Get" Ritchie

Rise of Bitter Feeling Is Seen as Killing All Compromise Hopes.

Baltimore, June 23 (Spl.).—Senator Millard E. Tydings, from his home in Havre de Grace, issued a statement today denying that he was "out to get" Gov. Ritchie, as was charged by the Governor.

"I am glad that Gov. Ritchie has confirmed the fact that several months ago I implored him to run for the United States Senate instead of a fifth term as Governor," said Senator Tydings.

"At that time," he continued, "I tendered the Governor my support for any candidate for office of Governor running on the ticket with him. This should put an end to the ridiculous yarn that I wanted to get control of the party from Gov. Ritchie.

Not "After" Him.

Furthermore, it makes ridiculous any story that I could have been 'after' a man whom I offered to support for the United States Senate, and whose candidate for Governor I likewise offered to support. I think these facts pretty well speak for themselves and need no further comment."

The clash between the State's two leading Democrats began yesterday when Mr. Tydings issued a statement revealing a confidential conference between himself and Gov. Ritchie last February.

Mr. Tydings said that at that time he told the Governor it would mean defeat for the Democratic party if he, Gov. Ritchie, sought a fifth term.

Gov. Ritchie last night replied to the first Tydings statement declaring it was his belief that the Senator made it clear he was not after control of the State, but was after Gov. Ritchie himself.

Ritchie's Statement.

He said: "It is true that there was an interview between Senator Tydings and myself last February, which I understood from him at the time was to be so very confidential that he requested me not to reveal it. However, as Senator Tydings has now referred to the interview himself, I feel free to say this much about it:

"While the Senator insisted he was not after political control, he made it equally clear that he was after me, but he was willing to support a good candidate selected by me, provided it was not myself, and he added that in making such a selection Mayor Jackson need not be considered.

"I saw no reason why the next Democratic candidate for Governor should be selected by me, subject to the veto of Senator Tydings. This would have given Senator Tydings the viritual naming of any candidate, and I think the candidates should be selected by the Democratic voters at a Democratic primary as the Maryland law provides.

"Naturally I have not agreed with Senator Tydings on his proposal."

With such feeling between the Tydings and Ritchie camps, and with equal feeling between these camps and those of Mayor Howard W. Jackson and Dr. Charles L. Conley, Democratic leaders today saw no hope of a party compromise ticket.

Radcliffe Is Attacked By Worcester Paper

Pocomoke City, Md., June 23 (Spl.).—George L. Radcliffe, Democratic candidate for Governor of Maryland, was condemned to the realms of a political outcast in an editorial appearing yesterday in the Worcester Democrat, local weekly newspaper.

Published in the heart of "Radcliffe country," the paper, which has always been indentified as a supporter of Gov. Ritchie, made it plain that it would continue to support the Governor.

In speaking of what it termed the "Tydings-Radcliffe Rebellion," the editorial declared that if Ritchie were nominated in the September primaries, "all the Ritchieites will show themselves good sports and loyal Democrats, while the Radcliffe supporters will prove renegades from their party and throw the State into the Republican ranks."

"A tyro in the political game should see that the struggle on hand is only a gigantic effort of Tydings to swing the Ritchie leadership into his own camp," the editorial continued.

"This move of his should fool no one into believing that he has only the good of the party at heart. If he is so imbued with the spirit of party welfare, why shouldn't he do some of the sacrificing himself?

"Mr. Tydings is claiming that Mr. Radcliffe is most acceptable to Mr. Roosevelt. We do not want the interference of high Federal authority to influence our elections."

Worcester County, as well as Somerset County, on the west, and Wicomico County, on the north, have indorsed the Radcliffe movement.

Virginia PWA Waits Approval Of More Work

About 70 Projects to Cost $12,000,000 Need Final Action.

Richmond, June 23 (Spl.).—With only six Virginia PWA projects on the original approved list yet to be started State PWA offices here are expecting approval momentarily from Washington of more projects, made possible through the recent congressional appropriation of about $350,000,000 to non-Federal projects in the Nation.

Col. James A. Anderson, State PWA engineer, said Virginia has about 70 projects awaiting final action calling for about $12.,000,000 in construction work.

Quite a few of the projects are for county, town and city school buildings, for which only grants from PWA are requested, the loans having already been obtained from the State literary fund.

State PWA officials believe that about $7,500,000 will be all that is necessary to complete the Virginia projects found to be economically, socially and technically sound.

Col. Anderson has said that under the present program, the PWA in Virginia should reach its peak in employment in late August or early September. He estimates that about 8,000 men then will be employed directly.

Pocomoke Forest Area Increased 453 Acres

Pocomoke City, Md., June 23 (Spl.).—The State of Maryland has just acquired a title to a 453 acre tract of land in Worcester County as an addition to the Pocomoke State Forest.

This addition brings the area of the Pocomoke forest to 1,193 acres, according to a statement in the May issue of the "News Letter," a Maryland State Department of Forestry publication.

Virginia Cities Welcome 42 Ships of Fleet

Peery and Town Officials on Hand; Daily Hours Set for Visitors.

Norfolk, Va., June 23 (AP).—After an absence of more than two years, the scouting force came back to Virginia waters today and received the glad hand from State and city officials.

Led by Gov. Peery, who officially extended the State's greetings to the 1,400 officers and the men of the 42 ships of the scouting force and carrier force of the navy, officials of communities flanking Hampton Roads said "howdy" to the Middies.

While the other fighting craft lay at anchor, gray and grimly motionless in the placid waters of Hampton Roads, Gov. Peery and his staff climbed aboard the cruiser Indianapolis, flagship of the scouting force, at her berth at the Norfolk navy yard, and told Vice Admiral Edward H. Campbell that he brought a welcome from all the people of the State.

The ceremony was short but impressive.

Marines Salute Governor.

Eight side boys stood at attention, a full guard of marines saluted and the ship's staff of officers in dress whites faced the State's chief executive. Nineteen guns boomed a salute.

Later, the official party went to the admiral's cabin, where representatives of Norfolk, Newport News, Portsmouth, Hampton, Phoebus and Suffolk welcomed the visitors. Mayor R. W. West, of Newport News, in presenting a key to the city, said it was also "a key to the hearts of all Tidewater cities."

Mayor W. R. L. Taylor, of Norfolk, said he was presenting no key "because no man needs a key when he is coming home. When the Navy comes to Norfolk it comes home."

Peery Gets Three-Gun Salute.

As the Governor left the ship he received a third of three 19 gun salutes. Guns spoke when he entered the gate of the Navy Yard to be greeted by Admiral Smith, they sounded again when he boarded the Indianapolis and they spoke a farewell when he moved down the gangplank.

With the Governor on the trip from Richmond were Brig. Gen. S. G. Waller, Adjutant General of Virginia; Col. John W. Williams, Commander Dave E. Satterfield and J. Sinclair Brown, speaker of the House of Delegates. The party was joined at Norfolk by Commander W. H. Cardwell.

At Pine Beach the Governor's party was met by Norfolk and State motorcycle policemen who led the way to the Monticello Hotel, where the chief executive was entertained at a buffet luncheon. Later he motored to the navy yard.

Norfolk Well Represented.

Norfolk was represented by A. B. Schwarzkoff, Mayor W. R. L. Taylor, City Manager Thomas P. Thompson, Frank W. Evans, chairman of the Association of Commerce Naval Affairs Committee; I. Walke Truxton, collector of customs; Col. Charles B. Borland, director of Public Safety and Fairfield H. Hodges, secretary of the Naval Affairs committee.

Portsmouth was represented by Mayor Alden Oast; Hampton, by Mayor J. V. Bickford and Councilman H. W. Saunders; Phoebus, by Percy Carmel and John Mittlemaier, and Suffolk, by Mayor Otis Smith and B. O. Hill.

Twenty-four of the 42 ships in Hampton Roads were destroyers. There were nine cruisers, three airplane carriers, five auxiliary ships and one tender.

Officers said that visitors would be taken by boat from Old Point and the Norfolk Naval base for inspection trips between 1 and 5 p. m. daily.

The flying Navy led the fleet into Hampton Roads. At the Virginia Capes planes were launched from the decks of the carriers Saratoga, Lexington and Langley and by early afternoon, more than 250 planes had been assembled at the Navy base.

Early next month the cruisers and destroyers will scatter to South Atlantic ports, reassembling July 8 in Hampton Roads preparatory to steaming away for the summer base at Provincetown, Mass.

Jews Honor Noted Liberal

Gather in Hagerstown Today for Tribute at Grave of Thomas Kennedy, Who Restored Religious Freedom in Maryland.

Hagerstown, Md., June 23 (Spl.). Hundreds of members of the Jewish race within a radius of 100 miles will journey to Hagerstown tomorrow on a pilgrimage to the grave of Thomas Kennedy, Washington County patriot, who conducted a memorable fight for religious and civil liberty more than a century ago.

A military and civil parade will precede the exercises at Rose Hill Cemetery, where Kennedy's body rests.

The parade will be led by Mrs. James Findlay, of Hagerstown, granddaughter of Kennedy, the man who was responsible for restoration of civil and religious liberties to Jews and Catholics in the State. His 20 years' struggle in the Maryland Legislature for the removal of all restrictions was a noteworthy battle.

Kennedy, when he began his fight, was a delegate to the House of Delegates from Washington County. Later he was elected State Senator and still later was named postmaster of Hagerstown by President Andrew Jackson. He died in 1832.

In 1918 the Jewish people of Maryland erected a shaft over his grave here and staged impressive exercises.

Addresses at the grave will be made by Representative William J. Randolph, of West Virginia; Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, Col. George Henderson, Cumberland; United States Senator Millard E. Tydings, Attorney General William P. Lane, jr., and Leo Weinberg, of Frederick. State Senator Milton Altfeld, Baltimore, will preside. The Independent Order of B'rith Sholom, Baltimore, will place a wreath on the Kennedy grave.

Angle Wolfinger on charges of possessing articles used in the manufacture of liquor. Agents testified to finding a still and barrels of mash at the Smith home.

Melvin Jones, Chestnut Grove, also was held for a hearing before Wolfinger on the same charge. Jones' place was raided earlier in the week.

James Forbes Rites Are Held In Virginia

Long-Time Resident of Fredericksburg Is Buried.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Funeral services for James Fitzgerald Forbes, who died Thursday after a long period of ill health, were held yesterday with the Rev. Dudley Boogher, rector of St. George's Episcopal Church, in charge.

Mr. Forbes, practically a lifelong resident of this section, was a member of a family long prominently identified with this part of Virginia. He was the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Frank Forbes. His father was postmaster here during one of Cleveland's administrations.

For a number of years Mr. Forbes was an aduitor for the Norfolk & Western Railroad, in Roanoke, and he was later located with a Southern railway in Atlanta, Ga. Returning to Fredericksburg, he was appointed general manager of the local branch of the Klotz Throwing Co., operators of the Fredericksburg Silk Mill. He retired from active business when that concern disposed of its interests in Fredericksburg to another company.

The deceased was never married, but is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Nellie Owen, of this city and Savannah, Ga., and Miss Sallie Forbes, of this city.

Funeral services for Mrs. Martha Anne Carhart, 89, wife of D. E. Carhart, of Spotsylvania County, were held here yesterday, following her death in Staunton Thursday.

Hagerstown Cuts Rolls of Jobless

Hagerstown, Md., June 23 (Spl.). Unemployed on the reemployment bureau rolls have been reduced during the last month, Brewer L. Stouffe, in charge of the Hagerstown bureau, reported.

There is a shortage in some types of skilled labor, Stouffer reported, due to calls from out-of-town concerns. These include skilled airplane mechanics, glass tube construction workers and blue print experts.

Start of an extensive building program here this week likewise has taken scores of carpenters, bricklayers and other skilled construction workers off the lists. Stouffer predicted a shortage of skilled labor by midsummer, with $500,000 in construction work scheduled.

Historic Fete Progressing At Frederick

3-Day Pageant to Open Thursday; Parade Is Planned.

Between 500 and 600 persons will take part in the pageant, which will depict twelve episodes in the history of the city and county, from the laying out of the city by Patrick Dulaney, building the first house by John Thomas Schley in 1745 and the formation of the county in 1748, to the present period. A feature will be a contribution of the "Iron Horse" production, including early types of steam engines and passenger coaches first used in passenger traffic on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, built in 1831.

The episodes will depict and deal with the coming of the first German settlers from Pennsylvania to Frederick, the meeting of Gen. Washington, Gen. Braddock, Gen. Sharpe, Benjamin Franklin and other notables in this city; local incidents in the lives of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star-Spangled Banner;" Thomas Johnson, first Governor of Maryland; Winfield Scott Schley, hero of the Battle of Santiago Bay, Spanish-American War; Roger Brooke Taney, former United States Supreme Court Justice and author of celebrated Dred Scott decision; Barbara Frietchie, Whittier's war heroine; the 12 Judges of Frederick County who first repudiated the English Stamp Act; Bishop Thomas Claggett, the first Bishop of Maryland; Mother Seton, founder of the Sisters of Charity in the United States, and other illustrious natives of the county.

Beer Retailing By Distributor Is Restricted

Decision Bans Sales From Truck Except in Filling Orders.

By James S. Eiseman.

Westminster, Md., June 23.—A decision today of Chief Judge Francis Neal Parke, of the Carroll County Circuit Court, will affect State-wide sales practices of distributors of alcoholic beverages, it is believed.

Judge Parke upheld Police Magistrate George E. Benson in finding G. R. Lewis, of Frederick, truck driver for George B. Kehne, distributor, guilty of selling beer in Carroll County, without first obtaining a license. Lewis appealed after Judge Benson had fined him $10 and costs.

Lewis was arrested for selling beer direct from his truck to a merchant near Mount Airy. According to Judge Parke's decision, a distributor may only fill orders placed with him prior to delivery, and prohibits the sale of beer direct from trucks operated by the distributor.

Judge Parke's decision conflicts with a recent opinion obtained from the office of William Preston Lane, attorney general.

Judge Parke commented that "the license permits the licensee to import and keep for sale at the place or places therein designated and to sell from a central office or location, which shall be designated in the license, alcoholic beverages to any retail license holder in this State and deliver the same from the place designated to such license holder or to a common or private carrier for such delivery."

Judge Parke's conclusion was that deliveries may be made from the truck because the law contemplated that deliveries may be made in any manner through public carriers or private carriers, whether trucks or otherwise, but such deliveries must be of sales previously made at the place of business where the wholesaler's business is carried on.

Cunningham Is Beaten by Bonthron

Princeton Lad Nips His Rival in Last 150 to Win by 6 Yards.

Four World Marks Set as Stanford Takes N. C. A. A. Meet.

MEMORIAL COLISEUM, Los Angeles, June 23 (AP).—The race was not to the swift, but to the strong today, as Stanford University won the thirteenth annual National collegiate track and field meet marked by the triumph of Bill Bonthron, of Princeton, over Glen Cunningham, of Kansas, in a 4:08.9 mile.

The Indians scored an amazing total of 63 points to 54 7-20 for the University of Southern California, in the place position, and 47 for Louisiana State University.

Stanford picked up 28 points in the weight events, 16 in the discus and 12 in the shot-put. The winners won only one first place, the discus, by Gordon (Slinger) Dunn, but John Lyman was second in the shot-put and third in the discus and the Indians picked up 35 other points here and there, seconds in the pole vault and javelin adding vital counters.

Has One First Also.

Southern California, too, had to be content with one first place, on Al Olson's big broad jump, while Louisiana State, the defending champion, although it could do no better than show, grabbed off four firsts, the sensational Glenn Hardin winning two, the 220-yard hurdles in record time and the 440-yard dash in faster time than it has been run in the 12 previous N. C. A. A. meets.

The other two firsts by the Louisianans were scored by Jack Torrance in the shot-put with a performance better than any recorded world mark, but not so good as a previous effort of his waiting to be recognized, and by George Fisher, who won the 120-yard high hurdles, to give the Tigers the best performance of the day in first places.

Wins by 6 Yards.

Bonthron's defeat of Cunningham in the mile was one of the most sensational episodes of the day. The Princeton lad nipped the Kansan in the last 150 yards and won going away, at least 6 yards separating the pair at the finish. Bonthron reversed a decision of a week ago at Old Nassau when Cunningham set a new world's record of 4 minutes 6.7. Bonthron's time of 4 minutes 8.9 seconds, was better than Cunningham's N. C. A. A. record of 4:09.8 last year, and better than the recognized world record.

Cunningham, after the grueling mile, had nothing left for the half, some 40 minutes later, and did not finish among the first six. Charlie Hornbostel, of Indiana, won the 880 handily, with James Miller, of the University of California at Los Angeles, former high hurdler, getting the place.

The Hoosier took a tip from Bonthron in the mile and suddenly shot ahead of the famous jayhawker on the last turn. Glenn did not have enough stamina left to make it a battle from that point on.

Records Are Broken.

Listed records went by the board all afternoon as almost perfect weather conditions enabled the athletes to put forth their best efforts. Four world's records were smashed and five N. C. A. A. marks were bettered and one tied.

Application for only one world's record will be made as a result of the meet since the other performances were not up to applications already on file.

Oddly enough the record for which world recognition will be asked only tied a previous N. C. A. A. record for which no application had been made. Glenn Hardin ran the 220-yard low hurdles in 22.7. This equaled a performance by Jack Keeller, of Ohio State, in 1932, but bettered the mark of 23 seconds set by Charles R. Brookins, of Iowa, in 1924.

The fleet Hardin ran the 440-yard

Londos-Browning $100,000 Gate Seen

New York, June 23 (U.P.).—Jacques Curley, the veteran wrestling promoter, who has been known to worry in his bland way about getting people to buy tickets to his shows, is having a new sort of worry in connection with Monday's heavyweight championship match between the Jims—Browning and Londos.

Curley has been besieged with requests for locations in the early pews and he's fresh out of such. The gate, Curley believes, is certain to pass the $100,000 mark which would beat the all-time record by some $10,000. Gotch and Hackenschmidt drew $90,000 worth of customers in 1911, but $60,000 is the best since that time.

Wood Downs Shields for Net Title

Win Boosts Cup Hopes; Lott Urges Stoefen Be Substituted.

LONDON, June 23 (AP).—With victories on conservative days over America's first and third ranking players in the championships of London at the Queen's Club, Sidney B. Wood, jr., today appeared to have established himself as the chief American hope to win back the Davis Cup this year.

The stylish stroking New Yorker, Wimbledon champion in 1931, gave one of the best exhibitions of his life as he overpowered Frank X. Shields, No. 1 player, of the United States, and his cup teammate, 11—9, 6—0, in the final. Yesterday he defeated Lester Stoefen, third ranking American, 2—6, 18—16, 6—4.

WOOD.

British experts were unanimous in acclaiming him, and Fred Perry, leader of the English team, which will defend the cup against the interzone winner, said of Wood:

"That's the man we must beat to keep the cup."

Continues Fine Record.

By his victory Wood continued a fine American record in the Queen's tournament. Vincent Richards, big Bill Tilden and Wilmer Allison preceded him as champion, while twice before Americans were finalists without playing off for the title, Tilden and Frank Hunter in 1929 and Stoefen and Ellsworth Vines last year.

America lost in three other divisions of play today. Dorothy Andrus, of Stamford, Conn., was defeated by Jacqueline Goldschmidt, of France, 5—7, 6—3, 6—0 for the women's singles title and with Mme. Jung Henrotin, of France, lost the women's doubles final to Collete Rosambert, of France, and Mrs. P. D. Howard, of England, 6—2, 3—6, 8—6.

Wood and the Davis cup captain, Richard Norris (Dick) Williams, were defeated in the semifinals of men's doubles by C. E. Maleroy, of New Zealand, and K. C. Ganbar-Dower, of India, 3—6, 6—4, 10—8.

Meet Collins, Wilde.

The victors meet Ian G. Collins and F. H. Wilde, of new English Davis Cup pair who defeated Stoefen and George M. Lott, jr., America's Davis Cup combination yesterday, for the title.

The Stoefen-Lott defeat had repercussions today when Lott asked Capt. Williams to send out an "S O S" for John Van Ryn or William Allison to come over and play doubles with him.

Lott is convinced that he and Stoefen, despite the fact they are United States indoor and outdoor doubles champions, are not the best combination.

Williams declined to commit himself.

"I still have an open mind on the make-up of the team" he said, "and there is a month before we must meet the European zone winner for the right to challenge England."

New York A. C. Wins Meet; 4 Records Fall

New York, June 23 (AP).—In a meet that established four new district records—one of them the fastest American 5,000 meters since the 1932 Olympics—the New York Athletic Club again won the Senior Metropolitan A. A. U. championships at its own Travers Island field today with an overwhelming total of 100½ points with three events to be decided tomorrow.

Joe McCluskey, former Fordham star now wearing the winged foot insignia, authored the one outstanding record revision of the day when he distanced his teammate, John Follows, by 30 yards to win the 5,000 meters in 14:54.8, 26 seconds faster than the mark Follows made in the same meet last year.

Tommy Tailer Regains New York Golf Crown

New Rochelle, N. Y., June 24 (AP).—Tommy Tailer, representing the Piping Rock Club, today regained the Metropolitan Amateur golf title he held two years ago when he defeated the defending champion, Mark Stuart, of Fox Hills, 5 and 4, in the final match at the Wykagyl Club course.

Peacock Takes Crown; Beats Caldwell

Is One Over for 33 Holes, Leading All Way in Maryland Final.

By Dave Herman.
(Post Staff Correspondent.)

ROLLING ROAD GOLF COURSE, Catonsville, Md., June 23.—Roger Peacock, Indian Spring's 23-year-old golfing ace, shot 33 holes in only 1 over par here today to defeat Ernie Caldwell, of Hillendale, 4 and 3, and retain possession of the prized Maryland State Amateur Championship.

The curly-haired Washingtonian conquered Baltimore's most formidable player to win the title for the second consecutive time. He triumphed by dint of superior work with his irons and putter that enabled him to assume an early lead over Caldwell, cling to it tenaciously and beat off his rival's challenge on the stretch.

PEACOCK.

Peacock has the distinction of being the only District golfer to capture the Maryland crown. He is the second player to win it twice, Charlie McCourt, Baltimore public parks star, having turned the trick some seven years ago.

Shoots 3 Birdies.

After scoring a 72, 2 over par, in his morning 18-hole round, Peacock burned up this tricky course in the afternoon, pounding old man par into defeat for the remaining 15 holes, with the aid of 3 sparkling birdies.

Peacock ended the battle in a whirl of scoring power that left Caldwell virtually helpless. Two up and five to go, the Indian Spring star rammed home a 15-foot putt for a birdie 3 on the fourteenth and climaxed the match on the 167-yard fifteenth by holing another 15-footer for a birdie deuce.

Shooting the kind of golf that characterized his play in the 1933 Maryland event at Indian Spring, Peacock went into the lead on the third hole, which he won with a par 3 to Caldwell's 4. He became 2 up at the fifth when Caldwell was short with his second and 2-putted for a 5. Roger captured the sixth with a 5, 1 over par, as Caldwell was guilty of 3 putts. Both halved the 478-yard seventh in birdie 4's and the Baltimorean jammed a 10-footer smack into the cup on the ninth for a birdie 3 to cut down Peacock's lead to 2 up. Peacock found a trap on his drive and wound up with a 5.

Gets Deuce on Tenth.

Caldwell plunked a 10-footer into the hole on the short tenth for a deuce to beat Roger's 3, but Peacock turned on the heat on the next two holes.

Peacock lost the thirteenth by overshooting the green with his second, won the sixteenth when Caldwell was ditched on his second, and lost the seventeenth to

Springsteel Is Victor; Equals Track Record

Rockingham Park, Salem, N. H., June 23 (AP).—Running a front race all the way, S. W. Labrot's 5-year-old Springsteel today equaled the track record to capture the Granite State Handicap, $10,000 added inaugural feature of the New Hampshire Breeders Association, from a dozen other speedy rivals.

This roan gelding crossed the line a length and a half in front of Willis Sharpe Kilmer's Dark Winter, and Tick On, favored in the betting with Mr. Khayyam, took third with four lengths to spare.

Hildebrand Pounded Out by Four-Run Attack in First Inning.

NEW YORK, June 23 (AP).—One short, sharp burst of hitting in the first inning gave the Yankees a 6-to-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians today in the fifth and deciding game of their series.

The Yanks lashed out against Oral Hildebrand in that first frame, drove him to the showers before a man had been retired and scored four runs. The rest of the way they just breezed along behind the effective pitching of young Johnny Murphy.

HILDEBRAND.

Earl Combs, the first man to face Hildebrand, socked a triple over Earl Averill's head. Jack Saltzgaver sent a roller down the third-base line and beat it out for a hit while Combs scored. Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig drew passes, filling the bases, and Myril Hoag singled into left, bringing in two more runs.

That was enough for Hildebrand and Thornton Lee replaced him. Lee let a run score when he threw wild past third trying to head Gehrig off on Bill Dickey's sacrifice, but he settled down after that misplay and pitched well. He gave only five hits over the eight inning route.

The Yanks scored again in the

Carnera Sees Movies Of Title Bout—In Tears

NEW YORK, June 23 (U.P.)—They set up a movie projector in Columbus Hospital today and Primo Carnera, propped up in his cot, learned how he looked when he lost his world's heavyweight championship to Maxie Baer last week.

The experience was scarcely less happy than the one of actually losing the title, and Carnera's eyes were filled with tears when the lights were turned on after the showing.

Soon after the first round of the movies was on the screen Carnera startled the friends and nurses in his room:

"Look! There goes my foot!" he exclaimed. "I could have put him away if it was not for that foot.

"Look at Baer grin, the big Smart Alec!"

As the eleventh (and last) round was being shown, Carnera gave his version of his now famous conversation with Referee Arthur Donovan.

"I didn't say 'I quit,'" Carnera said. "I ask Donovan to make Baer quit sticking his thumb in my eye and I ask him to make Baer close his hands."

"Look at me go down," Carnera continued. "Baer does not knock me down. I fall. I fall again. Look at Baer grin, the big smart Alec. He called me names."

The lights on again, Carnera pointed ruefully to his foot. "That big hunk of baloney cost me the fight, not Baer, the big smart Alec."

Carnera was asked what names Baer called him. Carnera nodded toward the nurses.

"The mother superior is present," Primo said. "I can not tell you now."

He was asked if he did not think it was "nice" for Baer to have called on him yesterday. "Oh, yes, very, very nice—the big smart Alec."

Ed Thorp Is Dead; Noted Grid Leader

Port Chester, N. Y., June 23 (AP).—Ed Thorp, noted football authority, died today at the United Hospital. He collapsed in the locker room of the Winged Foot Country Club, Mamaroneck, on Saturday, June 9.

Thorp had come to the club with friends, and as he was preparing to go to the first tee slipped to the floor. He was taken to the United Hospital, where he had been under the constant care of physicians.

Death was caused by a cerebral hemorrhage.

Mrs. Thorp was at his bedside when he died.

Thorp was the brother of Tom Thorp, former Columbia football star. He had long been regarded as one of the outstanding football referees in the East.

Pitcher Kline Joins Nats Today

Acquisition From A's by Waivers Causes Uniform Trouble.

By Frank H. Young.

PITCHER BOB KLINE'S acquisition by the Nats, from the Athletics via the waiver route, was good news to Manager Joe Cronin and the Nats, but it caused a load of grief to Assistant Trainer Frankie Baxter. Kline reports to the Nats this morning, and yesterday Baxter was instructed to have a uniform ready for him.

"What to do? What to do?" moaned Baxter, running his hands through his thinning hair, for Kline is the Primo Carnera of baseball, as regards size. A search of the Nats' locker room failed to find a uniform anywhere near Kline's size and Baxter suggested they cut him a uniform from the infield covering.

President Clark Griffith vetoed this idea, but came up with one of his own. "Try Spalding's," he said, "maybe they have a white uniform of some kind that he can climb into until we get some made for him." And so Sixth Assistant Secretary Calvin Griffith, jr., phoned Spalding's.

Gets Weaver's Old Suit.

"Yeh," said Manager Cy McDonald, "I think we can fix him. We've got a new suit we made up for Big Jim Weaver just before the Washington Club canned him back in 1929. If the moths haven't eaten it up, I think Kline can get into it." So the newest Nat will be bedecked in livery of half a decade ago when he makes his debut here today.

Although Kline comes here on waivers, President Griffith had to pay more than the waiver price for him. Under baseball rules, if only one club claims a player, the team wanting to get rid of him may dicker with the claiming club. So Connie Mack, being a good friend of Griffith's, held him up for more than the regular $7,500 waiver price, probably for $10,000. With the A's, Kline participated in 20 games, winning six and losing two.

Manager Joe Cronin plans to use Kline strictly as a relief pitcher. "He'll come in mighty handy helping out Jack Russell," he said yesterday. "No, I haven't decided who I will ship away to make room for Kline on roster. I don't have to decide until Kline reports so will

Haas, 18, Upsets Perry, 10 and 8, to Take Title

New Orleans, June 23 (AP).—In one of the most amazing upsets of the Dixie season, Fred Haas, jr., slender 18-year-old New Orleans boy, today smothered the veteran Sam Perry, of Birmingham, 10 and 8, to win the Southern amateur golf championship.

The Louisiana State University freshman applied the pressure early in the match. Shooting the first nine holes in one over par, the youngster had Perry 4 down. Fred's only error came on the seventh hole where he missed the green with his approach. However, this was not costly, as his 5 was good enough to win. Haas went 5 up on the eleventh, then starting with the fourteenth won four straight holes.

Allison Defeats Bell For Delaware Title

Wilmington, Del., June 23 (AP).—Wilmer Allison, Austin, Tex., second ranking National tennis player, defeated Berkeley Bell, New York, defending champion, 7—5, 10—8, 6—2 today to win the Delaware State men's singles tennis championship.

Mrs. John Van Ryn, wife of the former Davis Cup player, of Philadelphia, won the women's singles championship, defeating Mrs. Marion Jessup, of Wilmington, 6—1, 3—6, 6—2.

(Sports Editor, The Post).

THEIR pitching horribly mangled by the Tigers in the first game yesterday, the Nats came back for more in the second game and were mangled some more. If that second game had been a prize fight, they'd-a stopped it in the first inning when the Tigers mauled Monte Weaver for six runs.

Boiled down to cold figures, the Nats lost the first game, 9-6, in ten innings, and the second, 8 to 6, in the regulation nine, but matters were getting so bad in that second game that what was left of the 18,000 in the stands gave voice to a ripe, red razzberry in the eighth inning when Johnny Stone lifted a homer over the right-field wall.

Kuhel Breaks Ankle.

The Tigers literally added insult to injury in the late afternoon. After Joe Kuhel, the first injured Nat, had been dragged off the field in the eighth inning of the first game with a broken ankle suffered in a second-base slide, and after Fred Schulte crashed into the center-field fence head first in the tenth inning with a thud that was heard on Capitol Hill, Fred Marberry, an employe discharged by the Nats two years ago, came back to taunt them with an eight-hit performance in the second game. Marberry had a two-hit game in his possession for seven innings.

KUHEL.

The Nats were in a sorry plight in that first game after they made a last ditch rally in the ninth to tie the score and send the game into extra innings, which was tantamount to defeat according to past performances this season which has seen them play 13 extra inning affairs and win only two.

Crowder Pounded Hard.

Joe Cronin entrusted that first game to the keeping of Al Crowder in the tenth and the Tigers laid Crowder flatter than a steam-roller pancake, slamming out five hits after two were out to place the game beyond recall.

Between games, the Nats were greeted with the cheerless news that Kuhel was taken to Georgetown Hospital, would be on crutches for at least a week, and unable to play for perhaps a month.

The first inning of that second game started out like a continuation of the Tigers' tenth inning of the first game. Six straight hits they smacked off the hapless pitches of Monte Weaver, who survived the inning only by the grace and patience of Manager Joe Cronin.

Gerald Walker started it all with a single to left. Then Goose Goslin

Bonsoir, Odds-On Favorite, Wins Charles Town Feature Race Before 6,000 Crowd

Gelding Wins In Feature Contest

Palumbo Rides Choice to Wire Ahead of Sun Alley.

Doc Conner, Schley B. Take Daily Double Which Pays $10.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., June 23.—Bonsoir, a half-brother of Gallant Fox, gave away from 5 to 17 pounds to his rivals here today and ran off with the Alleghany Handicap, the 6½-furlong feature race. The son of Sir Gallahad III and Bonnie Etolle scampered across the finish line 4½ lengths in front of Sun Alley and Golden Vein. The three others in the field were strung out along the stretch.

The eight-race program drew a crowd of some 6,000, and they stayed to play more than $50,000 in the mutuels. A large portion of those present held tickets on Bonsoir, the gelding being backed down to a $2.80 mutuel, the shortest price on a winner during the meeting.

Bonsoir Wins Handily.

As the race was run, Bonsoir was entitled to every nickel bet on him. Sam Palumbo had the mount and he lost no time in hustling his charge to the top. From that point to the finish, Bonsoir was rated along and passed the judges with something in reserve. Sun Alley was closest to the leader throughout the running, but had his hands full winning the place money from the fast-closing Golden Vein.

C. G. Overcash, owner of Bonsoir, won his second purse of the day when Henry Edwards rode Chaterfol to victory in the fifth race. The son of Chatterton proved the longest mutuel of the day at $19.20. His was another front-running effort. Fusco, the favorite, was bumped by Ann V. L. on the backstretch and knocked to last place.

Daily Double Pays $10.90.

A pair of public choices teamed to produce a $10.90 mutuel in the daily double. There was Doc Conner, which scored an easy victory in the first, and Schley B., which barely got up to nose out Nay Nay in the third.

Arras, Bokie B. Bright Bird and the Gen also accounted for purses. Aella lost a nose decision in the second when Palumbo loafed in the closing stages of the race and Arras came through on the rail to win.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DOC CONNER, $5.60, $3.20, $2.20; GLISK, $5.00, $2.60; TALOMOND, $2.40.

DOC CONNER, away well, had good speed to take command at once, was rated in front for the entire distance, saved ground throughout, and was in hand at the finish. GLISK, a forward factor from the start, could not match the speed of the winner, but closed well. TALOMOND, slow to find her best speed, moved up quickly on the final turn and closed stoutly. CAPTOR, always well up, was used up trying to catch DOC CONNER and tired. BUSY IKE, fractious at the post and breaking from the outside, was never a serious threat

SECOND RACE—Five furlongs. Purse, $250; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:11. Off at 3:16. Winner, Mrs. H. Deture's ch. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARRAS, $7.40, $3.40, $2.40; AELLA, $2.80, $2.40; UNFAIR, $4.80.

ARRAS, taken back from the early pace, secured racing room on the inside in the stretch and, closing very fast, was up in the final strides. AELLA had good speed to take command, drew out into an apparently safe lead in the stretch, but Palumbo appeared overconfident and did not get the best out of his charge until too late. UNFAIR, a forward factor from the start, closed well. MAZYNIATA raced evenly, but could not better her position. WAR GENERAL dwelt at the break.

THIRD RACE—Six and a half furlongs. Purse, $250; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:42. Off at 3:44. Winner, J. P. Bowman's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SCHLEY B., $3.80, $2.80, $2.60; NAY NAY, $2.80, $3.20; BABY CHINK, $8.30.

SCHLEY B., reserved from the early pace, moved up quickly between horses on the far turn, wore NAY NAY down in the stretch, while bearing in slightly, and was up in the final stride. NAY NAY had good speed to set the pace, was well rated in front and, saving ground, just failed to last. BABY CHINK, rated off the pace and racing on the outside, closed well. FLYING START, slow to find his best speed, made up ground at the end. WILD BLONDE had early speed, but stopped. MISS PATCHES could never get up. WHIRRY stopped.

FOURTH RACE—Six and a half furlongs. Purse, $300. Alleghany Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:08½. Off at 4:13½. Winner, C. G. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BONSOIR, $2.80, $2.60, $2.40; SUN ALLEY, $3.60, $3.20; GOLDEN VEIN, $3.60.

BONSOIR had good early speed to take the lead in the run for the first turn, was rated in front for the balance of the race, and drew out easily in the stretch to win with speed in reserve. SUN ALLEY, unable to match the speed of the winner, saved ground throughout and held on well. GOLDEN VEIN, slow to settle into his best stride, moved up quickly when called on and closed well. BARCELONA PETE, a trailer in the early part, closed a good gap. SCOTTY DON had a flash of speed.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $250; claiming. The Bramell. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good for all but Voco from gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:39. Off at 4:41. Winner, G. C. Overcash's ch. g. (4), by Chatterton—Pola Negri. Trained by E. Brinning. Value to winner, $200; second, $35; third, $15. Time, 0:24 2-5, 0:49, 1:14 4-5, 1:41 3-5, 1:49.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHATTERFOL, $19.20, $9.40, $5.40; ANNA V. L., $10.40, $5.80; VOCO, $6.20.

CHATTERFOL, away quickly and having good speed, was sent to the front at once, was rated on the rail for the entire trip and had speed in reserve. ANNA V. L. had good speed from the start, crossed over sharply on FUSCO on the front stretch, was rated off the pace of the leaders and closed stoutly. VOCO, unruly at the post, broke in the air, gradually moved up on the final bend and closed with good speed. FUSCO was racing forwardly on the rail when bumped by ANNA V. L. and forced back to last position. He moved up gradually thereafter and closed stoutly.

SIXTH RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $250; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start poor from gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:07. Off at 5:11. Winner, G. A. Reier's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BRIGHT BIRD, $5.00, $3.20, $2.60; GRAND ROX, $4.00, $3.00; BURLEIGH, $4.80.

BRIGHT BIRD had good speed to take command at once, was rated in front throughout, saved ground on all turns, and had speed in reserve at the finish. GRAND ROX, rated off the early pace, closed stoutly. BURLEIGH had good speed, made a bold challenge to reach BRIGHT BIRD on the far turn, but was tiring at the end. MUSKODAY, away poorly, closed a huge gap.

SEVENTH RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $250; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:37. Off at 5:38. Winner, James Arthur's b. m. BOKIE B. went to the front going into the first turn, drew out easily on the back stretch, and was never menaced to win easily. BLESS HER HEART gradually improved her position and closed stoutly, but was no match for the winner. ROZELL, slow to find her speed, closed with a rush in the last quarter.

EIGHTH RACE—One and-sixteenth miles. Purse, $250; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 6:04. Off at 6:06½. Winner, Mrs. G. F. HELEN'S ALIBI had good speed to set the pace, saved ground throughout, but could not withstand the challenge of the winner. ROYAL LASSIE, reserved in the early stages, closed with good courage. McDONALD H., sluggish in the early part, raced in spots. DO TELL could never get up.

10,000 Cheer Rose Cross' Victory

Growler Finishes Second, Singing Wood Third in 46th Dwyer.

AQUEDUCT RACETRACK, June 23 (AP). — Rose Cross, sturdy black son of St. Germans—Red, Red Rose, owned by Mrs. Charles S. Payson and Mrs. Thomas V. Laughlin, ran the most impressive race of his career when he won the forty-sixth running of the Dwyer Stakes in little more than a gallop before more than 10,000 cheering fans here today. Favorite at 11 to 10, the colt led H. W. Maxwell's Growler across the finish line by a half a dozen lengths. Mrs. J. H. Whitney's Singing Wood, 8 to 5 second choice, was a tired third, another two lengths behind. Cleves and Carry Over, coupled with Growler as the trainer Fitzsimmons entry, were fourth and fifth, respectively.

Rose Cross, in picking up $4,090 for his efforts ran the mile and a half distance in 2:32 over a track that had dried out to fast condition following overnight rain. Crusader holds the track record of 229 3-5.

Coucci Rides Winner.

Silvio Coucci was brought back from Detroit especially to pilot Rose Cross and the little Bronx Express had a simple task, as it turned out, his mount running as if much the best. Singing Wood, under 121 pounds, was conceding each of his rivals 5 pounds. An added touch of rivalry helped stimulate interest in the race, Mrs. J. H. Whitney being the sister-in-law of Mrs. Payson, who is the former Jean Whitney.

A good start saw Carry Over going to the front to set the early pace. Singing Wood and Rose Cross followed, while Growler was not as far back as is his custom. At the far turn Singing Wood was sent into a clear lead by Bobby Jones, but Coucci also began his move with Rose Cross and the latter rapidly gained ground around the bend. After turning for home, Rose Cross quickly demonstrated his superiority by sailing past the Withers winner and opening up a wide advantage. He just galloped the rest of the way, with nothing to fear. Growler had no trouble picking up the faltering Singing Wood in the last furlong.

Pimlico Stake Race Purses Increased

Overnight Events Money Also Is Boosted for Fall Meeting.

BALTIMORE, June 23 (AP).—Increased purses for both stake races and overnight events at Pimlico track during the fall meet were announced today by M. L. Daiger, secretary of the Maryland Jockey Club.

In the Riggs Handicap and the Walden Handicap, feature races of the meeting, the purses were raised from $5,000 to $7,500 added each. In the two secondary features, the Baltimore and the Pimlico Handicaps, the purses remain at $2,500 added.

Graduated Purses.

A system of graduated purses is to be installed in place of the straight $800 purse in the overnight races.

In two races each day, the purse will be $600. In three others, the purse will remain at $800. In one flat race and in the Steeplechase event, the purse is to be $1,000. On days when there is no stake offered, a $1,500 purse will be offered as a feature attraction.

The total of purses for the 13-day meet, which starts October 31 and ends November 14, is $106,300.

July 4 Marathon Entries Accepted

Ten-Mile Event Will Be Part of Celebration.

The annual 10-mile marathon, for the championship of the District, held under A. A. U. auspices, again will be part of the Fourth of July celebration this year, Richard S. Tennyson, assistant supervisor of municipal playgrounds, has announced.

The race is under the joint sponsorship of the Takoma Park Citizens Association and the Public Playground Department. Starting at the railroad bridge on the Mount Vernon highway, and winding through the streets of Washington, it will terminate at the Takoma (D. C.) Playground.

Bill Agee, of the Stonewall Democratic Club, of Baltimore, and winner of the event since 1929, again is favorite of the field.

John C. Post, chairman of the race, is being assisted by a large committee. Entries are being accepted at room 313, in the District Building.

Three Outstanding Fight Cards Scheduled in Capital's Busiest Boxing Week

Von Reedon Faces Al Gillette

Pair Feature Hunt Club Program Tomorrow; Seaman on Card.

Joe Knight in Main Bout of Legion's Initial Fistic Venture.

BARRING intervention by Jupiter Pluvius, the mills of the local fistic gods will grind often and exceedingly fine this week, with three shows scheduled.

The Riding and Hunt Club will start the week right tomorrow with a 32-round card headed by Charley Von Reedon and Al Gillette, Wednesday night the American Legion will dedicate its new arena at Fifth and Florida avenue, northeast, with a "natural" between Joe Knight and Henry Firpo and Friday Joe Turner injects an outstanding bit of class into the situation with a bout between Al Foreman and Pete Sarron.

Von Reedon, the transplanted Floridian who now dedicates his time to punching a typewriter for Uncle Sam and punching noses for local promoters, is facing one of the best club fighters in the ring in the person of Al Gillette, the New York powerhouse. Gillette has fought three times for Johnny Attell at the Ridgewood Grove Arena in Brooklyn, twice against Frankie Covelli, who holds a decisive win over Von Reedon. Gillette won one and lost one to Covelli, which gives some indication of what Von Reedon may expect.

Seaman in Semifinal.

The Riding and Hunt Club semifinal between Al Rigonne and Sammy Seaman, a couple of bustling bantamweights, may annex top honors from the Von Reedon-Gillette embroglio. Rigonne dropped a disputed decision to Billy Landers two weeks ago in a bristling six-rounder and Seaman, the Pacific Coast champion, made a creditable showing against Flyweight Champion Midget Wolgast in the final Portner's show.

Matchmaker Charlie Swan seems to have captured an outstanding natural in the Joe Knight-Henry Firpo bout which is to head the American Legion's opening card Wednesday. Knight, a southpaw, is famed for the deadly wallop he packs in his portside mitten, while Firpo is a terrific right-hand puncher. Knight reached within pushing distance of the top last winter in a championship bout with light heavyweight title holder Maxie Rosenbloom. Slapsie Maxie emerged with a decision, but the referee who officiated at the contest was roundly criticized and drew an indefinite suspension as a result of the furor that greeted the award.

Tough on Southpaws.

Firpo is bad news to southpaws. He has twice beaten Georgie Nichols, former N. B. A. champion, who is a left-hander.

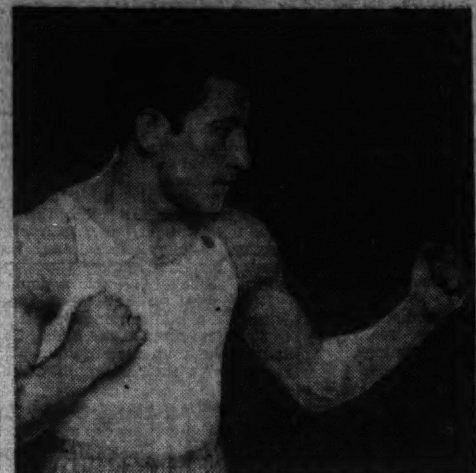
Joe Turner deserts the heavyweights for his class card at Griffith Stadium Friday, headed by Al Foreman, twice winner of the Canadian lightweight championship, lightweight champion of the British Empire, holder of the Lord Lonsdale belt and a ranking boxer in the featherweight, junior lightweight and lightweight divisions. Foreman's opponent is Pete Sarron, the Birmingham beak bruiser, who has become established as the best drawing card in and about Washington.

Well Known Here.

Foreman is well known to Washington fight fans of 1925-1926, who recall his technical knockout win over Andy Bowen and his quick disposal of Goldie Ahearn, then one of the leading featherweight contenders. He is a knockout artist with sufficient ring lore and generalship to enable him to maneuver with the best. One of his greatest claims to fame lies in his "whippet punch," a short, straight, right-hand delivered from the chest in a peculiarly puzzling manner.

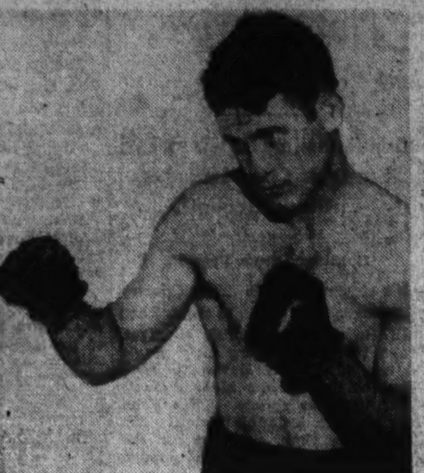
Sarron has met and defeated most of the best the Portner's promoters were able to import for him, while the Alexandria abattoir was headquarters for local box-fighting. He twice held former N. B. A. Champion Tommy Paul to draws and dropped a very close decision to Freddy Miller, present N. B. A. featherweight title holder.

Trio of Headliners on Capital's Fistic Menu for Week



Al Foreman, former fistic pride of the Capital, who returns to local ring wars next Friday at Griffith Stadium, where he meets Petey Sarron. Foreman is the British lightweight champion.

Al Gillette, New York featherweight, who has been cast for the main bout at the Riding and Hunt Club tomorrow night against Von Reedon.



Joe Knight, the Nation's second-ranking light heavyweight, who will battle Henry Firpo, of Louisville, at the new American Legion Arena's opening show on Wednesday.

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

THE burning desire on the part of fight fanatics to see masses of protoplasm yclept "pugilist" rendered inert by knockout punches being what it is, it behooves the local promoters to take carefully into their consideration the Messrs. Tony Galento and Harry Serody, a couple of soporific swingers in the heavyweight and lightweight divisions, respectively.

Not that old dyed-in-the-wool Phineas F. Phightphan won't forsake his armchair any night in the week to see two waltz kings play pitty-pat with overstuffed mittens—no, sir. But the casual attender at programs of pugilism must be lured out by visions of seeing human hulks laid end to end on the canvas with gratifying thuds. Otherwise, the casual attender will remain comfortably ensconced in an easy chair, flanked by mint juleps and a low wave-length radio.

Tony Galento, he of the beer-barrel belly and 120-proof wallop, apparently is destined to best gratify the sadistic desires of the fight fans here. Never before in the history of local lambasting has a figure so appealing to the average fight fanatic popped into the ring. His murderous punching is only half of it.

Like Max Baer, of the Max Baer of publicity, he appeals to the spirit of adventure within the breast of Phineas F. Phightphan. A fighter who trains faithfully, follows all the storybook rules and never steps off the straight and narrow lane—presumably the only course for a successful fisticuffer—is all right, in the opinion of your average fight fan—if he has the wallop. If he hasn't, he's a sissy. But a fighter who tosses all the storybook rules out of the window, does just as he darn pleases and still has the old wallop—there, my friends, is indeed a man!

Such a one is Galento. Training rules mean no more to him than split infinitives to a boxing writer. At least 15 of those 220 pounds he lugs in the ring with him for every contest are excess baggage. For the most important bouts he is liable to consider a hair cut, shave and manicure, interspersed with frequent libations of beer all the training needed. And then, more likely than not, he will drag his 220 pounds through the ropes and knock into every known variety of tail spin some aspiring young heavyweight of the Horatio Alger type, who has deviated not one whit from the written rules for becoming a successful fisticuffer.

Street-corner fighting, always against almost insurmountable odds, is his favorite occupation. He wound up his training for the shellacking he gave Marty Gallagher, who had trained long and loud, by drinking ten bottles of beer!

Small wonder that he appeals to Phineas F. Phightphan, who is, at heart, just that kind of a reckless adventurer.

Between Rounds: The Boxing Commission won't sanction mixed bouts . . . otherwise we might have seen Pete Sarron and Kid Chocolate in action for the featherweight title at Griff Stadium . . . Goldie Ahearn should lower the ring lights at his Riding and Hunt Club . . . and increase their power . . . Joe Turner should not allow so much resin to be sprinkled on the canvas at Griffith Stadium . . . it blows off into the eyes of those who have paid fancy prices for ringside seats . . .

Answers.

J. T., jr.: Properly trained, Galento would stand a very good chance of flattening Primo Carnera if he also were instructed in avoiding Da Preem's enervating clinches. Whatta battle that would make—the man who walks like a mountain vs. the man who walks like a beer barrel!

R. O. B.: Sorry, I can not see Reds Barry as a fighter. Under the rules of the District Boxing Commission, he can not win a fight. The rules say a boxer shall not slap—and that's all Barry ever has done. But it must be admitted that he can befuddle many a better fighter with his unorthodox style.

H. R., Chicago: Primo Carnera gave no indications of having an injured ankle in his fight with Max Baer. We have only the diagnosis of his own personal physician as to the extent of his injuries. Personally, I believe the injuries, if as serious as painted, were received in the tenth or eleventh round—not the second, as claimed.

Peacock Takes Golf Title in Maryland

Defeats Caldwell in Final, Shooting 33 Holes in One Over Par.

Caldwell's par 3 after meandering into a trap on his tee shot.

Two up at the end of the morning round, Peacock saved himself a half with Caldwell on the nineteenth with a fine second shot out of a ditch. On the twentieth hole, Peacock fired his second from an awkward stance on the side of a hill, his ball struck the trees and dropped into a ditch, costing him a 5, Caldwell winning with a 4. Roger became 2 up by taking the twenty-first with a par 3, and his putt from 3 feet for a birdie on the twenty-second rimmed the cup and danced out. Roger made a great second from atop a bunker on the twenty-third for a half in 4, took the twenty-fourth with a par 4, when Caldwell's second landed in a bunker, and his try for an eagle on the 478-yard seventh hit the back of the cup and wiggled out. Roger halved the hole in birdie 4's as Caldwell ran down a 12-footer after being trapped on his second.

Halves Hole in Par 3.

Rounding the twenty-seventh, Peacock was 3 up. The Washington boy was laid a stymie by Caldwell on the short twenty-eighth—a peculiar stymie considering it was Caldwell's drive—but chipped over his rival's ball and halved the hole in par 3. Some one stepped on Peacock's tee shot as it lay in the rough on the twenty-ninth and Roger's iron second to the green was weakly played. He finally blew a 2-footer to take a 6 and lose to Caldwell's 5. They halved the next two holes and Peacock smoked out his opponent with birdies on the fourteenth and fifteenth.

Peacock missed few greens during the day, and was in only three traps in the morning and none in the afternoon. Caldwell scored a 73 for the morning round and was two over the afternoon.

The play-off for the medal between Hickman Green, of Argyle Country Club, Washington, and Caldwell, who tied with 150 on Wednesday, will take place tomorrow at 2 p. m.

Millers Carry National City League Title Hopes in Game With Printers Today

Close Games Foreseen in Section B

Independent Co-Leaders Face Hard Task; Store Title at Stake.

Benning Meets Unbeaten Mt. Rainiers in Prince Georges League.

THE pennant hopes and aspirations of the pace-setting teams in the several Sunday leagues of The Washington Post Sandlot Baseball Association will again be subjected to the fire and onslaughts of the numerous strong contending nines in the weekly tests of survivorship today on ball fields throughout Maryland, Virginia and the District.

National City.

The spotlight in the National City League will be focused on the Miller Furniture-Union Printer battle on the East Ellipse. The hopes of the Miller team for first-round honors in Section B hinge on the outcome of this game, unless Griffith Blue Coals and Dor-A, tied for leadership with the Furniture nine, suffer upsets at the hands of Rinaldi Coalmen and Warwicks. Joe Porter or Harry Milburn will pitch for the Millers.

St. Joseph's has already clinched Section A laurels for the initial round of play, but this fact has detracted little interest in its battle with the strong Pig 'n' Whistle Club on the South Ellipse. A great rivalry has sprung up between these teams during the past decade, and plenty of action is promised any time they play each other.

D. C. Independent.

Ross Jewelers and Capital Heights, coleaders in the District Independent League, encounter formidable obstacles in the Kenilworth and Grace A. C. These young teams have been playing at a fast pace during the past three weeks. They have been getting good pitching and have been hitting the ball hard. Whether they can continue at this gait against Spencer Usilton and Austin Pohl, the league's best pitchers, remains to be seen. Postal A. C. engages Mount Rainier Grays in another outstanding attraction.

Department Store.

Paul Messink's Hecht Store team, which all but had the first-half title firmly in its grasp, has its last opportunity to gain in Department Store League this morning against Palais Royal on the South Ellipse. Kann's, in the meantime, will be playing Lansburgh's on the adjacent Ellipse, and in the event of a loss for Hecht's and a victory for Kann's these two teams and Palais Royal will be tied for first place. Messink or Johnny Wolf for Hecht's and Bob Wallach for Palais Royal are the probable mound rivals.

Prince Georges.

First place in the Prince Georges County League is also at stake as Benning A. C. stacks up against the undefeated Mount Rainier A. C. on the latter's field. The success of Benning's challenge rests on the shoulders of young Joe Sullivan, former Eastern High star, whose sterling pitching has kept his team in the running.

Colmar Manor faces Stadium A. C. on the Benning field at 3 o'clock in another title-bearing game. This is the feature of a double-header with Sigma Alpha Kappa facing the Anacostia Eagles at 1 o'clock. An interesting hurling duel looms between Witt, Manor's ace, and Hienie Newman, star of the Stadiums.

Northern Virginia.

Mayor Harry P. Davis, ardent baseball enthusiast, will toss out the first ball as the Manassas Team makes its debut in league competition against Clarendon Business Mens Association. Manassas will present a strong line-up, which includes Ike Driefuss and Jack Kidwell, former St. Mary Celtic players.

In the revised schedule, Ballston meets White Haven, and Fort Myer makes its initial appearance against Herndon Market in the other Section B attractions. Park Lane travels to Middleburg; Fairfax journeys to Falls Church and McLean plays host to the Arlington A. C. in the Section A contests.

Montgomery County

Evelyn Lynch, former star of the widely heralded Bloomer Girls Team, has been added to the roster of the Cabin John Team in an effort to bolster the team's pennant chances. Miss Lynch is a player of exceptional ability and is expected to play first base for Cabin John against Wheaton on the former's diamond.

With the return of Windsor, fast-ball pitcher, Wheaton is quite confident of upsetting Cabin John, as is White Haven in its battle against the league-leading North Washington. A close hurling duel between Harry Best, of Bethesda, and Meiklejohn is anticipated this afternoon, when these clubs meet at Bethesda in the other league game.

Cards' 5-Run Rally Beats Dodgers, 5-4

St. Louis, June 3 (AP).—The Cardinals rallied in the sixth inning today, scoring five runs to overcome Brooklyn's 4—0 lead, and went on to win the fourth game with the Dodgers, 5 to 4, and the series, 3 to 1.

As the Giants again lost to Chicago, the Cards' victory left them only two games behind the league leaders, with whom they open a four-game series tomorrow.

Year's First Twin Bill Won by Reds, 2-1, 4-3

Cincinnati, June 23 (AP).—Cincinnati's Reds won their first double-header of the season today, defeating the Phillies 2 to 1 and 4 to 3.

Doubles won both games. In the first, Lombardi doubled in the ninth with two out and one on to win. In the second game, Koenig doubled with two out and Blakely on, and Bottomley singled to score Koenig and put the Reds into the lead they retained.

The result left the Reds heading into a double-header with the Braves tomorrow after their most successful series of 1934, in which they won four of six games played against the Phils.

wait until tomorrow (Sunday) before making up my mind." The chances are, however, that Outfielder Gus Dugas will be the "goat" and that he will be returned to the Albany International Leaguers.

Rogers Hornsby and his St. Louis Browns open a four-game series against the Nats this afternoon. The scrappy Mound City team is just as scrappy as ever, but finds victories coming harder than they did earlier in the season and the Nats hope to pick up where they left off before the Tigers hit town and take at least three of the four games. Walter Stewart, the southpaw obtained from the Browns during the 1932 off-season, will do the flinging for the natives, with Buck Newsom probably opposing him.

One of the best plays of yesterday's opening game came in the fourth inning. After Walker had doubled with one dead, Owen flied deep to Stone. The latter threw a perfect strike to Travis at third to nip Walker, one of the fastest runers in the league, when he tried to advance after the catch.

Joe Penner, the fellow who wants to sell a duck, was a visitor before yesterday's double-header. He had to leave before play started to keep his date as headliner of Loew's Fox Theater stage show.

Coach Johnny Kerr argued long and loud in the home seventh of the opener when Stone, trying to sacrifice Myer, tapped one to Pitcher Sorrell, who turned in a double play by taking the ball in flight near the ground and wheeling to make a double play at first. Kerr claimed Sorrell trapped the ball, but Umpire Summers viewed the catch differently. As Manush followed with a double, the Nats would have scored a run and tied the count had Kerr won his argument.

The kiddies in the left-field stands outsmarted the police yesterday. Instead of waiting until the intermission to rush to the covered section, all of those who wanted to make a shift made the break between the first and second innings of the opener, the game being delayed fully five minutes while they put on their act.

Fred Schulte was excused from the second game shortly after he had let a looper in his territory fall safe to give Goose Goslin a triple. He then admitted that the crack on the head received in the tenth of the opener had caused him to become dizzy. He expects to be back in the line-up today.

hit a single to center. Then Charley Gehringer hit a single to right. Then Bill Rogell hit a double to right. Then Hank Greenberg hit a single to left. Then Ray Hayworth hit a single to left. Then Marvin Owen hit into a force play. Then Fred Marberry hit a double to left. The Tigers had their six runs for the inning by the time Fox popped out.

The Tigers had upped it to 8-0 by the time the Nats got around to scoring, Goose Goslin's triple accounting for a run in the second inning.

Thereafter the Nats could only make it close. They picked up a run in the sixth and then got three in the eighth when Stone bashed a homer over the right-field fence, Manush doubled, Cronin doubled and Kress singled to reduce the score to 8-4. It was 8-6 in the ninth when Stone smacked a second homer over the wall, with Bluege on base and thus ends the story of the first game.

Myer Starts Rally.

The Tigers were within one pitched ball of winning that knock-down-and-drag-out first game back in the ninth inning when Vic Sorrell had a 4-3 lead, two out, none on base, and a three-and-two count on Buddy Myer. Then the Nats got obstreperous and tied the score in a last-ditch rally, when they might have saved themselves the awful ignominy in the Tigers' tenth.

Myer met Sorrell's pitch coming through the slot and smacked a single into right field. Johnny Stone bashed another single to right that put Myer on third with the tying run, and then Heinie Manush justified his standing as the league's leading hitter by banging a third single into right that tied the score at 4-4.

A hit by Cronin at this juncture would have avoided the catastrophe in the tenth, but no hit was forthcoming and the Nats went back to the field to meet their doom.

Before relating how Crowder was knocked loose from those five runs in the tenth, let me tell you how the Tigers took a 1-0 lead against Al Thomas in the first on singles by Fox and Cochrane, how Cecil Travis put the Nats back in the ball game in the fourth inning by slamming his first homer of the season over the right field wall with Cronin on base, and how the Tigers came from the rear with a three-run uprising in the fifth when they were specializing in triples and home runs.

Goslin Hits Homer.

Fox started it all with a triple against the center field fence and with one out Goose Goslin rammed a homer that was still rising when it cleared the right field wall. Then Thomas pitched another triple to Charlie Gehringer, and the Tigers had their third run of the inning when Rogell drilled a single into right.

The Nats knocked a run off this 4-2 lead in the sixth when Travis doubled and Moe Berg singled and with Jack Russell allowing the Tigers only one hit in a four-inning relief shift, the Nats squared matters in the ninth, but they couldn't get by the tenth.

Crowder had two out when the landslide arrived, robbing Fred Schulte of the hero's mantle. Schulte had just gone back against the fence head first to make a desperate stab of Goslin's liner as his dome struck the barrier with a crash that was heard in Bladensburg, but he held on to the ball as he fell. He showed no signs of life until the Nats rushed out to determine the extent of his injuries. They found the ball tightly clenched in a death-grip in his bare hand. Stunned only, he rteurned to the game.

And then, with two out, the explosion occurred. Gehringer popped a double into short left, and Rogell scored with a single to left that Manush grabbed up behind shortstop, but Gehringer reached the plate ahead of Heinie's feeble throw. Crowder couldn't get anybody else out. He walked Greenberg, Walker pushed a double to right, he walked Owen, and Pitcher Auker singled to right. Fox singled for the fifth hit of the inning, to drive in the fifth run.

McColl finally got the side out when Cochrane popped to Cronin.

The Nats' counter-rally of two runs in the ninth was obviously waste motion.

L. Waner's play featured. He walloped four hits in five times at bat and had 10 put-outs in center field. Earl Clark, Boston outfielder, established a world record May 10, 1929, when he had 13 chances, 12 put-outs and one assist in a nine-inning game.

The Pirates gathered 13 hits off Ed Brandt's delivery, scoring in each of the first three innings.

Murphy pitched five-hit ball until two were out in the eighth, then he gave four straight blows to Averill, Trosky, Sammy Hale and Bob Seeds for the three Cleveland tallies. Hale's blow was a double.

Ruth went to bat three times without a hit, running his string to 20 hitless turns at the plate. The Indians kept up their double play record with their eleventh of the series.

Cubs Win, 5-4, Over Giants In Ninth

Take Three Out of Four in Series; Bush on Slab After 22 Days.

CHICAGO, June 23 (AP).—The revived Cubs took another slash at the world champion Giants today, drove across a ninth-inning run after having three early leads wiped out and took the final game of the series, 5 to 4.

The league leaders departed with only one victory in the four-game set, and had a margin of only 3½ games over the third-place Chicago Club.

Kiki Cuyler's third hit of the game scored Chuck Klein from second with the winning run after two were out in the ninth. Klein reached the halfway station as the result of a two-base wild throw by Relief Pitcher Al Smith, who had come in to do the elbowing in the ninth after Hal Schumacher had given way to a pinch hitter.

Bush, making his first appearance after a 22-day absence because of an injury to his side, allowed six hits in the seven innings he worked.

Travis Jackson, Giant shortstop, withdrew from the game in the second inning because of the heat and an upset stomach.

A's, Browns Split; Foxx Pounds Two

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—The Athletics and St. Louis Browns today split their second double-header in as many days, the A's capturing the opener, 4 to 2, and dropping the nightcap, 6 to 2.

Bill Dietrich's four-hit twirling and Jimmy Foxx's seventeenth homer of the campaign were features of the Mack attack in the first contest.

Foxx also hit a circuit clout in the second game, but the A's, generally, were unable to do much damage to George Blaeholder's delivery in the nightcap.

Sarazen Is 6-1 Favorite to Take British Open Starting Tomorrow at Sandwich

4 Americans To Compete In Event

Shute to Defend Title; Mac Smith, Kirkwood Also Entered.

Observers Believe Par or Even Three or Four Above Will Win.

SANDWICH, England, June 23 (AP).—It looks like the four American entrants against the field in the British open golf championship starting Monday over the Royal St. George's course.

It is a small but mighty array—Denny Shute, defending his 1933 title; Gene Sarazen, who preceded him on the throne; MacDonald Smith, a contender although never a titleholder for more than 20 years, and Joe Kirkwood, the naturalized Australian who can make a golf ball do tricks everywhere except in a championship and sometimes there.

"I think we have a 50-50 chance to come through," Sarazen told the Associated Press, after he had shot a 74, two over par, in a high wind.

Satisfied With Game.

"I am well satisfied with my game and I'm confident I'll give a good account of myself. Mac Smith also is going great and you know he must be confident or he wouldn't have made the long trip over here.

"Shute still is below his best form but he was a way off his game in a couple of tournaments just before last year's open and then suddenly 'got right,' tied Craig Wood and won the playoff. Kirkwood is a dangerous player any time, any place."

Sarazen lists A. H. Padgham, Henry Cotton, Percy Alliss and Archie Compston as the leading British threats to regain the title no Briton has won since 1923.

Sarazen himself is the choice of the bookmakers at 6 to 1, with Padgham second.

The Royal St. George's course, over which the championship proper will be played, following the qualifying rounds Monday and Tuesday, is in fine shape despite the recently broken drought.

The winds, however, play queer tricks and, like St. Andrews, Sarazen says "It's a new course every time you play it."

Most observers believe that par or even three or four strokes above 288 will win. Walter Hagen won here in 1928 with 292 and the course has been little changed since then. Sarazen was runner-up that year.

dash in 47 seconds, clipping a tenth of a second from his own N. C. A. A. record made last year.

Ralph Metcalf, Marquette, repeated his feat of winning both the 100 and 220 a year ago, and the 20 points scored for the Wisconsin institution gave it a tie with Indiana University for fourth place with 20 points. Indiana scored when Charlie Hornbostel won the half-mile and Ivan Fuqua finished second in the quarter with Wes Busbee adding two more in the discus.

The giant Torrance, who trailed Lyman, of Stanford, a fraction of an inch in the preliminaries yesterday, showed that he was not fooling in the finals. His first put of the day was ahead of Lyman's best yesterday and his second carried 54 feet 6 9-10 inches. The other fellows spent the rest of the afternoon shooting at that. Lyman's early toss was good enough for second. Torrance's throw, however, was more than half a foot back of his 55 feet 1½ toss made at the Drake Relays.

Voorhees, local athlete, who has had training in this work, is now at Annapolis, Md., taking a special ten-day course in this work at the Red Cross Aquatic School. He returns Tuesday to start the school the following morning.

Quantico Marines Bow To Baltimore Firemen

Baltimore, Md., June 23 (Spl.).—Backing up a five-hit mound effort by Harold Parr with a 15-hit attack of their own, the Baltimore Firemen routed the Quantico Marines, 15 to 4, in their annual game today at Oriole Park. Neither Thomas nor Rhea had what it required to stem the steady stream of Fire hits, and this coupled with some faulty defensive work, enabled the hosemen to roll up their big score.

Parr pitched a steady and effective game throughout. He didn't issue a base on balls until the final inning, and the Quantico lads hit him safely in only two innings.

Play Gazette Stars in Twin-Bill; Celtics Invade Rockville.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—In the headliner at Baggetts Stadium Sunday afternoon, the Mount Vernon Independents and the Gazette All-Stars mix in twin bill. Coach Owens, of the All-Stars, announced Jim Blake, speed-ball artist, and Lefty Allen, as his mound selections.

The St. Mary's Celtics will travel to Rockville tomorrow for a return game with the team of that place. In a previous game the Celtics took the Maryland crew by a one-run margin. For the coming tilt they will be, without the services of Doc. Dreifus, Russ Kidwell and Archie (Lefty) Scrivner. Their positions will be filled by Coach Bill Langford at first base, Scrivner behind the bat, and Bill Tarbis, former George Washington star. The players meet at the stadium here at noon to make the trip.

Alexandria Eagles are scheduled to meet the Culpeper nine tomorrow at Culpeper. The team will meet at the Eagles Hall at noon to make the trip.

Del Ray Arrows' new baseball diamond will be opened tomorrow when the Arrows play the Meridian A. C. in their first home game of the season. The new diamond is located just off the River road in back of the Silver Boot Inn.

Kitty Curtiss and Capt. Ed Von Deck have been named as the starting battery.

Norfolk on Spree In Piedmont Loop

Bryan Star as Tars Win 19 of Last 23 Games.

Norfolk, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—The Norfolk team of the Piedmont League is attracting attention in the big show because of the remarkable record it has made in the past 23 games. The team has won 19 out of 23 games and is now only three games from the top in the league standing.

The Tars started their winning streak when they were in fourth place and are now within striking distance of the top place with an excellent chance to win the first half of the season.

Jim Bryan, right fielder, has been the main star in all the victories. He has hit 16 home runs this season, 12 of which were in the 23 games the team has played with 19 victories. He walloped a pair in yesterday's contest with Charlotte, the league leaders. He is acting manager of the team since Bill Skiff has been under the weather.

Yesterday the team received a congratulatory message from the owners of the New York Yankees, who also own the local aggregation. The Yanks are coming here June 29 to meet the Tars in an exhibition game.

The Norfolk team is drawing the largest attendance in baseball history here. It plays the Charlotte Club again tomorrow and the demand for tickets already exceeds the seating capacity of Bain Field.

'Severe' Dog Ruling Is Rapped by Hunters

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Hunters here are in a quandary as a result of what they regard as an overly severe ruling of the State Game Commission regarding use of dogs in the fields.

The new ruling, effective to September 1, 1934, specifies that dog owners, who have in the past trained their young hunting dogs in the fields and woods during the closed season for game, will be held responsible for any damage to birds and rabbits by dogs whether accompanied by owner or not during this summer.

Shoes Fly Off Feet—So Team Loses Game

Danville, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—The Danville Bi-State League baseball club played under false colors this afternoon. The Boston Braves, hearing the local lads' need, sent sixteen discarded uniforms from their farm at Harrisburg.

Shoes are still a problem. Fans attributed the loss of yesterday's game to the fact that loose-fitting shoes, which flew off while the men ran their bases, contributed to the 15-4 defeat by Mayodan. Manager Herb Brett changed shoes four times and could hardly pitch effectively.

College Cage Tourney Slated in West Virginia

Fairmont, W. Va., June 23 (Spl.). A State College championship basket ball tournament, a new move in West Virginia athletics, has been decided upon by the West Virginia Athletic Conference.

It will be held in Fairmont this winter, with teams from 13 State colleges participating. The major event in this sport heretofore has been the State high school tournament, held annually at Buckhannon with thousands attending.

Middie Nine Scores.

Annapolis, Md., June 23 (Spl.).—The baseball team of second class midshipmen opened its eight-game summer schedule today with a 7-to-5 victory over the City of Baltimore nine. The teams batted on even terms, each getting ten safe drives, but the Tars hit a bit more opportunely.

The Middies had the benefit of the services of Griff Sexton, varsity squad hurler, who, though not in his usual form, hurled effectively in the pinches.

Hotchkiss Cup To Baltimore Netmen

Wins All Three Doubles to Eke Out Victory by 5-4 Count.

THEY had a place all dusted off in the trophy room of the Columbia Country Club yesterday for the Hotchkiss Cup, but the space is still empty today.

Virtually snatching the beautiful trophy from under the collective noses of the Washington team, a group of fighting Baltimore tennis players cooly turned what had been generally conceded a Washington victory into a smarting 5-to-4 defeat, allowing it to carry off the cup, emblematic of the team championships of Norfolk, Richmond, Baltimore and Washington, for the seventh time in the 14-year history of the event. The matches were held on the Columbia courts.

Prior to yesterday's play, the two cities were tied with six victories apiece. Washington eliminated Richmond, winner of the 1933 championship, 9 to 0, Friday, and Baltimore overwhelmed Norfolk, 7 to 1.

Clean Up in Doubles.

Apparently unruffled at the prospect of Washington needing but one more win to clinch the title at the conclusion of the singles, in which Baltimore won but two of the six matches, the visiting team settled down to the task of taking al lthree doubles matches and went through with it with complete success.

While the ultimate result was not decided until the conclusion of the final match of the day in which Bert Rawls and Eric Jacobsen, of Baltimore, defeated Nelson Spottswood and Ed Baker, 6—4, 6—4, it was back in the last singles match between Tom Mangan, Washington veteran, and Dr. John Howard, former Princeton tennis captain and Maryland State champion, that the Washington hopes received their greatest jolt.

The slightly built Johns Hopkins physician, in administering a 6—2, 2—6, 8—6 defeat to Mangan, No. 1 man of the Washington team, exhibited the best tennis of the day against an opponent who was hitting with all his customary capabilities.

Mangan Ties Score.

In the crucial third set, Howard jumped to a 4-1 lead only to have the Washington veteran bring it to 4-all. the visiting player won his service in the next game but Mangan deuced the score at 5-all in the tenth. Howard blew his own service when his game suddenly fell off completely, but came back to make it 6-all by outvolleying Mangan on two vital points.

Finding his net game particularly effective, the Baltimore player continued it in the next two, taking Mangan's service in the final game through the aid of a double-fault, match point coming after a long rally in which Howard finally aced his opponent on a sharply-angled volley.

District Tennis Title Tourney Today

Best Players in City Will Compete for Crown Held by Mitchell.

WASHINGTON'S blue ribbon tennis event of the year, the forty-seventh annual District men's championship commences today with all but a few of the huge entry list of 71 players taking part in either preliminary or first-round matches on the courts of the Columbia Country Club.

The big scramble for the title now held by Dooley Mitchell, No. 1 seeded player, promises to be one of the hottest in the long history of the championships. A glance at the list of nine seeded players is enough to indicate that the late rounds of the tournament will bring together, in all probability, the outstanding stars of the section.

Passed Up College Event.

Barney Welsh, seeded second to Mitchell and No. 1 man on Duke University's net team, and Rickey Willis, North Carolina tennis captain, forewent entering the intercollegiate tourney, in order to be able to take part in the District's big tennis attraction of the season. Willis is seeded eighth.

Ralph McElvenny, runner-up to Mitchell in the recent City of Washington tournament, is seeded No. 3; Tom Mangan, who needs no introduction to tennis followers, No. 4; Frank Shore, fourth ranking player of the city, No. 5; Tony Latona, Georgetown star, No. 6; Bud Markey, former high ranking District player now in a come-back attempt, No. 7, and Hy Ritzenberg, cool-headed veteran, No. 9.

Trigg-Ritzenberg Feature.

The match between Hugh Trigg, experienced public park player, and Ritzenberg offers the chief attraction in the opening day's play with the other fatvorites meeting more or less unknown opposition.

Tournament officials ask that players dress at home instead of expecting to do so at the club, due to limited locker-room facilities at disposal.

Preliminary Round.

10:00—Stocklinski vs. Dreschler; Hoffecker vs. Martinez; Dawson vs. Krickbaum; Deck vs. B. Doyle; W. Sturtevant vs. Lord; Staubley vs. Moore; Boyd vs. Goldsmith.

With Hook and Line . . .

By Jean Monk.

ONE of the most interesting features of salt water fishing is the ebbing and flooding of the tides. And although the subject of tides among fishermen and fishing editors is the one perennial topic of much talk and sometimes a little discussion, seldom is anything of an enlightening nature ever released for publication on the subject.

We tell our readers that the tides will be high at stated hours and moments at certain well-known or popular fishing grounds. The tides are also low at those places at certain hours and moments. It is assumed, apparently, in giving the high tides that fish bite only when the tides are highest.

But those tide tables which give only the times of high tides do not, as a matter of fact, give the high water periods but only the moment when the tide is the highest. At that moment, however, the tide starts falling (ebbing) again; so that, what such tide tables really give is the period (half of it to be calculated) of falling water, ebb tide. And that isn't what those tables intend to give.

To give the periods of high water it is necessary to state the hour and the moment when the water will be the lowest, all the way out; for, it is at that moment that it starts rising and it will continue to rise for the next 6 or 6½ hours.

Another point salt water fishermen ought to know is that tide predictions issued by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, from which all fishermen's tide tables are compiled, give the times of high and low water by the shore only. The times of change of current offshore is another subject.

It's like a long freight train making a horseshoe bend, the engine representing the tides and the caboose the currents. If the train is very long the engine will pass the caboose on its way back. The tides rise and fall (flood and ebb) with remarkable accuracy offshore as well as by the shore. But the current, being so swift and swept on by such a volume of water (all the water in the bay) does not spend its strength, hence does not change from flood to ebb or from ebb to flood for 3 to 4 hours after the tide has reached its highest or fallen its lowest.

Many of us have had the experience of fishing in the bay out from a certain point, following very religiously our pet tide tables and being disappointed. The tide at Herring Bay, for instance, was high at 12:53 this mornnig. It was high again at that place at 12:20 this afternoon.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Culpeper won from Charlottesville here this afternoon, 4-2, in a light-hitting contest. It was the first defeat of the season for the local club, which had won five games in succession.

"Lefty" Scrivener, who twirled for George Washington University the past season, was on the mound for Charlottesville and pitched winning ball, but received ragged support. He fanned thirteen. Only one of the four runs made by the visitors was earned.

Wild Heave Costly.

A wild heave by Miller, formerly of Washington and Lee, gave Culpeper its first run, and another was added in the third frame on Metheney's single. In the fifth, Lowery, safe at first on Lang's error, counted later on Ball's sacrifice. Culpeper's final talley came in the eighth, Jewett sending L. Humphries home with his single.

McIntyre blanked the locals except in the fifth. With one down Scrivener doubled and Lang was hit by a pitched ball, and both registered on Marion's long single.

Charlottesville plays Harrisonburg here tomorrow.

At Harrisonburg, the home team walloped Woodstock, 13-4, in a contest marked by an orgy of errors. Each club was charged with eight misplays.

The winners tallied nine runs in the first three innings and sewed up the game. Benny Good, on the mound for Harrisonburg, yielded only seven hits, but his own errors were responsible for three of the Woodstock runs.

Johnny Keister clouted a home run with two on in the fifth to add to the Harrisonburg margin of victory.

Early in the week Front Royal asked for a franchise and the request was granted. Then the Warren County All Stars, one of the strongest independent clubs in North Virginia, found out they could not present their full strength in league games and abandoned the plan.

Invitation Season Over, Golf Slows Down Pace in District; Sectional Qualifying Test for National P.G.A. at Kenwood Friday Tops Week's Bill.

By Dave Herman.

Also on the program this week is the District girls' junior championship at Congressional on Thursday and Friday. It will be a 36-hole tournament, and Virginia Pope, of Kenwood, will be called on to defend her title.

Few will participate in the tournament. We will have Helen Dettweiler, Virginia Pope, Virginia Williams and Betty Keeler as the chief contestants. Due to the small field, the junior has been a rather drab and colorless affair.

Beaver Dam is preparing for a royal turnout Wednesday, for its "field day." At least 125 women will converge on the course to compete for a raft of attractive prizes.

Miss Kincaid a Winner.

Ellen Kincaid, the young lady we ballyhooed not so long ago, has won her first important golf tournament. Ellen defeated Anne Hansen, 8 and 7, in the finals of the West Potomac championship. There is much glory in the 15-year-old girl's triumph, even though West Potomac is nothing more than a tee shot on eight holes, and a drive and a chip on the ninth. She won a championship Betty Keeler failed to win. And Betty Keeler, for your information, is the District women's public links champion. On her way to the finals, Ellen eliminated Hope Wilkinson, the defending champion. Betty lost in the semifinals. Of course, Betty is considered the better player of the two young girls, and the chances are hat Miss Keeler would have spreadeagled the field had the tournament been played at Rock Creek.

From none other than Professional Roland Mackenzie comes the statement that Ellen Kincaid is a girl of promise in golf. Mackenzie's remarks were not prompted by the fact that he saw her swing her club a few times. He played nine holes with Ellen a few weeks ago at Congressional—the first time the little lady had traversed a real golf course. He saw her make every shot. He liked her swing, her courage, her determination. No, she didn't score very well, for Congressional is a long, long layout, and it was exceedingly long the day she played it. Well, Ellen mounted the first tee, and whacked the ball down the middle a good 150 yards. Her failure to get a single par for eight holes didn't feaze Ellen in the least. We remember how well she plunked her drive on the 178-yard ninth. Her shot finished a few feet from the right side of the green. Mr. Mackenzie was trapped. Ellen chipped nicely eight feet from the cup, and sank her putt—yes, for a par 3. Mr. Mackenzie took a 4, even as you and I.

A real golfing thrill came to Ellen.

The difference in the age of Miss Kincaid and Wimsatt is 44. Is golf a game for old folks or young folks?

Dr. Charles Cole, sr., superintendent of Sibley Hospital, celebrated part of his thirty-third wedding anniversary Thursday by playing nine holes at Kenwood. Dr. Cole—whose son, Charlie, jr., is the Kenwood club champion—came to the ninth hole needing his par 4 for a 39. He had a good drive and a good second. His chip was weak, and, try as he might, the good doctor could not sink his putt from 15 feet. His 40 included a birdie 4 on the 461-yard fifth that was the result of a spectacular blast out of a trap. But Dr. Cole's greatest shot of the day was his drive on the 359-yard seventh. It was straight as an arrow and traveled approximately 275 yards. It was what his traveling companions called "one of the longest drives ever seen on this hole."

A match between Dr. Cole and Sam Bond would be a good one. Whereas Dr. Cole played only nine holes Thursday, Sam Bond defied the sultry weather by shooting 36 holes. Bond was mighty proud of his birdie 3 on the ninth, a hole where there as a dearth of birds.

Woodmont's golfers are in for a big day today. Suburban Country Club, of Baltimore, comes over for its annual links jamboree and Woodmont is anxious to emerge the victor in both the men's and women's matches. Woodmont is fresh from a victory over Woodholme, another Baltimore rival. A triumph over Suburban would atone for last season's setbacks.

Pro-Amateur Feature.

Gene Larkin, the busy red-haired pro, will probably team with Howard Nordlinger, perennial club champion, against Ralph Beach, Suburban pro, and Nathan Kaufman, ranking club golfer, in the afternoon's feature match. Another match of particular interest will be that between Mrs. Ralph Goldsmith, Woodmont champion, and Mrs. Jerome Sloman, the Maryland ace. Other Woodmont players who will be pressed into service are Mel Kraft, whose finals match with Nordlinger for the handicap championship will be postponed until next week; Dr. Dewey Gottlieb, Lou Harris, Leopold V. Freudberg, Fulton Brylawski, Gil Hahn, Milton Harris, Al Steinem, Byron Ackerman and Lester Ollan. An injured arm will keep Bill Ilich, popular chairman of the greens committee, on the sidelines.

Out at Woodmont they've got a couple of young women who are going to give a good account of themselves one of these days. Janice Loeb already has reached that stage where she can hit the ball with a lot of zip. Her playing companion, Nancy Goldsmith, is amazing her friends with the free, easy-going manner she plays her shots. Constructed along the lines of Helen Dettweiler, Miss Goldsmith bears the earmarks of a future star. Miss Loeb has lopped a few strokes off her handicap by virtue of a 48 last week. On the fourth she helped her ringer score with a par 4. Miss Goldsmith showed the kind of golf she is capable of playing by knocking her drive on the short and tricky eighth hole into a position for a birdie.

Yale Golfers Win.

Cleveland, Ohio, June 23 (AP).—Yale defeated Princeton today, 8½ to 1½ in the play-off for the Eastern intercollegiate golf championship on the difficult Kirtland golf course. Oliver Transue and Law Weatherwax, of Yale, and Fred Kramer, of Princeton, each scored 75's on the par 72 layout, playing from the back tees.

Protestants May Back Film Fight

Baltimore, June 23 (Spl.).—Protestant Churches of Baltimore probably will join Catholics in boycotting indecent and objectionable motion pictures, it was said here today by Dr. Ross W. Sanderson, executive secretary of the Baltimore Federation of Churches.

Although no action has been taken, Dr. Sanderson said that he felt certain the federation would indorse views of the Federal Council of Churches in America, which has urged members of 25 Protestant denominations to boycott theaters showing indecent pictures.

A committee on motion pictures recently was named by the Baltimore Council of Religious Education, subsidiary of the federation, but no report has been made.

Virginia Teachers Support Saunders for Head of N. E. A.

State and Local Committees Have Been at Work for Months in Behalf of Newport News Superintendent.

Richmond, June 23 (AP).—Joseph H. Saunders, superintendent of schools at Newport News, will go to the annual meeting of the National Education Association in Washington next Saturday with teachers of Virginia solidly backing him for president of the association.

A committee of the Virginia Education Association has been working for months lining up the State as a whole, and its work has been supplemented by local committees in both Richmond and Newport News.

Mr. Saunders has been prominent in Virginia education for many years, and now is a member of the State Board of Education.

He has served as city superintendent of public schools in Newport News since 1921. Prior to taking charge of schools in the Hampton Roads city, he taught in Bland and Norfolk Counties, and served as principal of a city junior high school, a city senior high school, director of summer normal sessions for ten years, teacher in a university, assistant educational director of the Jamestown Exposition, State examiner and inspector, and superintendent of records and returns of the Federal Board of Vocational Education.

Mr. Saunders is said in literature promoting his candidacy to be eminently fitted for the National association presidency by his long service as a member of the organization. He has been a member since 1903, and holds a life membership in the association and in the department of superintendence.

Mr. Saunders holds an A. B. degree from William and Mary, an A. M. from the University of Chicago, LL. D., and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Delta Kappa, and Phi Gamma Mu. He also is prominent in fraternal and civic affairs.

No Profits Yet On Va. Liquor

Board Cites Big Outlay on Stocks; Receipts Are $425,829.

Richmond, June 23 (AP).—It is possible that Virginia localities may get a slice from the legal liquor profits this year, but A. B. Clarke, spokesman for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, said today that the board thinks the chances are pretty slim.

From March 22 to June 14, ABC gross receipts amounted to $425,829, while in the same period it spent $793,314.95 for hard liquor stocks and $103,830.90 for wines. It was pointed out that a great initial expenditure was necessary to provide stocks for the State stores, which are being opened at the rate of about three a week, and that until May 15 no store was in operation.

In Richmond, where five stores now are in operation, four of them since May 15, the average gross income has been approximately $9,500 per store week. The board figures on an average 10 per cent net profit.

In Norfolk, the second city in which stores were opened, the two stores have averaged approximately $8,100 per store week, gross profit.

The law provides that the localities are to participote in the profits only after the State uses $1,675,000 for general fund budget balancing purposes.

Under the best estimates, Mr. Clarke said, the net profit during the first year will reach no more than $1,500,000.

Farmer "Clocks" Terrapin's Speed At 1.2 Feet a Day

Woodstock, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Robert Clarke, a farmer living west of Woodstock, believes he has solved the age-old question "How fast does a terrapin travel?"

In 1911 Mr. Clark caught a terrapin on his place, and in order that he might identify the animal if seen again he marked its shell.

Several days ago, while plowing, Clarke saw a terrapin. He picked it up and on his back was a mark identical to the one affixed in 1911.

Clark began figuring on the distance the terrapin had traveled in 23 years. He measured a bee-line distance from the point where the terrapin was first seen and where it was recently found. It was 987 feet; or, figured on an annual basis, Clark estimated the terrapin had traveled but 47 feet a year, or about 1.2 feet a day.

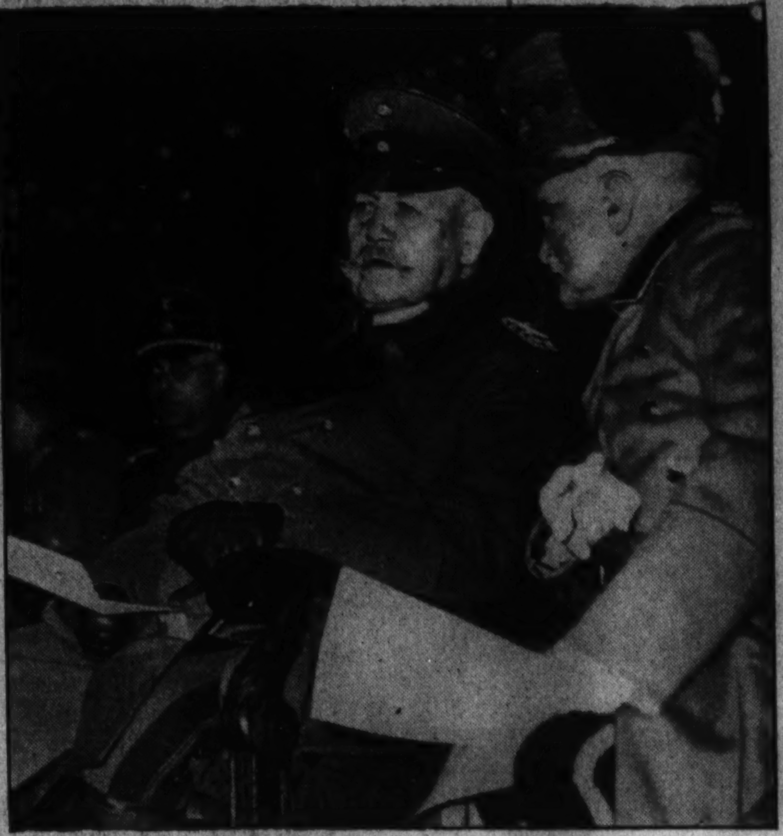
Nazi Charger Trembles as Stern Von Papen Applies the Bit

Could Nazi Chief Hitler's popularity crumble? Last week Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen (center) implied it might. In a public address he spoke scathingly of the Nazi regime of Hitler, who appears in a jovial mood.



Von Papen's was the first outspoken attack on the present German government. But it was quickly endorsed in a telegram from President von Hindenburg, regarded as one of those in favor of a monarchy.

Hindenberg Helps Rein in the Runaway

Popular Hysteria, Eagerness to Escape Results of the World War, Made it Till Now Impossible to Check Revolution.

Hitler Critics Rumor Collapse of Regime

Economic Crisis of Titan Proportions Threatens a Germany Shorn of Her Exports and Cut Off From Raw Materials.

By Kendall Foss.

Unbeknownst to most Germans a tremor went through the Third Reich last week which caused the swastika flag to quiver and its devotees to yelp.

Dashing Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen spoke his mind for the first time since he engineered Adolf Hitler's elevation to the chancellorship nearly 17 months ago. But only the early editions of a few papers got the speech in print before the censor awoke to his responsibilities.

Addressing students at old Marburg, the white hope of the aristocratic-liberal school inaugurated what may prove the beginning of the end of Germany's convulsive effort to escape from reality. The biggest story of the year and perhaps even of the post-war period begins to take shape. Barring red revolution in America or disappearance of the Bolsheviki in Russia, there is no event which would so profoundly affect history as the collapse of the Nazi revolution in Germany.

Of these three, only one is in the realm of likelihood.

Franz von Papen, slim, gray-haired, cultured, and aristocratic to the tips of his fingers, the embodiment of the best traditions of the old Prussian army, is a shrewd man and a first-class politician. When he warned his hearers at Marburg against the uncritical fanaticism of the radical wing of the Nazi party he was not uttering ideas novel to him and his group. Obviously he has been nursing these fears right along. The significant thing is not the content of his speech, but the fact Von Papen judged the time ripe for a public airing.

If Wrong He'll Soon Be Out.

He may have been wrong and if he was he will soon find himself outside looking in. But few men can be in a better position to judge the temper of the people and the real trend of ideas than Vice Chancellor von Papen, the intimate of President von Hindenburg and the confidant of the higher circles of the army.

Behind the Sturm und Drang of Hitlerism lies one central idea shared by an enormous majority of the German people. Release. Release from Versailles. Release from complex and painful but only partially understood economic laws. Release from the consequences of a venture rather gaily embarked upon in the summer of 1914 which ended so badly on November 11, 1918.

Some people prefer the word escape to release.

Von Papen is as devoted to this concept as Hjalmar Schacht, the elusive president of the Reichsbank, or Paul von Beneckendorf und Hindenburg, field marshal and President, or any other nationalistic minded German great or small. When it comes to that, former Chancellor Heinrich Bruening and the late Gustav Stresemann were also primarily actuated by this single aim: The restoration of the fatherland to a place in the sun in the shortest possible time. The methods have differed widely; the goal not at all.

When Von Papen persuaded his President to name Hitler chancellor on January 30, 1933, he was speaking as much in his role of a former cavalry officer as he was in his capacity as an ultra-astute politician. In his mind's eye he saw a wild and elemental force, too powerful to suppress, too imminent longer to avoid, too potentially valuable to his central theme to ignore. He saw himself astride a fiery steed, taming it to his will.

If he had any doubts of his ability to ride that snorting, pawing stallion, they were eclipsed by his dual realization of the damage the creature would do if left unchecked and of the load it could pull once it had been harnessed.

Von Papen has had a wild ride; now he is busy inserting the bit in a mouth totally unfamiliar with checks of any sort. It is anybody's guess what the immediate effect will be; it is likely that patience and skill will sooner or later quiet the runaway. If not, well, even more serious things are in store for a great number of people.

Mussolini discovered that the men who helped him make his revolution were not the ones who could help him maintain it. Stalin is equally well acquainted with this tenet of revolutionary philosophy. Von Papen appears to think it time Hitler advanced to this second stage of knowledge. Perhaps he is but cultivating seed Il Duce planted in dem Fuehrer's mind ten days ago in Venice.

Hitler, it may be assumed, is ready for a change—if only he can figure out a way to make the transition from active to passive revolution without cutting his support from under him. To date his genius has shown itself most clearly in his skillful use of both ultra-radical and extreme conservative backing. So far he has avoided taking sides; probably he will have to soon.

His radical supporters have earned themselves the name of "National Bolshevists." Gottfried Feder, the father of the original Nazi economic program, is in this group and so is Alfred Rosenberg, the chief of the party's foreign office (in distinction to the Reich's official foreign office, still guided by the conservative Konstantin von Neurath). Richard Darre, Hans Kerri, Ernst Roehm and the redoubtable Paul Joseph Goebbels are likewise identified with the extremist camp. Their support is the S. A., the private army on whose shoulders Hitler rode to power.

On the other side, besides Von Papen and Von Neurath, stand Kurt Schmitt, minister of economics; Hjalmar Schacht of the Reichsbank, and probably Herman Goering, air chief and minister of the interior. Behind these men stands the Stahlhelm, the strongly monarchistic veterans' association.

Between the two groups rises Germany's grand old man, Von Hindenburg. Beside him, and a little below, stands Werner von Blomberg, general of the Reichswehr, and all or most of his 100,000 professional soldiers.

For nearly a year and a half the tide has set so strongly in Germany that none of the non-Nazi supporters have been able to do more than keep his head above water. Seeking to stem the pent-up emotional forces loosed around the Reichstag fire had proved suicidal too often. Many struck out downstream with powerful strokes, seeking a place among the leaders of the new day. Others coasted prudently along, biding their time, unwilling to give up hope of an ultimate return to rationality.

And quite a number sorrowfully accepted the flood, costly as they knew it to be, in the hope that it would shield Germany from what they considered a worse fate: Bolshevism.

As in time of war, the mass of people went mad. Individuals who found themselves out of sympathy had to decide upon their courses as best they could. Some were smart, some prudent, some quixotic. After a while they may gather the fruits of their several decisions.

The first to brave the storm are, evidently, the Junkers, led just now by Franz von Papen. The Social-Democrats have no organization left, the Communists are out of sight if not out of existence, the center parties have evaporated in the glare of a rampant National Socialism.

But the Junkers, who "never learn and never forget," are ready to try again. In Von Papen they have a man motivated not only by his fellow feeling for the old aristocracy, landed and urban, but one who is strongly exercised over the church fight. Von Papen is a devout Catholic, former publisher of the Catholic organ, the Germania, and once a power in Bruening's Catholic party, the Zentrum.

He is shrewd, agile, sincere. He is not particularly profound, but quick enough to catch the deeper implications his more philosophical colleagues discover and point out to him. If he is a little forgetful (witness the suitcase he left on the train at Pennsylvania Station, New York, which contained the papers to prove him too close to the German wartime espionage service for a scrupulously correct military attache) why, there are others now to remind him.

Believes in Divine Right of Kings.

He is, however, a convinced aristocrat, a believer in the superior ability of the well born, a subscriber to the divine right of kings theory in its modified version. In a world presently dedicated to various forms of the mass idea—the "forgotten man," the "dictatorship of the proletariat," the totalitarian state—he may lack a base broad enough to give real power. Certainly his cry is back to the familiar, not forward to the unknown.

An impending economic crisis of undisguisable proportions stares Germany in the face. Exports have gone glimmering, imports have had to be cut down to fit. This has produced a shortage of raw materials which at once threatens to wreck whatever of reemployment the Hitler regime has been able to accomplish. For German industry is fundamentally based upon the import of raw materials and the re-export of the same materials as finished goods.

A final and complete moratorium on foreign debt payments has been declared. Rumors questioning the continued stability of the reichsmark abound. Political isolation stares the Wilhelmstrasse down, bringing an ill-disguised regret over certain hasty steps such as reigning from the league and attempting to swallow Austria whole.

A well-disciplined press keeps most of these things from German readers. Foreigners have far more facts available if they do not have that imponderable factor, atmosphere, to aid them in forming judgments. Even so, certain things must be obvious to the attentive German reader.

He heard, for example, a great deal about the forthcoming plan to incorporate Austria within the bounds of the Reich. Some time has elapsed and he still has not read of the triumphal ceremony marking the end of the campaign. He heard, too, of the ten-year pact of nonaggression signed with Poland. If he is shrewd, he is wondering why. After all, recapture of the Polish Corridor used to be a very prominent feature of the Hitler prospectus. You don't suppose something has happened of which

Planes Warm for Flight While Air Chief Battles Charges

Gen. Foulois' Case May Be Thrashed Out by Court-Martial.

Critics See Alaska Trip as Effort to Divert Attention.

By Harris B. Hull.

This is a story about the woes of Uncle Sam, the business man. It also concerns an unfortunate general, four years ago hailed as one of the greatest aerial tacticians in the world, now accused of "inefficiency," "violation of the law," and faced with a possible court-martial.

The account of the charges of "dishonesty" and "mismanagement" against Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the Army Air Corps, has been told and is fresh in the reader's mind. Undoubtedly, it is fresher than the story of his leadership in the great aerial force that swept over the country in the early summer of 1931 in the most impressive demonstration of mass flying America has ever seen, an unparalleled maneuver carried on without serious accident.

The Foulois case and the problems of the Air Corps have occupied thousands of lines of type during the past week. Only last Thursday night it was announced that ten planes will fly from Washington to Fairbanks, Alaska, and return.

Sympathetic observers believe that the successful completion of this hazardous mission will go a long way to disprove the charges that the operation of the Air Corps is "inefficient."

See Alaska Flight As Strategem.

Critics say that the Alaska flight is designed to divert public attention from the present Air Corps picture. Everything considered, no case of a public servant has created so much attention as the charges against the Army's first pilot, a man who flew with the Wrights and who is still actively at it. Let us inquire into the underlying principles of what promises to be the "Foulois incident."

The biggest customer in the world is the United States Government. Every branch of industry recognizes this and does everything possible to "sell" Uncle Sam, and to sell him large orders. The process isn't unlike the corner grocery store owner who puts his wares up on the counter in a prominent place when his prize customer comes into the store. It is done simply on a larger scale.

However, when Uncle Sam goes to market it is often the case that he can't find exactly what he wants. He has to order it. It must be built especially for him. In many cases no one else could possibly use the product but the United States Government.

In the purchase of large quantities of expensive materials there are two general methods, as every business man knows. One is to state the specifications of the goods that are wanted and ask for bids. In other words, you describe very accurately just what you need so that the product furnished by one company will be exactly the same as that turned out by a competitor. The bids are submitted by the respective companies for the business and as long as the product has been standardized it is simply a matter of picking the lowest bidder.

The second method is to make arrangements with one company to manufacture the goods desired. The dealings then are "negotiated."

Both of these methods of purchase have enthusiastic advocates. And these people are just as critical of the method they do not espouse as they are favorable to their own.

Competitive Bidding Called Fairest.

The advocates of competitive bidding state that theirs is the only fair way to obtain a product. It furnishes practically no chance for graft, they say, and is economical.

On the other hand, those who favor the negotiated system claim that theirs is the most satisfactory way to obtain efficient equipment. They state that it is not consistent to cut small expenses by competitive bidding for such specialized equipment as airplanes, for instance. And they add that in the negotiated system the contract can be awarded to the company which has researched, pioneered and developed the original idea to a point where it can be sold to the Government as a tangible product. To put out bids on the exclusive idea and product of any one company is inconsistent and unfair, they state.

There are two schools of business thought. In and out of the Government they have their supporters and their critics. And this is where the unfortunate general enters the picture.

Maj. Gen. Foulois is very definitely a member of the latter of these two schools. He believes that the negotiated contract is the way to buy airplanes for Uncle Sam's flying forces. He decries efforts to cut small costs by competitive bidding. And he defends the contention of the manufacturers that when they have built an experimental model of a fighting airplane, their company, and only their company, is entitled to produce it.

He believes so firmly in this method that he has gone ahead and bought flying equipment from the aviation industry on this basis. He has been told that his actions are in violation of law. But he states that "in the interest of the Government I have overlooked Army regulations and broken them hundreds of times, and I will break them again."

Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the Army Air Corps, is at present the center of a stormy battle that hinges on the manner in which the corps has awarded its contracts for materials. The man against whom charges of "mismanagement" have been made has long been a daring leader in the progress of American aviation.

That is the basis of the much publicized controversy between Gen. Foulois and the Rogers sub-committee of the House of Representatives Military Affairs Committee.

This article is not an attempt to defend Gen. Foulois, nor does it try to glorify his prosecutors.

But the thousands of words already printed in every newspaper are liable to convey the impression that the present chief of the Army Air Corps stands before the world as the sole defender of the "negotiated" contract.

In a recent speech in the House, Representative Ross Collins, of Mississippi, chairman of the War Department Appropriations sub-committee, stated:

Negotiation Idea Warmly Defended.

"Negotiation, however, in my judgment, can be so regulated as to minimize to the greatest extent humanly possible the opportunity for proceeding contrary to the public interests.

"There is no need to abandon the principle. I have studied this question for a number of years. I have met with it every year in the consideration of the War Department appropriation bill. My reaction is that if military and naval aviation is to advance and keep pace with development abroad, and to have incorporated in their design the latest knowledge, the only method is to buy the best plane of each particular type that has been brought forward at the time purchase is to be made. Such a plane essentially would be in the proprietary category and therefore would need to be acquired through negotiation."

But there is another phase of the Foulois case that, in a way, is deeper rooted than this discussion of contractual relationships between the Government and American industry.

It relates to the internal organization of the War Department, the part that each branch is to play in case of emergency. It involves the supervision and authority of the general officers over each individual service, in this case the Air Corps.

It is the contention of the general staff of the Army that the Air Corps is a supplementary force and must be under the close supervision of the line officers, if it is to accomplish its mission in warfare.

Air Corps experts, however, have contended that their service should be an individual unit. They state that it would function more or less by itself, especially if the cause arose to defend the boundaries of our Nation.

And these exponents of a divorced air organization have been successful to a certain degree. An Assistant Secretaryship of War for Aviation was created a number of years ago. This also was true in the Navy Department.

In the early days of the Roosevelt Administration this post of Assistant Secretary of War for Aviation was not filled, as was expected. And as a result the general staff of the Army came closer to the organization of the Air Corps.

Today the relationship between the Air Corps and the general staff of the Army is a very live issue. As a result of the recent criticism of the administration of the flying branch, the general staff feels a paternal and somewhat jealous interest to more closely supervise the activities of the fliers. Some unkind commentators have stated that the staff sees an opportunity to gain more control at this critical period. In return the Air Corps officers, realizing that they are under criticism, are fighting a stiff battle for the independence of their branch. In regard to this Gen. Foulois has said:

General Staff Paternal to Air Corps.

"The vital point that I am trying to develop is the necessity of having an independent Army Air Corps organization that can function efficiently outside of the present cumbersome general staff.

"For 20 years I have struggled consistently against the War Department general staff in my efforts to build up aviation within the Army.

"I announced to the chief of staff, in his office, several days ago, in the presence of the deputy chief of staff, that the steps they were taking at that time were the first real constructive steps, to my knowledge, in the past 20 years, that have been initiated by the War Department general staff itself.

"In saying this, I am criticizing the general staff system as now existing in the War Department. I am not impugning the integrity of any particular individual member of the War Department general staff.

"The general staff is made up of conscientious and intelligent men but made up chiefly of men who have been trained in the ground branches of the service 95 per cent of whom have practically no knowledge of aviation except what they have read out of books

"Army aviation is a practical and highly technical problem that must be developed and controlled by the practical airmen trained in practi-

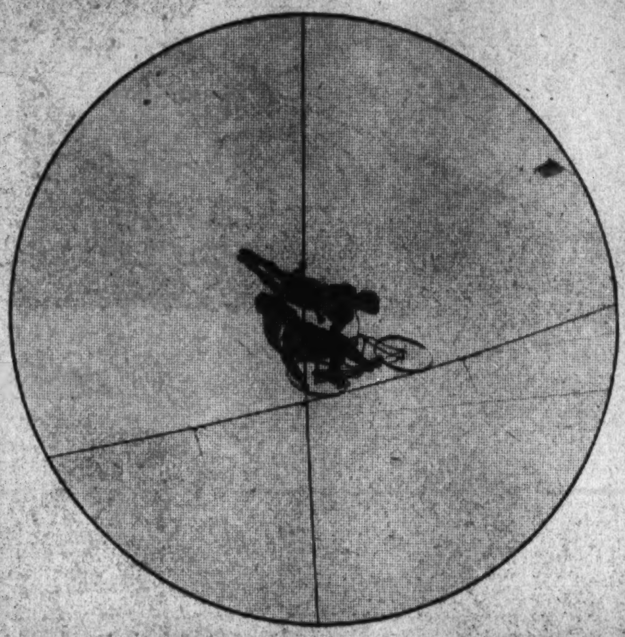
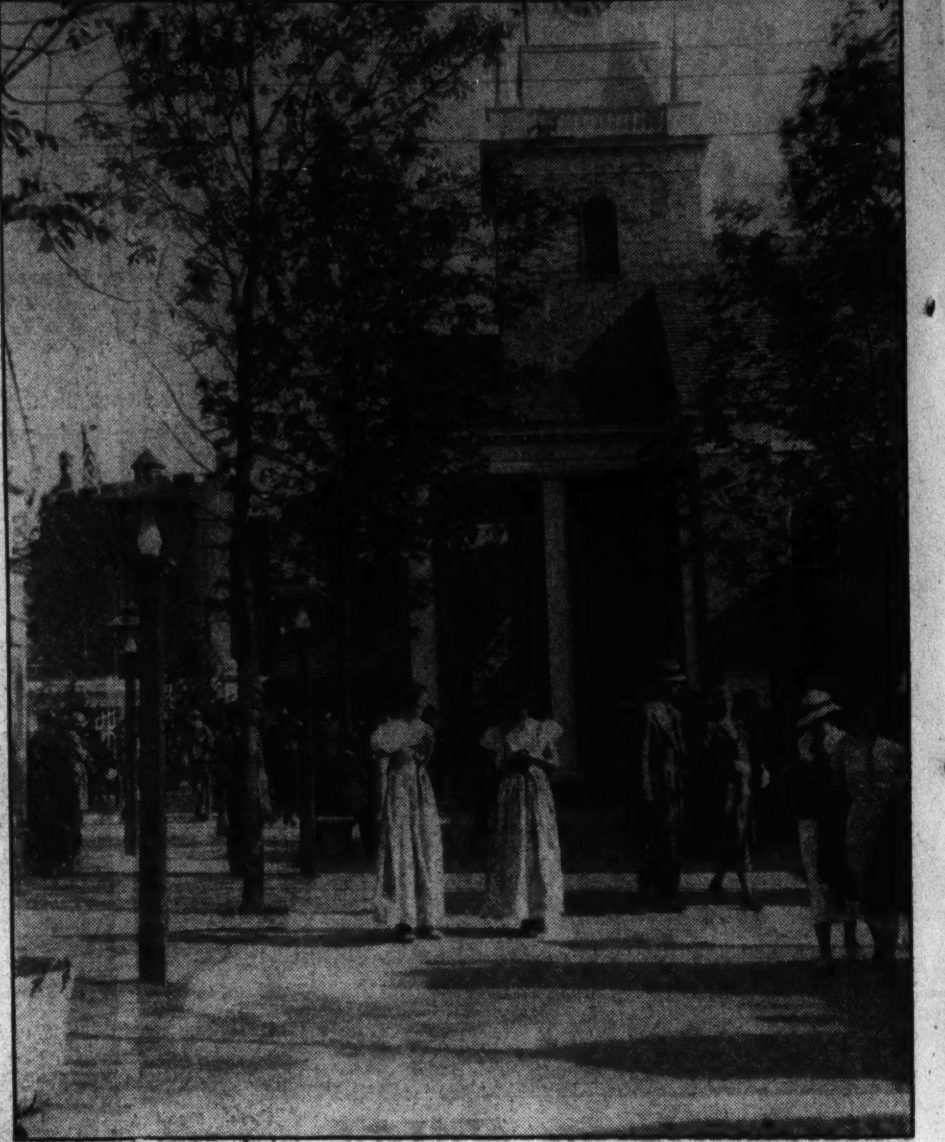
Business Boom Rides in Wake of Pilgrims to the World's Fair

Mr. Clapper, of The Post's National Bureau, while on a serious newspaper mission to the Middle West, stopped off in the city that has cornered A Century of Progress all for itself, and drew some interesting conclusions about Chicago and the fair. If what he saw was correct, this Nation should perhaps go in for a few more "centuries of progress" with as little delay as possible. And, in fact, imitations of the Chicago method of fighting the depression are in evidence everywhere.





The World's Fair is a first class depression combatter —'and blues chaser. The huge crowd above in the lagoon ampitheater are but a handful out of the millions who have spent their money in Chicago in the past year. In the circle are high wire artists, showing the crowd a good time.

Machine Age Mecca Has Drawn Millions

But It's Only One Example of the Gold-Getting Projects That Localities Everywhere Are Using to Combat Hard Times.

By Raymond Clapper.

Chicago.—During the recent—and not entirely bygone—lean years, any number of States and cities have cast about for new ways of coaxing dollars into circulation. One object was to scratch up badly needed tax money. Another was to drum up trade for local business houses.

Arkansas has restored racing and put the million-dollar Oak View track at Hot Springs back into action after 15 years of virtuous but unprofitable idleness. The Legislature has eased up divorce statutes to draw the trade of prospective grass widows, which makes business for boarding house keepers and the lawyers. Racing has started up again in West Virginia, where the Shenandoah Jockey Club at Charles Town has revived the ancient sport. Texas held a grand opening of its new track at Fort Worth, with no less a patron than Postmaster General Farley as the first man through the turnstile. Agitation is on in Maryland to set up a lottery in connection with the popular turf industries at Pimlico, Laurel, Bowie and Havre de Grace. Louisiana's Legislature is considering reviving the old scandal-spattered Louisiana lottery in renovated and more pleasantly perfumed form.

The motive in all of this is to stir up new revenues and draw trade. When Senator Capper rose and blocked the bill to establish racing in the District of Columbia, Mrs. John Hay Whitney's plans for a $1,000,000 track went into the wastebasket and hot dog stocks dropped sharply. Boxing is being legalized in localities and no wonder. The gate at the Baer-Carnera fight was $428,370.17, not including the expenditure for railroad fares, hotel rooms, ginger ale, cracked ice and the other items of the expense accounts turned in by several thousand men who went to New York on business that week.

Lottery Has Big Bootleg Trade.

In trying to get his lottery bill through Congress last session, Representative Edward A. Kenney, of New Jersey, said the bootleg trade in lottery tickets and numbers runs to $1,000,000,000 a year, much of it going out of the country when it might as well be kept at home for taxes and stimulation of local enterprise.

In other words, people don't seem interested in buying locomotives, putting up office buildings and otherwise patronizing heavy industries. If they won't go into serious business the thing to do is to see if they will spend money to have some fun and the experiments which have been made show the vote to be in the affirmative.

Most notable of all these experiments is the Chicago World's Fair. Started by a group of Chicago citizens who began back in 1927 to plan it as the crowning show of the new era of prosperity, it was caught in the depression, but its sponsors went ahead anyway in the face of advice to drop it. Unexpectedly it has turned out to be a record-breaker in performance, a major source of business revival in this Chicago area. Incidentally, it is a medium also for providing an unparalleled combination of entertainment and education which has broken the monotony of existence for millions. And it has given them an undreamed-of glimpse into what modern civilization can be if it learns how to make full use of the marvels of scientific invention assembled in the brilliantly painted geometrical buildings along the front of Lake Michigan.

The Century of Progress International Exposition has gone into its second year, the first time anything like that has ever happened. In its first year it was an unexpected prop under recovery efforts in the Middle West. President Roosevelt, himself, said so. Its effects reach far back into the country. Take the railroads. They brought 4,000,000 persons into Chicago. That is a lot of people—equal to moving in the entire populations of Arizona, Delaware, District of Columbia, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Utah, Vermont and Wyoming. Even Harry Hopkins hasn't suggested any transplanting jobs of that size. This tremendous travel meant using 25,000 extra coaches, employing 5,000 more railroad employes.

An even larger number, 5,000,000, came to the fair in their own automobiles and many others by bus and airplane. The number of new tires, the gallons of gasoline and oil, the chewing gum and sandwiches bought along the roadside hundreds of miles away by these twentieth century pilgrims as they journeyed to the machine-age Mecca can be easier imagined than ascertained. Nobody knows how many new suits of clothes, shoes for the children—who are the most enthusiastic fair visitors—new hats for the wife, and holiday cigars for dad have gone into the seeing of the fair by these millions.

As for Chicago business men and merchants, oh, boy! The gigantic Stevens Hotel, which had the look of an empty barn even during the Republican and Democratic National conventions in 1932, is running every elevator now. You can go into the lobby and be sure of encountering an old friend from a distant part of the country. The Palmer House bell boys, who got fat and sleek during the dull years, are worn down to a bone, lugging baggage. Chicago taxi drivers are so prosperous they're even getting polite. They always have change and what's more some of them will even thank you for a tip now.

Towns a Hundred Miles Away Benefit

Hot-Dog and Chewing-Gum Stock Soar Out of Sight in Communities Where They Were Never Known to Polite Society Before.

Mr. E. Ross Bartley, who served in Washington as secretary to Vice President Dawes, and now spends most of his time in the fair's administration building laying figures end to end for the fair's press agents, has it figured out that the average visitor last year spent $40 in Chicago during his three-day stay. The typical visitor dropped $4 of this on the fair grounds and the remainder around the city. Money goes further here than you might expect, for hotel and restaurant prices are about normal. You can even eat a good meal at ordinary prices on the fair grounds. Gyping, if any, is well concealed, and certainly the visitor who doesn't go out looking for trouble stands as good a chance of getting the right change back as he would in Washington's respectable F street shops.

Despite predictions that the Chicago fair's second year would be a failure, paid attendance thus far is ahead of last year. In the first 26 days of this season, up to Thursday night, attendance was 2,033,316, as compared with 1,939,884 for the same period last year. This year's records were jumped up by attendance of 407,000 school children on one single riotous day recently. Even so, the comparison is highly encouraging to the fair officials. This will be the first fair in this country to repay the sponsors, and considering that a good deal of overhead was paid off last year, the second season will have a far lighter load of expense to carry.

While it isn't exactly a free show, the visitor can for $21 visit every concession in the fair including a ride on every type of conveyance, an airplane flight and a cruise in the blimp at $3 each. But the visitor who wants to conserve his cash can pass up the Streets of Paris and the other pay concessions and after paying his 50 cents admission to the ground, spend the rest of his life looking at free exhibits which are, at least up until the cool of the evening, the most fascinating parts of this big show.

For instance, the first big building which is at the end of the Avenue of Flags, is the Science Building, the key exhibit of the fair, where they have managed to make science an entertainment instead of a classroom lesson. In the first place this building, as are all others at the fair, is a big geometrical structure, reflecting the spirit of an age of machinery with vast plane surfaces, walls of solid colors in brilliant reds, clear blues, orange, green, all modernist inside and out. At night they are lighted with rainbow colors of dazzling brightness.

Building in the Modern Spirit.

The architects decided that instead of building replicas of ancient Grecian and Roman buildings to house bright machinery manufacturing Fords and Chevrolets, they would attempt buildings designed to express the spirit of the modern era with the hope, no doubt, that some centuries hence promoters of other fairs would hark back and copy them as models of an American type, just as all previous fair promoters have gone to the classic age for their models. Some like it and some don't, but anyway it's different, and the modernistic chairs inside are deep cushioned, springy, and a lot more easing to "fair feet" than grandmother's horsehair-covered backbreakers.

In this Hall of Science the story of progress in geology, biology, mathematics, chemistry, physics and medicine are illustrated by moving apparatus, models and mechanical contrivances which the visitor may operate himself as an amateur Einstein. At the very entrance there is, however, a warning to the gullible—a row of perpetual motion machines which demonstrate the basic methods by which through the ages people have tried to get something for nothing, machines intended to turn out power without having any power put into them.

They would prove profitable study for a number of politicians, for they seem to work but don't. Each has a hidden motor inside without which the machine would not run except for a few minutes. Friction will stop the best of them. There's a thought for statesmen in those contrivances. One is a water pump which generates electricity to run the pump which is supposed in turn to run the generator.

With the perpetual motion misconceptions cleared away at the outset, science goes ahead with a free hand. You can see for your-

Plowing Under of Cotton Leaves Share Croppers to Starve

U. S. A. Indemnifies Owners of Plantations, Not Workers.

By Franklyn Waltman, jr.

For the economic, social, political and humanitarian aspects involved, perhaps the most interesting and important experiment in the Roosevelt "New Deal" program is the mighty effort now being made to reduce the production of cotton in order to raise its price.

Already a storm of controversy centers around the cotton crop reduction program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. This program not only looms as an issue over which political battles this fall and in the years to come will be fought, but it has aroused the attention of men and women who have no interest in the rise and fall of political parties but care only for improving the condition of their countrymen.

Sociologists from all sections have been attracted to study the cotton program by charges that it has brought in its wake "sweat shop" and slum conditions on the cotton plantations, conventionally pictured as pleasant and comfortable.

Economic Issue Extremely Grave.

In the field of political science, interest centers on the truth of contentions that if the Nation adheres to the policy of "narrow nationalism" on which it is embarked and into which it is trying to mould the cotton planter, "the economic and social problems of the South will become so aggravated as almost to be placed beyond satisfactory solution."

Republicans in Congress labeled the Bankhead cotton control act—the spearhead of the crop reduction drive—"regimentation" and have predicted that the Roosevelt "brain trust" soon will endeavor to apply similar measures to other major crops. From the Democratic side of the Senate came the charge that the Bankhead bill was the opening wedge for an abandonment of our Constitutional Government and the establishment of a Fascist state.

To all of which Administration spokesmen reply that conditions in the cotton fields are no worse than they have ever been and that the benefits already outweigh any injustice; that the salvation of the South depends on a reduction in the cotton crop and continued control of production; that in view of world conditions a course of economic nationalism by the United States is inevitable; that "the shoddies form of regimentation existed when cotton was 5 cents a pound" and that the whole program means that less labor on the part of all will lead to increased economic security for all.

The challenge to this last contention is probably the most sensational of all aspects of this experiment. It is contended that the crop reduction program is being used to impoverish further the tenants and share-croppers of the cotton South for the benefit of landlords and large plantation operators.

The proportion of tenantry in the South is higher than for the country as a whole because cotton requires a large amount of hand labor in its production. The Administration spokesmen hold that cotton always has been a "slave crop" and will continue to be until a machine is devised for picking the white balls of fiber.

There are three types of tenants in the South—the cash tenant, or renter of land; share tenants, who turn over to the land owner one-fourth of the crop for the use of the land, while they supply the equipment, seed, work stock and their own food; and share-croppers, who usually contribute nothing but their own labor.

Peter Molyneaux in his pamphlet "What Economic Nationalism Means to the South," published by the Foreign Policy Association, defines a share-cropper in the following language:

"A cropper is an absolutely propertyless farmer. He is a farmer, who not only owns no land, but who owns no tools and no work stock. He cultivates the land of a landlord, who provides him with tools, work stock, and seed, usually with rations for himself and family, and with a shack for shelter. He seldom sees any money, is constantly in debt and he and his family, frequently including the wife and all the children able to do anything at all, work for little more than the rations provided by the landlord or the landlord's credit."

The latter is called the "doodle book"—the line of credit which the cropper has at the general store in the name of the landlord. Croppers customarily refer to those things supplied by the landlord as "furnishings."

Plowing under a field of cotton—this is one of the answers to the shrinking world market for this foremost product of the South. It's a method that may save the owner of the cotton lands. But often it has driven the share cropper, or tenant farmer from his home, to starve. Yet such scenes as that picturec bove are typical of the South today.

Reduction of Crops Often Causes Eviction of Tenants.

Mr. Molyneaux estimated that in 1930 there were 729,200 cropper families in the cotton States, an increase of 35 per cent over the 1920 total. He divided this number between 338,800 white croppers and 390,400 Negro croppers. Together they represent about 3,650,000 men, women and children, Mr. Molyneaux explained.

Taking share-tenants and croppers together, the white families totaled 823,800, compared with 586-300 Negro families. Since there are approximately 2,000,000 cotton planters in the country, it will be seen from these figures that the majority are either share-tenants or croppers.

Thus when the AAA last year launched its program to pay $112,000,000 to cotton planters for plowing under one-fourth of their crops, or approximately 10,400,000 acres, the problem was complicated by the equities of share-tenants and share-croppers in the benefit payments. The benefits paid by the Government for cotton plowed up was intended to be divided according to the interests of landlord and tenant in the crop, but this was not specifically provided.

Croppers Suffering, Survey Reveals.

The League for Industrial Democracy assigned Prof. William Amberson, of Memphis, Tenn., to make a survey to determine the "social and economic consequences of the cotton acreage reduction program"—chiefly to the share-croppers.

Prof. Amberson and his associates made a detailed survey among 500 tenant and share-cropper families in Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi, and obtained further data from transient farm families "now resident in the City of Memphis as a result of eviction or dispossession from the land which they formerly cultivated."

"The share-cropping population is

Flying Flivver Will Soon Be the American Family Machine—Vidal

Big Project Encourages Cheap Planes

Government Will Order Small, Safe Types.

These Will Be Adaptable to Needs of Amateur Fliers.

By Eugene L. Vidal.
Director of Aeronautics,
United States Department of Commerce.

An entirely new type of airplane is being sought by the Department of Commerce for the use of its aeronautical inspectors. Invitations for bids specify that the airplane supplied shall feature simplicity and safety of operation, to a degree which probably can not be attained by any airplane now in production, as well as low maintenance and operating costs.

The craft which meets these specificatons will be inexpensive in operation. In fact, a leading reason for the department's decision to ask for bids on this type of airplane was the expectation that it would insure substantial economy in aircraft operations during the next fiscal year, and at the same time provide aircraft for all of the inspectors. The proposed planes will have substantially lower operating costs than have heretofore prevailed, and should actually result in an overall saving in allowances made to the inspectors for the operation of automobiles.

Comments on this invitation for bids have associated the proposal with the department's program for encouraging the introduction of a volume produced, low-priced airplane suitable for private ownership. The assumption that the two projects are related is entirely correct, but it would not be accurate to consider that the purchase by the Aeronautics Branch of these airplanes for inspectors will represent the introduction of the low-priced airplane. Rather, the purchase will constitute the first step in that direction, providing a design from which the advance to the low-priced airplane should be a simple and logical evolution.

Volume Production Is the Goal.

The low-priced airplane program, entered upon last winter, seeks to assist the aeronautics industry to undertake production of small airplanes on a volume basis which will result in a price low enough to be within reach of persons of moderate means. A circular memorandum sent to licensed pilots, mechanics and student pilots, asking if they would be interested in purchasing aircraft under these conditions brought a highly favorable response. Each person was asked also to state how many of his friends and acquaintances would be interested and the number of prospective purchasers reported in the replies to this question reached 60,000. Actually, the potential market is much larger than that. The questionnaire did not pretend to reach the many thousands of nonfliers who might find their opportunity to become airplane owners as a result of the program.

At the outset it was recognized that there would be difficulties in changing from custom manufacturing to quantity production. Under present conditions, the airplane is virtually hand made. Volume manufacture would entail the use of much machinery and new production methods. Such extensive changes would hardly be possible without some outside support for the industry.

Accordingly, we made application to the Public Works Administration for assistance and that agency, on December 28, 1933, announced an allotment of $500,000 to the Aeronautics Branch, Department of Commerce, for the development of an inexpensive, volume produced airplane model for private flying purposes. This amount has not yet been made available to the Aeronautics Branch for expenditure.

However, a definite beginning is represented by our invitation for bids on an airplane to be used by the department's aeronautical inspectors, despite the fact that this airplane probably could not immediately be put into production and offered at a low price for private ownership.

Some engineering development must precede the introduction of a real low-priced airplane. For wide popularity, the private owner airplane must be rugged, safe and simple. It should be as easy to operate as an automobile, eventually, and should be much closer to that objective at the outset than airplanes now commonly used.

Recent Progress Is Amazing.

In design of airline craft, progress has been amazing in the last two or three years. Their speed has been substantially increased, instruments, radio and accessories have been improved. But these developments are along another line from that desirable for the private owner airplane. Very high speed, delicate instruments calling for specialized skill and training, are essential for airline operation, particularly at night and under adverse weather conditions. They are desired, too, by private owners who are veteran pilots, but for the prospective owner of the projected low-priced airplane, who will be using his airplane only under favorable weather conditions, the utmost in simplicity is called for.

The requirements for the private owner are approximately those of the aeronautical inspectors. Inspectors need airplanes for their trips from airport to airport in the course of their duties examining aircraft and airmen for licenses, investigating violations of the regulations and accidents, and carrying out all of the functions of the inspection service that are performed in the field. In some respects, the airplane for an aeronautical inspector must give greater performance than the private-owner craft, but there is enough similarity that the achievements of designers and engineers with respect to the aeronautics branch airplanes can readily be carried over to a model which can be offered to the public at a price of less than $1,000.

The specifications sent to manufacturers set forth these requirements. Outstanding among features which the aeronautics branch is calling for in the design for official use are simplicity and safetly of operation. The requirements are that from the maximum nose up attitude which can be maintained with any and all settings of the horizontal stabilizer with full power, sudden loss of power and full upward movement of the elevator shall not cause the longitudinal axis of the plane to assume a nose-down attitude exceeding 10 degrees below the horizontal.

Also, with power on and power off and with any possible combination of settings of the horizontal stabilizer and elevator, full lateral control shall be provided and there shall be no tendency to side-slip or spin under these conditions. Further, the specifications set forth greater visibality requirements for pilot and passenger than the industry has heretofore been called upon to produce.

The planes are to have a landing speed of 35 and a top speed of not less than 110 miles per hour, and at cruising speeds the engines shall give 20 to 25 miles per gallon of fuel. They shall be capable of operating in and out of small areas and be sufficiently rugged as to be suitable for continuous flying duty.

Other specifications are a side by side or slightly staggered seating arrangement, with a closed or convertible cockpit; a cruising range of 300 miles against a 10-mile-per-hour head wind with pilot and passenger, and 40 pounds of baggage; all-metal fuselage; and dual controls with provision for readily making one set ineffective.

In taking off, the plane shall be capable of clearing an obstacle 35 feet high from a standing start 800 feet away. In landing, it shall be capable of being brought to a stop within 400 feet of a 35-foot obstacle which it has cleared, in a straight and fully controlled glide. On the ground, the craft shall be easily controllable and capable of being brought to a stop from a ground speed of 45 m. p. h. in 150 feet.

The engine may be cooled in any manner and may have any arrangement of cylinders, but shall have at least four cylinders. It may operate on the four-stroke or two-stroke cycle and it may or may not be geared. It shall not develop over 100 horsepower at rated speed. The engine will be required to pass all tests for a Department of Commerce approved type certificate.

The power plant shall require no servicing at less than 50-hour intervals, and shall be capable of operating on any good grade of aviation or automobile fuels and oils.

Some features to be incorporated in the department airplanes probably will not be required in the subsequent low-priced model. The engine in the inspectors' plane is to be 100 horsepower. Less power might be satisfactory for the private owner plane.

Also, the list of instruments called for includes fuel gauge, altimeter, oil pressure gauge, oil temperature gauge, compass, tachometer, bank and turn indicator, and air speed indicator. All of these may not be necessary as standard equipment in the production model. The Department does not anticipate that the airplane offered to the public will be a high performance airplane in terms of speed and maneuverability, but one that will excel in safety, simplicity and ruggedness.

Pleasure Ship For Amateurs.

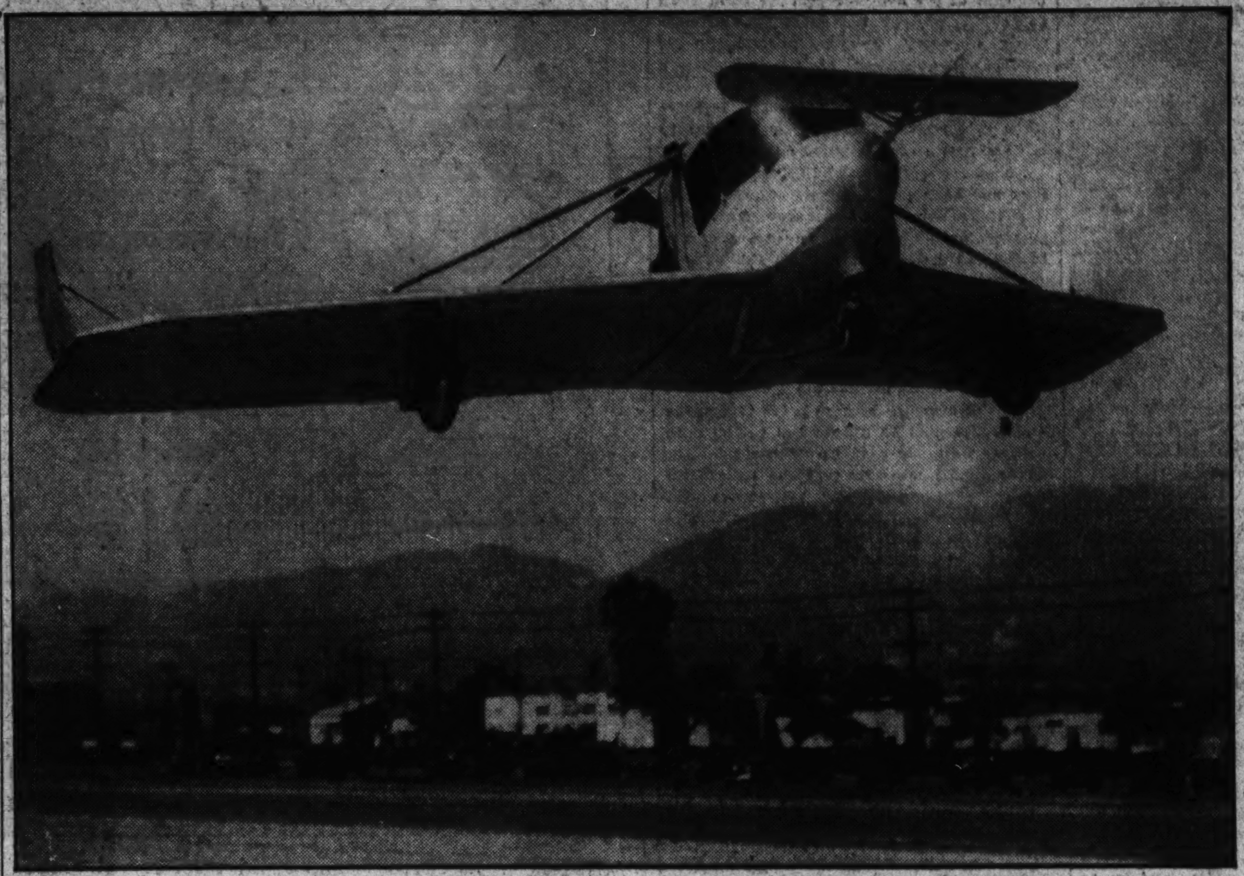
It will be an airplane which offers an opportunity for the general public to share in the pleasure of flying, and it will be definitely utilitarian as well, for many persons will find it possible to save much time by traveling in an airplane at 100 miles per hour, going by the most direct routes between cities and avoiding the traffic snarls that retard the progress of automobiles.

A beginner could learn to operate this type of aircraft in far less time than is now required for flight instruction because the landing and take-off requirements make for increased safety and ease of control.

Three things that are needed in an airplane for widespread use are low initial cost, low operating cost and utter simplicity of operation. All of these are taken into account in the specifications for the inspectors' airplanes.

Closely related to the low priced airplane project is the program of airport development and air marking initiated by the Aeronautics Branch and carried out by the Civil Works Administration. Last November arrangements were made for the use of unemployed labor and material for construction of landing fields. Since that time, some 1,040 projects have been undertaken, of which about 60 per cent represent new landing fields and 40 per cent improvement of existing airports.

Thus, the department is endeavoring both to provide an airplane for the private owner and to make available ground facilities for his use. Interest in private flying already is reviving. In a short time, this phase of aeronautics will take on a new importance and America will become a nation of pilots.



In the very shortest time now, Americans of moderate means may be flying about in their "flivver" planes. The new policy of the Aeronautics Division of the Department of Commerce encourages the manufacture on a mass production scale of tiny, safe, easy-to-manage planes. Above are three of the latest small plane models: Upper left, a Fairchild 24, with 90 h. p. Cirrus engine; upper right, a new plane of the Taylor Aircraft Co., and center, the "Whatsit," guaranteed not to nose-dive or tailspin, invented by Waldo D. Waterman, of Glendale, Calif.

cal aviation, and who, through their own knowledge, training, and experience on staff work and general organization of the Army, as well as the other branches of the service, are better fitted, in my experience, to develop Army aviation than the nonflying members of the general staff.

"We can not efficiently operate under the existing system and methods. We can not operate at a speed of four miles an hour, the speed of the Infantry. We are now operating in the air at a speed of 200 miles an hour. Today, the psychology of the development of aviation requires that all other military organizations must increase their speed or operations, and the rest of the Army must be reorganized with this in view, if it ever expects to effectively use the modern military weapons of war."

It is evident that Foulois has not minced his words. He has "spoken his piece" without fear. In the air, or before a Congressional committee, determined to get his scalp, Foulois doesn't know the meaning of the word fear.

His record proves that. Benny Foulois started to work for Uncle Sam July 7, 1898, as an enlisted man in Company G of the First United States Engineers. He rose through the ranks and on February 2, 1901, passed a milestone in his life. He gained a commission and held the same grade as the fortunate young men who attended West Point. It is somewhat significant to note that he was not one of these.

On the first cross-country trip made in a "flying" machine in 1909 he was the observer with Orville Wright. The next year he was ordered to San Antonio, Tex., in charge of the first airplane owned by the Army. He became the original Army Air Corps.

With less than one hour's instruction he set out to teach himself to fly. He learned the fundamentals of aviation by the trial and error method. And in addition to improving his own flying ability he improved the vehicle. He designed more than a score of improvements for the old machine which were later incorporated into improved airplanes. The rest of his record is comparatively prosaic. He simply rose, to the top.

Today at 55 he stands on the threshold of a remarkable career, seriously accused, yet smilingly confident, with no fear in his heart of the outcome.

While his case is held in abeyance pending the report of a board headed by former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker he writes his answer to the charges of the Congressional committee.

He knows that fundamentally if he is to be a victim it will be of two things, politics and aviation; politics because it is what it is, and aviation because it is a new fast industry constantly involved in controversy, a business which after all is said, whether you believe in their policies or not, has heaped criticism in return for service on the Browns, the Mitchells and others.

If ever there were a champion batter that stood with two strikes on him and as he smilingly awaited the third fast ball pointed to a spot in right field where he would hit the ball, that man is "Benny" Foulois.

Immense Dragnet Scrapes Sea for Dangers to Ships

By Ira L. Smith.

Unique and thorough methods used by the Federal Government to chart or remove hidden dangers to shipping in coastal waters of the United States virtually preclude a disaster such as overtook the 14,000-ton German liner Dresden last week from occurring near our shores.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey conducts operations designed to make navigators aware of the presence of submerged rocks and obstacles such as that which ripped into the Dresden's hull and placed the lives of 1,000 persons in jeopardy.

One phase of these operations, that of dragging great lengths of wire—some of them reaching a distance of more than 4 miles—through the water, verges on the spectacular, both in method and results.

From the rock-infested waters of the Maine Coast, all the way down the Atlantic Coast, around to the Pacific and up to the northernmost ship passages off Alaska, this wire-drag work has been advanced with utmost patience and care by crews of Coast and Geodetic Survey ships. Augmenting results of the constant chartings of known obstacles, by revealing the presence of previously unknown dangers, this work serves to provide major assurance to owners, crews and passengers of vessels operating in our coastal waters.

This unique "fishing" is tinged with all the romance that centers in activities dealing with wrecks of ships that long since disappeared from view. Frequently, the long wire, trailed along the ocean bed between two ships that move at uniform speed, catches on these submerged hulls which lie close enough to the surface to be dangerous but which defy detection by ordinary sounding methods.

Not only ships, but sunken airplanes which have plugged into coastal waters have been located by the survey crews.

In one instance, after two Harvard students left for a pleasure flight from the Boston municipal airport, their plane was seen to dive into the harbor waters off Bass Rocks. Protracted searches failed to locate the submerged plane and an appeal then was made to the Coast and Geodetic Survey to bring its wire drag apparatus into action.

The ocean floor around Bass Rocks presents difficulties in locating any particular object, as it is covered by projecting rocks extending several feet above the generally hard bottom. After a comparatively short search, the wire drag caught on the wrecked airplane and revealed its location.

This incident is cited by Coast and Geodetic Survey officials to show ability of the wire drag to find comparatively small objects which rest on the ocean bottom and in the path followed by vessels that might be wrecked if the obstacles were not found and removed.

"The problem of finding and locating these submerged dangers," states Capt. G. T. Rude, chief of the Survey's division of hydrography and topography, "has also been made more acute by the development of the submarine, the safe navigation of which, when submerged, depends upon a knowledge of the danger at far greater depths than ever was anticipated in earlier days.

"The Coast and Geodetic Survey began development of the wire drag in 1904 and has continned to use it to the present time in investigating suspected areas. The first apparatus was developed by the Survey from the drag used long ago by the Army Engineer Corps on the Great Lakes. That device, in turn, represented an improvement of the rope sweep introduced by the French.

"The first step in the development of the method by the Survey consisted of a pipe carried at a moderate depth under the surveying vessel. After that system had been employed along the New England coast and also in the vicinity of Key West and Puerto Rico for several years, the plan of using a wire supported at intervals by buoys was adopted from the Army Engineers.

"Briefly, the drag consists of a horizontal wire maintained at any desired depth below the surface by an arrangement of weights and adjustment upright cables which extend up to small buoys on the surface. The apparatus is towed by two launches, one at each end. The horizontal wire will catch as the drag passes through the water and thus will indicate the location of any obstruction which extends above a plane at the depth determined by the setting of the horizontal wire.

"The exact location of the obstruction having thus been found, the least depth on it can be determined by 'feeling' with a lead-line from a small boat."

Many improvements have been made as the use of wire drags has been extended. The most recent development is a drag 24,000 feet long The effectiveness of the improved drag, officials declare, is indicated by the fact that in the 4,000 square miles of water area dragged by the survey, some 3,500 uncharted obstructions have been discovered. Glass 'Sandwich' Imitates Exquisite Tones of Marble

By Harry Goldsmith.

Pick any slab of natural marble. Take a photograph of it. Print the film on a sheet of transparent celluloid. Then seal the sheet between two pieces of polished glass. And you have done what research workers have recently succeeded in doing—duplicateing Nature's choicest building material—"quarry" marble.

This broadly is the way research workers have torn asunder the bonds which held men slaves to the marble quarries for hundreds of years. Today marble can be "quarried" in the chemical laboratory.

Already this man-made marble is being introduced in the building arts, particularly for interior and exterior decorating. Some of those modern, good looking soda and liquor bars, those up-to-date eye-catching store and building fronts, are constructed from slabs of this product.

When nature produced marble, she never created a more choice, more beautiful building material, architects will tell you. But nature was somewhat scarce with her highest grades of marble. And then by the time man cut it out of the earth and put it into shape so that architects and builders could use it—it had become relatively expensive.

That's why research workers put their heads together to find out some way of duplicating nature's product. The research men did a strange thing. They resorted to the unusual combination of photography, pyroxylin plastics (known as celluloid or pyralin to us), and glass for a solution to the problem. Out of this conglomeration sprung the idea of photographing the gorgeous coloring and grained effects of natural marble on a transparent sheet of celluloid and then sealing the sheet between two pieces of glass. From this idea was developed the practical manufacture of artificial marble, claimed by experts to duplicate nature's product faithfully in beauty and to be superior to it in many ways.

The manufacturing process, which has been patented, is indeed an ingenious one. First a choice slab of marble which it is desired to duplicate is photographed on a film, the exact design and color being reproduced by means of color filters, much like those used in ordinary color photography. This is then transferred to a transparent sheet of celluloid, thus giving in detail and preserving the true depths and coloring of the slab of natural marble. By spraying the back of this sheet, opaque or translucent color may be obtained. There are Verdi green, Verdi antique, red Lavonto, black and gold and many other colors to pick from.

Very important is the next step. Here the sheet with its marble-like impression is sealed between two sheets of glass by heat and pressure. The result is a composite product looking exactly like marble.

It is very durable and inexpensive, being 35 to 50 per cent cheaper than natural marble. Another great advantage is that the grains of one slab of this man-made product can be easily matched with those of another. On wall or floor, two pieces can be laid side by side and matched perfectly. It's pretty difficult and expensive to do this with natural marble.

In the home of the future we may expect to see shower bath rooms, wall panelings, ceilings and floors of this material. Gorgeous decorative effects will be revealed by its use with indirect lighting. Formed into almost any shape and design, there is no telling what architectural gems the builder and the interior decorator may produce with the new man-made marble.

Control Of Industry.

If a private banker were to tell every borrower how to manage his business, what to pay his employes and with whom to deal, his arrogation of power would be deeply resented. Yet whenever a Government enters the banking business, there is great danger that this kind of dictatorial control over industry will result.

Indeed, a complete divorce of public lending functions from political activities is practically impossible. For that reason the entry of the RFC into the business of providing direct loans for industry has aroused serious misgivings. The regulations just issued, announcing the conditions under which such loans will be made, tend to confirm these fears.

The RFC has attached numerous conditions to the grant of loans, designed to guarantee support of the recovery program. Each applicant must prove that he is complying with the provisions of a code, or if there is no code, he must show that he has signed the President's reemployment agreement. Furthermore, he must not use the proceeds of the loan to buy goods from any concern that has failed to comply with the codes or the general agreement.

Presumably this means that a company in the position of Ford will be subject to a limited boycott. However, that does not exhaust the list of conditions attached to these loans. They are made primarily to supply working capital, and the uses to which they may be put are carefully defined. Corporate dividends may not be paid while any portion of a loan is outstanding, and salaries must be reasonable.

Since a solvent borrower will not be disposed to sell his independence for the sake of obtaining an RFC loan, the immediate damage done by these restrictive requirements is not likely to be great. But the rulings reveal the dangers that threaten industry from the steady encroachment of the Government upon the field of private banking. If, as alleged, the main purpose of the loans to industry act is to fill a gap in the credit structure, and supply intermediate credits to concerns that are able to use funds profitably, existing financing agencies should be employed.

Provision has already been made for an extension of intermediate loans through the Federal Reserve system. It is doubtful whether there is any great need for this type of loan, but at least there is no harm in making advances on a conservative basis, without attaching entangling and irrelevant conditions. The RFC plan, however, provides a kind of public loan agency that defeats the ostensible purpose of the legislation. It makes considerations of safety subservient to the attainment of a far-reaching State control of industry.

Tusitala.

Nantucket, New Bedford, Boston, Bath, even tiny Cranberry Island used to send tall-masted ships to all the far corners of the seven seas. With their canvas billowing or torn to shreds in battles off old Cape Stiff, they filled Americans with pride, and around them glowed an aura of romance that even Jack London with his brutal Sea Wolf never could drive away. They were things of beauty, but not a joy forever, for now their time is long past.

Fast though they may have been, as Alan Villiers proves in his accounts of the grain races that still go on, they were neither fast nor certain enough to withstand the encroachment of progress. And so, one by one, they dropped below the horizon, never to be seen again. Now they are truly things of romance, their places taken by huge machines that move across the oceans with the precision of steam trains, and only occasionally, like the Dresden, meet with sudden disaster and death.

There are hardly any left. One, kept in service by a romantic business man who is seemingly too busy ever to throw off his cares and sail over the horizon on his beautiful white bird, is Tusitala. That is the South Sea word for "Story Teller" which the Samoans long ago gave to Robert Louis Stevenson. Tusitala is not as old as some, crumbling now on the East Boston or Hoboken mudflats, too broken, too weary, to be used even as barges for the coastwise carrying of coal. James A. Farrell, of U. S. Steel has kept her in service, running regularly from New York to Hawaii, carrying ammonium sulphate out and bales of sugar back. Twice every year she did that, and sometimes the weather served so well that she made money for the steel magnate who had bought her because, as he said, "I love sailing ships and she is one of the last of her kind."

Now Tusitala is again going to hear the creaking of blocks, the slatting of halyards, the swish of water as her sharp bow slices the ocean before her; she's going to taste salt again. As the plaything of a rich man she will be saved the ignominy of dying on a forgotten beach. Tusitala, protege of wealth, will look tall and white and proud as she hits the gentle winds of the Pacific. Wonder if she'll give a thought to her fallen sisters, crumbling in the mud of backwaters? They were proud too, once, when they were working their heads off to bring the money that built the huge steamships that swept sail into the limbo of all good things.

Power—And Responsibility.

Senator Dickinson, of Iowa, asserts that the second session of the Seventy-third Congress has provided for expenditures and authorizations against the Treasury totaling about $14,000,000,000. This figure is somewhat below the careful estimates of Representative Taber, of the House Appropriations Committee, who places the maximum obligations that may be incurred under the legislation voted during the last session at approximately $17,600,000,000. The grand total of outlays, loans and contingent liabilities authorized by the outgoing Congress during both sessions he estimates at $22,215,000,000.

By far the greater part of the sum appropriated during the second session represents emergency outlays, guarantees on home and farm mortgages, mortgage insurance and various contingent liabilities that may be incurred by Government lending agencies. Nobody knows to what extent the discretionary spending and borrowing powers lodged in the hands of the Executive will be utilized. If the President were to exercise to the full the powers conferred upon him, it is evident that the public debt would soon approach the $50,000,000,000 mark, including in this total liabilities assumed by Government corporations.

The interest charges represented by any such debt total (even after allowance for offsetting returns on repayable loans) would represent a heavy recurrent budgetary item that future generations of taxpayers would have to bear. The tax experts now engaged in devising new methods of raising revenue are facing a task that grows steadily more difficult. Even if the effort to "prime the pump" by pouring out cash and credit from the Federal Treasury should have the hoped-for result of stimulating business activity, the cost of the experiment will remain as a permanent drain upon industry. In fact, as the debt soars upward, confidence tends steadily to wane.

While the situation is undoubtedly serious, it may not prove to be as bad as the preliminary showing indicates, provided the Administration now pursues a cautious course. Executive discretionary powers can be used to check unwise outlays and losses can be avoided by following conservative lending and guarantee policies. It is especially necessary to institute safeguards against the light-hearted assumption of contingent liabilities that may later become an intolerable burden upon the country's taxpayers.

The mere fact that nobody knows, or can know, how much will be spent or borrowed as a result of the legislation voted by the Seventy-third Congress is conclusive evidence that Congress has surrendered to the Executive the most important power that a legislative body possesses—control over the public purse. It is useless to cry over spilt milk, but it is not too late to emphasize the tremendous responsibility now resting on the President to save the country from the extreme consequences of the spending orgy in which the last Congress indulged.

Advice To A Novice.

Bernard Baruch will not be the first American tycoon to prepare his own autobiography, although our great captains of industry and finance have more often preferred to hire assiduous Boswells than to succumb personally to the lure of creative writing.

Charles Francis Adams, jr., of Union Pacific fame, was one exception; P. T. Barnum, perhaps more typically American, was another. Both their books, even today, make excellent reading. Andrew Carnegie, of course, wrote his autobiography in 1910. Do any except Marxian research workers read it today?

James Stillman, however, turned over the task of telling his life story to the amiable and uncritical Anna Robeson Burr. Neither of the Morgans has seen fit to dictate a detailed examination of his career for the benefit of the historians. The Vanderbilts, too, have been singularly reticent. The elder Rockefeller might have written an amazingly revelatory self-portrait, but his "Random Reminiscences" are hardly that. The scintillating Jubilee Jim Fisk left behind no imperishable manuscript and Henry C. Frick, of Homestead fame, gave the task of his glorification to George B. Mc. Harvey.

Most of the industrial barons and the mighty of Wall street, especially in the early days, left the telling of their life romances to the conservative Ida M. Tarbell (after she had foresworn muckraking), or, without knowing it, to that penetrating evolutionary Socialist, Gustavus Myers. Even those who, like Mr. Baruch, had something worth while to say because of the wide sweep of their interests, seldom divulged with literary candor their innermost thoughts.

If he cares to Mr. Baruch can tell us a fascinating story. "There'll be no ghost writing," he said, revealing his intention to write his memoirs. "I'll do it myself. It may not be great literature, but at least it will be my own." If he unburdens himself and is candid, his efforts may much more nearly be the stuff of literature than would be the case if polished with rhetorical fervor by that curse of the historian, the official biographer or ghost.

For Baruch's life began in the South of reconstruction days. And the path he followed swept up and out until it crossed and left behind those of many who started far ahead. He has been through panics. He has overshadowed Presidents. But above all he has thought and lived from a philosophy. No matter how he writes, if he remembers that Horatio Alger is no longer good copy, the fundamental interest of his book will transcend its style. If he drops self-consciousness and sticks to that history of which he has been so dominant a part, and if he refuses to intrude a moral to adorn his tale, the "Autobiography of Bernard Baruch" will find not merely avid readers. It will also be a vital contribution to the history of a vital era.

The Cotton Experiment.

Inauguration of the Bankhead act for the control of cotton production comes in the middle of the growing season. Several weeks have been required to work out quotas for the States and counties. Considerable time will now be required to make allotments to approximately 2,000,000 farmers who cultivate this plant in commercial quantites. In other words, growers may not know how much cotton they will be permitted to sell (without paying an exorbitant tax) until the approach of harvest.

Nevertheless, enactment of the Bankhead bill appeared certain at the beginning of the planting season, and growers were warned to restrict their crops to 60 per cent of the five-year average from 1928 to 1932. Indeed an overwhelming majority of cotton growers specifically requested inauguration of the compulsory control plan. It will be interesting, therefore, to note the reaction of the farmers when this restraint upon their freedom to sell their own crop begins to take effect.

No official estimate of this year's cotton crop has been made as yet. Consequently it is impossible to forecast how much surplus cotton (the amount in excess of the 10,460,251 bales that will be tax exempt under the Bankhead act) will be produced. The average annual output is approximately 14,600,000 bales. But 93 per cent of all the growers had signed acreage reduction contracts with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration before the Bankhead measure became law. It was the aim of the plan to reduce the cotton crop this year 40 per cent below the five-year average. Adjustments required by the individual quotas now being worked out will, therefore, fall chiefly upon the noncooperating planters.

It would seem particularly difficult for the Secretary of Agriculture to avoid imposition of hardships upon share croppers. If allotments are made on the basis of farming units, the land owner will be in a position to dispose of his share of the crop tax free, while tenants and share croppers will be left holding the surplus. Obviously, they will not be able to store their cotton and hold it until next year. There will be a strong tendency to dump such cotton on the market regardless of the AAA's 50 per cent tax. This situation presents a formidable challenge to Secretary Wallace.

One of the most positive factors in this experiment is the willingness of most farmers to accept it. The fact that Secretary Wallace, to whom these vast dictatorial powers over the cotton growing industry have been given was personally opposed to the measure, while a great majority of farmers favored it, is doubtless a hopeful sign. But when some farmers actually find the Government forbidding (under penalty of exorbitant taxes) the sale of cotton they have worked hard to produce, what will their attitude be? In many respects this application of bureaucracy to cotton growing promises to be the most far-reaching test of social reactions since prohibition.

Sculptural Symbolism.

It is difficult to know to whom the lion's share of sympathy should go—to Reuben Nakian, the sculptor who has been trying to keep Gen. Johnson still long enough to limn his features, or to Gen. Johnson, who has hardly been able to turn a corner since early in May without the ubiquitous sculptor popping up with scalpel and clay. The harried artist says of the hurried general that trying to catch his likeness is like trying to catch a cannonball in flight. He thus reveals not only the characteristics of the worthy general, but also of the organization which he heads.

If he worked ten years, says Mr. Nakian, he would get ten different portraits. And while none would be alike, all would be like Gen. Johnson. This, too, seems a statement applicable elsewhere than to the Chief Eagle. Far more than a dozen artists have tried to portray the meaning of the New Deal and the portraits have all been different. An observing public, somewhat bewildered, has looked at the sketches with tolerance, perhaps remembering the apocryphal critic who said that while he didn't know much about art, he knew what he liked.

Every era has one man which people like to think best symbolizes its peculiar psychology. Mr. Nakian's many-angled bust of Gen. Johnson may yet prove perfect for our own time. Looked at from ten different viewpoints, the same thing looks like something else again. Perhaps we have stretched the point a bit in interpreting the sculptor's observation. But it does seem that in describing the kaleidoscopic characteristics of Gen. Johnson, the artist drew also a rather neat sketch of the New Deal.

The G. O. P. is in such desperate circumstances that we shouldn't be surprised if it tried to secure an appropriation from the Government's rehabilitation fund.

Mary Pickford says she won't run for Congress. We won't either, but we'd stand a fat chance getting our name in the public prints by saying so.

Speaking of quintuplets, we don't think so much of a five-in-one-year plan.

Theme Songs.

The Post Impressionist

The Minnesingers.

Postoffice, Sunday.

SOME scoffer said of the Holy Roman Empire that it was not holy, or Roman, or an Empire. But not even Voltaire ever said of its minnesingers that those makers of love-songs weren't poets—and love, we know, laughs at even Yale-locksmiths. So minnesingers we call the best of those writers of love-lyrics whose solos—would they were duets!—last week shattered the locks of the Post-Impressionist's post-pouches.

* * * *

And we begin with Washingtonian Earl Boteler's untitled couplets that carry Shropshire into the District of Columbia:

All summer long I've wished I knew
Why I kept on remembering you:

Why candlelight and a ragged star
And a winding path that ran too far—

Why a vendor's flowers damp and sweet,
And rain-drenched leaves in a sprig-filled street—

Can make me start in expectancy . . .
Do you have trouble forgetting—me?

* * * *

There's hope in that. A less sanguine lover is Edward Peale, when he sings "Was It for This?"

Was it for this we offered all we had—
To kiss and part and not feel even sad?
Was it for this we bared our very heart
Beneath the lash of too much joy, the smart
Of fear lest some day we might prove remiss
Unmeaningly? . . . Was it for this?

Loved we so much that we wore out the power
To feel love's touch beyond one quivering hour?
Loved we so much in offering everything
To love, that love has no more force to cling
To memory, even the desperate strength to clutch
A floating spar? . . . Loved we so much?

* * * *

In which mood, or much which mood, writes also Louis How. For he, too, addresses "The Distant Beloved".

The great white clouds above the garden-tower
Remain there hour after hour,
As you remain, refusing to depart,
Deep in my heart.

When they are gone, and cold stars take their place;
It is too dark to see your face—
If it were here. Dear memories instead
I take to bed.

The clouds are back there every afternoon;
The same, but different; as a tune,
According to which human voices sing,
Is a new thing.

Just as you, springlike one, are always fresh,
Whom I see never in the flesh;
Who will not go away; whom I—ah, no!—
Would not let go.

As inaccessible as cloud or star,
As lovely, you, beloved are;
And were, indeed, when sometimes you brought near
Great bliss and fear.

Now you might even die and I not know,
Unless chance rumors told me so,
Yet still remain to gaze at far away
By night and day:

For we are deep within as heaven is high,
And till when I myself shall die,
You will love on, like clouds and stars above,
Which I so love.

* * * *

Whereupon, Amos Ames, contributing this "Contralto's Song," reminds us that it used to be more the women than the men who loved vainly:

Sky with a moony cloud bright on the southern brim—
I cry aloud in my bed, what do I know of him?
Where is he now tonight who left me tonight with a kiss?
Sky, you are snowy bright, but you can not tell me this.
No one can tell, and I can never know, for his mouth
Forever breeds a kiss, and his heart forever breeds a lie.
And I can only lie and cry
And gaze at the moon sky
And wonder why
My heart is given to him whose every word is untrue . . .
O sky, I cry in vain, crying to him or you!

Well, Tennyson thought it better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all, and Andrew Evans thinks so, too—or was thinking so when he wrote "Quandary:"

I.

Her eyes were withered in her head;
  Her nervous fingers seemed to clutch
A knife. Poor dear, her soul looked dead:
  "Because," she moaned, "I loved too much!"

II.

Crumpled he sat, until the sun
  Had set. He tried to walk, and fell.
He whimpered, heard by everyone,
  And marked by none: "I loved too well."

III.

Their courteous phrases rang like curses;
  Chains attached their wrists well-gloved;
Heavy were their hearts and purses.
  "We," they murmured, "never loved!"

One From One Leaves Two.

Higgledy piggledy, my black hen,
She lays eggs for gentlemen.
Gentlemen come every day
To count what my black hen doth lay.
If perchance she lays too many
They fine my hen a pretty penny;
If perchance she fails to lay,
The gentlemen a bonus pay.

Mumbledy pumbledy, my red cow,
She's cooperating now.
At first she didn't understand
That milk production must be planned;
She didn't understand at first
She either had to plan or burst,
But now the Government reports
She's giving pints instead of quarts.

Fiddle-de-dee, my next-door neighbors,
They are giggling at their labors.
First they plant the tiny seed,
Then they water, then they weed,
Then they hoe and prune and lop,
Then they raise a record crop,
Then they laugh their sides asunder
And plow the whole kaboodle under.

Abracadabra, thus we learn
The more you create, the less you earn,
The less you earn, the more you're given;
The less you lead, the more you're driven;
The more destroyed, the more they feed;
The more you pay, the more they need;
The more you earn, the less you keep,
And now I lay me down to sleep.

The Ghost in Court.

Years ago some skeptic said that the only sure way of proving the existence of ghosts was to produce one in court and submit it to cross-examination. Neither believers in nor lovers of ghost stories would accept so hard a test; but the hard-boiled may get what satisfaction they can from "the fact" that the witness box has never been visibly occupied by a specter. Turning over the pages of the Cornhill Magazine for June, you find a ghost obedient to legal process.

John Tregeagle, we are told, in Cornwall mythology, "is a greater figure even than King Arthur," much in Cornwall though not Cornish-born. John was a sixteenth century wicked steward, a character of old ballads. After his death, his master, the Lord of Lanhydrock, had to go to law about John's forgeries. Months were dawdled away. Finally "the defendant said he had one more witness to produce, and at his summons the ghost of John Tregeagle appeared. It could not have been an everyday occurrence for a ghost to appear in a court of law even in those days, but the magistrate managed to face the situation calmly and, assuming his most magisterial air, solemnly ordered the immediate removal of the ghost. The defendant was indignant and said it had been an exceedingly difficult task to call up his witness from the dead. He flatly refused to reverse the process and managed to slip away unseen."

So the defendant behaved like a ghost. John Tregeagle, who had behaved like a man, appeared for the benefit of the cowardly defendant, been thrown out of the court room ignominiously at the order of a magistrate either incredibly stupid or drunker than even the indulgent standards of the century permitted, was left without a return ticket, a tramp ghost. The devil, angry at his escape, wouldn't take him back. Fire-breathing hell-hounds pursued him. He has never got home.

The Week Abroad

By Andre Vuillet.

SMOKE that revealed a fire rose from the German horizon last week when one man, tall, aristocratic and daring, made no bones about what he thought of certain Nazi policies.

He criticized the muzzling of the press which, like "a safety valve," ought to inform the government of defects, abuses, graft and mistakes and should give "an open and honorable discussion that is not to be found at present in the German press." Warning the Nazis that a "fight on religion will release forces which even force cannot break," he decried the fallacy of a "pseudo-religious materialism."

The speaker also defended intellectuals on the ground that "the mind cannot be dismissed with the cry 'intellectuals'," and took up arms in favor of "mercy, freedom and equality before the courts."

Such a plea for freer criticism had not been heard in Germany since Hitler came into power. Half that much would have sent anyone to a concentration camp. But the man who spoke his mind so frankly could get away with it, for he was no less than Franz von Papen, Vice Chancellor of Germany and personal friend of President Paul von Hindenburg.

* * * *

THE Vice Chancellor belongs in that class of Prussian junkers which gave Germany the Hohenzollerns, Bismarck, Hindenburg, the general staff and, by and large, all those who helped make Germany what she was before the war. They were all tenacious and far-sighted organizers.

When Hitler's rise to premiership became inevitable, Col. von Papen was chosen to be the link between President von Hindenburg, the 86-year-old field marshal, and Dictator Hitler, the rising corporal. On him, the conservatives, who knew the value of timing in the game of politics, pinned their hopes of having the whole Nazi movement channeled along slower but safer methods.

Up to recently, it appeared that their hopes had fallen through. With Hitler's inexperienced lieutenants, Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, propaganda minister; Col. Roehm, head of the storm troops, and Theodore Habicht, Nazi commissar for Austria, the Nazi revolution was launched on a heroic and intransigent path.

But while these young leaders were selling their ideas on the open market with an apparently ever-increasing success, the old-timers Baron Constantin von Neurath, Foreign Affairs Minister, Gen. von Blomberg, head of the Reichswehr, and Col. von Papen, all with the moral backing of the old president, were working in the dark.

If they still possess that sense of timing that characterized their predecessors, their coming out all of a sudden with Von Papen's speech may be of considerable significance for the future of Germany. It may prove that they regard the situation as ripe for action.

The publication of Von Papen's address was forbidden by his cabinet colleague, Goebbels. Hitler, hero number one of 65,000,000 souls, was noncommittal. It is too early to say that he is at a crossroad. But it may not be long before he will have to choose between two philosophies, that of his more radical friends or that of venerable Hindenburg, hero number two of the German people.

In the first case, Hitler might be led into such intrepid adventures as would wreck the Nazi movement. In the second case, it is still to be seen whether, in the long run, the Prussian element will not prove the stronger and swallow up Hitler.

* * * *

SINCE there was no microphone around when Mussolini and Hitler recently met in the seclusion of an Italian villa, nothing has transpired of what they said except an "official communique."

It is remarkable that Hitler pledged himself to waive his claims upon Austria, that the two dictators agreed to oppose regional pacts of security and that Il Duce's commitments were of a very indefinite nature, merely promising to help Germany's return to the league by upholding her views on disarmament.

Speaking to spell-bound throngs, he said his ultimate goal was "the greatness of Italy * * * We will defend it by persuasion if possible, otherwise with the song of our machine guns. Nobody can stop the march of the Italian people."

A safe guess is that Mussolini will probably use the meeting for "the greatness of Italy." But if nobody can stop the march of the Italian people, where do they plan to go?

* * * *

FRANCE'S reply to the Hitler-Mussolini meeting was a visit by her Foreign Minister, Louis Barthou, to the Rumanian capital, where he was welcomed by the Rumanian cabinet and the foreign ministers of the two other little entente countries, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia.

The whole thing seems to have been a love-and-flower show, where they all wished one another to live long and in peace. The only way of securing such bliss was found to be through the deadly opposition to territorial revision and the return of the Hapsburg, the conclusion of regional pacts of security and the restoration of friendly relations with Soviet Russia.

In Budapest, the same day, the Hungarian Premier Goemboes, emphasizing he did not want war, declared: "Hungary will not negotiate with the Little Entente unless the latter recognizes, at least in principle, the necessity for revision of the peace treaties.

"The fountain of human unreason is inexhaustible," said Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, who proceeded to prove his contention by saying if Great Britain would retaliate as a measure against Germany's recent moratorium on her foreign debts, his country would have "no further intercourse with Britain."

‘Payment in Kind’ a Thorny Problem in War Debt Tangle

Hull’s Proposal to London Recalls Past Failure of “Swap” Plan.

Collection of Debtors’ Goods Means Cut in Our Exports.

By Leo Pasvolsky.

THE reference to “payments in kind,” contained in Secretary Hull’s reply to the British note on the war debts has a familiar ring to any one who has followed the tragic controversy over the vast intergovernmental obligations bequeathed by the World War. The idea that arrangements of this sort provide a way out of the difficulties which obstruct the transfer of wealth involved in large payments between treasuries has recurred over and over again in connection with the reparation liability of Germany. And the sad history of the repeated attempts to translate that idea into practical application is worth recalling now for the bearing which it has on the possibility of solving the problem of the war debts owed to the United States by means of payments in kind.

It has become a commonplace that debt payment between Treasuries involve a double program. First, the government of the debtor country must collect from its people, by way of taxation or in any other manner, the amount represented by the debt installment. Second, since the sums collected are in the domestic currency of the debtor country, they must be converted into the currency of the creditor country through international trade and service operations.

The second part of the process, the so-called transfer, is a joint responsibility of both the debtor and the creditor. It requires that the debtor country be able to furnish for export a volume of goods and services, exceeding its imports in value by the amount of the particular debt installment. But it also requires that the creditor country be willing to receive, directly or indirectly, a volume of imports exceeding its exports by the same amount.

Payments in kind arise when the debtor and the creditor countries are unwilling to leave the transfer of debt installments to the chances of trade movements. Accordingly, they enter into arrangements under which the creditor government agrees to receive, either directly for itself or indirectly for its citizens, from the debtor government certain goods and services, the value of which is credited toward the discharging of the debt. Arrangements of this sort obviously provide no relief for the budget of the debtor government, since it still has to pay its citizens for the goods and services required for delivery to the creditor. It does, however, tend to create foreign markets for the exports of the debtor country which might not be available otherwise.

IN the early period of reparation payments, the German government turned over to its creditors ships, machinery, properties owned abroad by German citizens, and other kinds of already existing wealth. Payments in kind of this sort proved to be highly unsatisfactory to both the debtor and the creditors. They gave rise to bitter controversies over valuation. The German government claimed that the value of its cessions aggregated $16,000,000,000. The Reparation Commission, acting for the creditors, valued the deliveries at only $2,500,000,000. Apart from certain patent discrepancies, the differences resulted mainly from the fact that the German estimate was arrived at by computing losses to the German economic system, while the creditors were counting only what the deliveries were worth to them. Moreover, large cessions of existing wealth had a crippling effect on the German economic system and rendered more difficult future annual payments.

The Dawes plan abolished cessions of existing wealth and provided for deliveries in kind only out of current production. During the five and a half years of its operation, more than 50 per cent of the payments made by Germany were transferred by means of such deliveries. The procedure involved was extremely simple. For example, a French importer—a government-owned railway or a private company—would arrange with a German exporter for the purchase of, let us say, a shipment of coal. After being approved by the reparation authorities, the deal would be carried out as under any other conditions, except that the French importer would pay the amount involved in francs to the French treasury, while the German exporter would be paid in marks by the German treasury through the agent general for reparations payments.

Closely akin to this procedure was another, which operated in the form of so-called reparation recovery levies, imposed by Great Britain, and, to some extent, by France.

Under this system, no special arrangements were made with respect to trade, but the creditor government imposed a 26 per cent tax on all imports from Germany, while the German government reimbursed the German exporters in marks.

Both of these systems of payment in kind aroused keen dissatisfaction in the creditor countries. Reparation recovery levies clearly curtailed Germany’s purchasing power for the exports of the countries imposing them and led to bitter protests on the part of the exporting industries of such countries. Deliveries in kind, to the extent that they did not represent purely additional imports into the creditor countries, had exactly the same effect. Finally, reparation payments in kind led to friction and conflicts among the creditor countries themselves. Receipts of reparation coal by France and Italy made it impossible for British coal exporters to sell in these markets. Receipts of machinery and equipment from Germany by the smaller creditors closed their markets for such products to the manufacturers of Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium.

All these frictions and dissatisfactions came to a head at the time of the reexamination of the reparation problem by the Young committee in 1929. A determined effort was made by the British representatives to abolish the whole system of payments in kind. Mainly because of Germany’s opposition to this, a compromise was finally reached, in accordance with which the portion of annual payments which could be transferred by means of deliveries in kind was to be gradually reduced, and such deliveries were to disappear altogether at the end of ten years. Even this compromise was finally accepted by Great Britain only after the Italian government promised to curtail its receipts of reparation coal and to purchase specified amounts of British coal.

TWO great lessons have been taught by more than a decade of attempts to collect reparations from Germany. Frst, that international debt payments, which are too large to be transferred by means of normally functioning trade and service operations, become an economically disruptive factor, harmful alike to the debtor and the creditor. And second, that special trade agreements for payments in kind create peculiar maladjustments of their own and fail entirely to offer a solution of the basic difficulties involved.

The reparation creditors of Germany have learned these lessons. They made formal acknowledgment of the fact when they signed the Lausanne agreement in the summer of 1932.

These lessons still remain to be learned by the people of the United States. What has happened in connection with the installments which fell due on June 15 shows clearly that payments in cash are not to be expected, except, perhaps, in very small amounts. Secretary Hull’s note records recognition of this on the part of the United States Government. As for payments in kind, it is safe to predict, in the light of the reparations experience, that attempts to make arrangements of this sort will not take us far—if what we are looking for is a way of collecting the debts and, at the same time, of restoring and maintaining our foreign trade.

It should be remembered in this connection that Great Britain, France and Italy are not only our three principal debtors, but are also among our largest foreign markets. Together they absorb more than one-quarter of our total exports. Moreover, we sell to them much more than we buy from them.

• • • •

IN the course of the depression, their purchases from us have decreased greatly in value. But our purchases from them have decreased even more. In 1929 our exports to the three countries combined amounted to 1,268 million dollars, and our imports from them to 618 millions. By 1932, our exports to them fell to 449 millions dollars, and our imports from them to 162 millions. In other words, their purchases from us decreased by 63 per cent, and our purchases from them diminished by 74 per cent. So greatly, in fact, have we curtailed our purchases from our debtors that our total imports from Great Britain in 1932 were, in value, less than one-half of the debt installments due that year, while our imports from France were about four-fifths of the debt payment due.

As it is, in order to regain our lost markets in these countries, we must increase our imports from them proportionately faster than our exports to them. The absorption of the proceeds of any portion of their sales to us into debt payments will mean a direct curtailment of our exports to them.

A triangular trade arrangement will not change this situation materially, but will add a new set of frictions. If our creditors were to purchase outside their frontiers the commodities turned over to us in the form of payments in kind, they would have to intensify their competition with our exporters in the countries in which the purchases are made. This could not fail to have adverse effects on our exports to such countries.

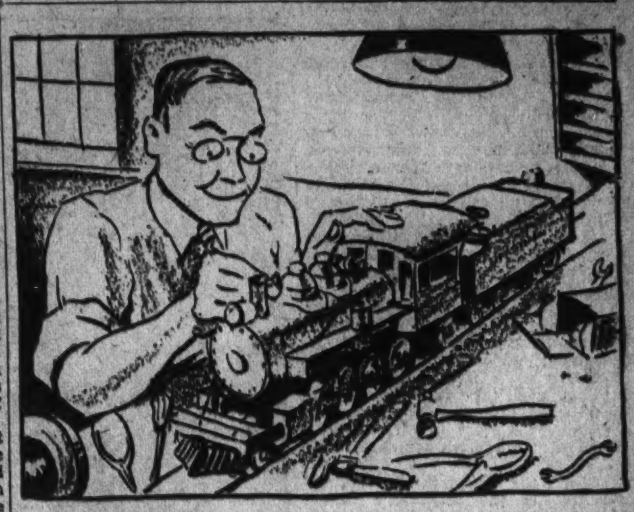
Model Train Hobby Takes Hold in U.S., Answering Lifelong Urge in Most of Us to Be “Railroaders”

They’re Serious About It, These Grownup Youngsters.

Some Make Them Big Enough to Haul Passengers.

By Paul H. Egolf.



A NEW hobby has taken hold in the United States and threatens to make as many widows as did golf, and transform supposedly serious-minded adults into small boys again for most of their leisure hours.

Psychologists will tell you that about six out of ten men at some time or other wanted to be railroad men and, while their dreams in most cases never were fulfilled, the urge lingers.

So grown-up men have taken to playing “choo-choo,” differing from Junior’s train-playing only in the elaborateness of their toys. And they don’t call them toy trains. They’re scale models, even though some of them are small enough to fit in the small boy’s corner of the basement recreation room. Others are large enough and sufficiently well equipped to give better service than many a train that’s getting by now as the real thing.

The fad has been in vogue in Europe since the turn of the century and still is going strong.

Scale models are built by proportioning their external parts to real railroads by a fixed factor of reduction. The internationally recognized scales range from one-eighth of an inch to the foot, up to 3 inches to the foot, the latter producing small monsters capable of hauling a few tons of adult passengers over the estates of their wealthy owners.

• • • •

THE most popular size in this country and England, where the hobby originated, is known as O-gauge, scaled one-quarter inch to the foot. This results in a model that is one-forty-eighth full size, and every 110 feet of track is a mile of scale. An express locomotive in this class measures approximately 3¾ inches in height, and 21 inches overall length. It will run in the average room provided curves are based on a circle of some 8 feet in diameter. To accomodate these curves, model lines usually hug the walls on shelves, instead of being built on tables, thus providing a maximum length of run not found in toy train installations.

Track for quarter-inch scale in other scales, is quite realistic. Nothing but a form or real rock ballast will suffice for the critical model enthusiast, and tiny ties, faithfully proportioned and spaced at proper distance, form the foundation for the road. On them is laid the model rail, which virtually reproduces the steel trails of commerce.

Not all model railroads are complete systems. Where the propulsive power is steam, the owner usually has so much to do to operate his iron colt that he confines himself to a simple track on which his pet can perambulate, snorting fiercely. Steam pressures of 125 pounds to the square inch are not unknown to these small demons.

Where one’s attention is not concentrated on a single locomotive, but on operating a complete railroad, electricity furnishes the motive power, because it is clean, and enables one man to make many trains do many things. The same low voltage used for toy electric trains are used for model work, but the efficiency of model engines with electric drive is a revelation.

A little quarter-inch scale freight locomotive has hauled a 172-pound man on a flat car on its track of one and one-quarter inch gauge.

Another small model astounded officials of the Baldwin Locomotive Works by repeatedly ascending a 33 per cent grade under its own power and adhesion, a feat impossible for a real engine.

• • • •

ELECTRICALLY driven model locomotives are known among model men as either “true-electric” type or “steam-outline.” The first reproduces actual electric engines, and dervies its power in some cases from a model overhead wire, or if patterned after some of the older electrified roads, from an outside third rail.

But the “steam-outline” engine of modern design has no third rail or overhead wire, for the running rails supply the current, on what is known as the “Two Rail System.” This innovation, based on toy train practice of decades ago, effects a simplification of labor and a great saving in cost for model lines and lessens complication at switches, yards and terminals.

Toy gadgets such as little doors that open and roofs that lift off to reveal car seats and furnished interiors are absent in real model trains. “Might as well play with doll houses,” snorted one model man, referring to the former.

But engines that haul loads equal to or in excess of those on the real railroads command the model enthusiast’s respect, and he likes such things as couplers that engage when you bang cars together, or uncouple at a distance at the touch of a button; he likes Pullman vestibule connections that fold to and fro as his miniature limited winds around reverse curves.

“Safety first” obtains on the model railroad as well, for no one likes to see two trains worth several hundred dollars each plough into each other. The careful model man instals positive-acting switch motors that lock securely in position. He buys automatic signals which prevent a train from telescoping one halted ahead by the simple process of killing all current to the second train if the signal registers “danger.” Only when the train ahead moves into the next block does the signal rise to “clear,” and the following train resumes it journey.

THE writer succumbed to the spell of the railroad at an early age, and after passing through a childish era of puzzling why his toy trains did not look like the real ones, set about trying to make cars that did. Such cars, when built, proved too heavy for the toy engines of that day to haul.

Going away to register for college, he came across a British magazine with a brief note on English model lines that showed them to be an established commercial enterprise. A letter overseas brought information that Britishers had been running model railroads for years past, and that English boys played with simplified, but correct models of their railways’ equipment.

Two English model locomotives were imported at once, but the lightness of English cars, as in real practice, was apparent, for the mechanisms in the engines, similar to American toy ones, proved inadequate for handling model American trains even of moderate weight.

So the “line-drive” was evolved, which placed the motor shaft longitudinally, housed in the superstructure of the engine and connected to the drivers by suitable gearing. The first test of an engine built this way, with a larger motor accommodated for the first time in O-gauge, resulted in such a delivery of strength that the light connecting rods were torn off under a heavy load.

Experiments followed in determining the proper strength of parts, and finally a patent was taken out covering the line-drive principle. Model men at that time were a secret group in this country, for no adult male cared to be “caught” playing with trains. When news of the line-drive was annouced in a pioneer model magazine, patent or no patent, every model enthusiast seized on the principle involved, and scale model railroading in America became a possibility for all.

Pinching Pennies.

If in its spending spree Congress paid no attention to the bunghole it kept its eye on the spigot. As a consequence of its refusal to appropriate $13,700 to the District of Columbia’s Board of Intermediate Sentence and Parole, this body is estopped from releasing on parole prisoners who are entitled under the law to this clemency.

The board has but one supervisory officer, a ridiculously inadequate provision for operation of the parole system in Washington. This one man must supervise now 260 cases. In the circumstances, parole must be denied in many instances in the coming year in which it should be granted, simply because the board has no officers to supervise them.

It would be better to abolish the system entirely than to compel it to limp along under conditions that make successful operation impossible. (From the Baltimore Sun.)

Letters to the Editor From Readers of The Post

“Middle Westerner” Doesn’t Care About Tugwell’s Looks; Wonders Where Food Is Coming From.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has given one a curious feeling this past week to read about the “mock trial” of Dr. Tugwell. The reports of the proceedings have sounded distinctly superficial.

I am spending a brief time in a farming and gardening section of Illinois, where gardeners and farmers are planting second and third rounds of things in the hope of having something edible ere summer ends. Some early plantings were frosted, others were scorched; now, prayers are being raised that out of the earth may come sustenance for next winter.

To these people the debonair appearance of a staff member of the Department of Agriculture means less than nothing. The psychology of staging such a superficial performance at this time would appear to be most doubtful. Citizens are wondering what stable qualities the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture has; but believe me, they care not a fig how he looks. Life and the problem of living it through are much too serious for the frothy aspects to be given much consideration. There is a feeling that somewhere there must be something firm to tie to. But where is it?

MIDDLE WESTERNER.

Washington.

P. S.—I have a profound respect for the constructive and preventive parts of the Department of Agriculture. But after seeing the plight of people whose only hope lies in what the earth yields them, one does not wonder about last year’s destruction of food, and the brain that directed it.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Tugwell did his best to differentiate between a “planned economy,” such as we had in Russia and have in Italy, and a “planning economy.” The philosophy underlying the two are wide apart. Yet many editorials and comment by by the brilliant (?) Wirt pretended to see no difference. It is going to take a lot of progressive education to offset the prejudices of the past and the opposition of the vested interests of today.

Tugwell said that you can blueprint a plan for a building or other static structure, but you can not blue-print a plan for a dynamic civilization. For all the time, until recently, a dweller in almost any civilization could die, and if returned to life an adult 100 years thereafter, the institutions of his society would have varied so little that he could not have realized much change. But the knowledge, science and invention of the last 50 years have, for example, made human labor in many industries unnecessary, and have abolished the need for many of our social institutions that we cling to.

Mr. Roosevelt likened his method of meeting the problems of a dynamic social order to the strategy of a quarter back of a football team, who, although starting with a mapped out general plan of attack, must change as the defense and style of play of his opponent indicates. We must also modify or rid ourselves of institutions whenever they no longer serve man adequately. Institutions were made for man, not man for institutions, as many of the Old Dealers would have us believe. We need more brains like Tugwell’s and more service for social, not selfish, welfare.

E. B. HENDERSON.

Falls Church, Va.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter on the editorial page of The Post June 13, signed L. L. K., is the best letter ever in The Post. I agree with every word in it and every close observer will agree that Supreme Energy, the power that some call God, is at work. And what an interesting study of the different skulls that held the brains of those that voted to put Tugwell in the Agricultural Department and those that voted against it. Any human that has made a close study of anatomy knew what to expect when, looking down on the Senate floor from the gallery. He also knew what was coming when he first gazed on Tugwell at the investigation last week. That powerful jaw in connection with that dangerous top head!

Power of the Press.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Is the newspaper that arm of the Lord that is going to work a work in our day that will fill history books a thousand years hence?

This thought was prompted by a communication I received from an aged citizen of Brooklyn (the City of Churches) who wrote me in regard to one of my newspaper letters: “There is a ray of light in the darkness by the fact that such earnest warnings can be presented to the public by the freedom of the press, which, either in Russia, Germany or Italy would not be permitted.”

This old father or old mother in Israel is right. The hope of America lies in the freedom of the press—not the ecclesiastical press. * * *, nor the periodical press, filled with stuffed and stodgy writings—but the trenchant newspaper press—the fourth estate—which has now become more powerful than the church, the state and the aristocracy, as Edmund Burke predicted more than 100 years ago.

Tens of thousands of people are awaiting the coming of a new religious leader. When he comes, and come he will, the newspapers will post his words of life, which will spread like wildfire.

CHARLES HOOPER.

“Labor Racketeers.”

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wrote Gen. Johnson and President Roosevelt to reorganize labor in our country. Now why did I say that? Because everybody knows, including the union labor man himself, that some of our labor leaders are racketeers and most dishonest in their demands and unjust to their own men. Now then, reorganize labor by setting up a Federal Labor Board with Government arbitrators, have open shops all over the country for the present time, establish a Government board in each State, work out a just, a proper pay and wage scale for all, even the common laborer.

That open shop idea will give work to men who perhaps have not had a job for a year or two. I would want the labor board in each State to give wages that are more balanced. By that I mean, that under present conditions one gets too much and the other not enough. The ones who don’t get enough either have to live on charity or else steal.

EMIG CARLEIN.

St. Louis, Mo.

D. C. Suffrage.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In these days of small politicians who are limelighting themselves into publicity over suffrage for the District of Columbia, it was refreshing to read in your paper of June 21 the comment of Senator King, chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

Senator King in his statement said he saw no reason for a change in the form of government of the District of Columbia, except to enlarge and give greater and new powers to the administration of the three Commissioners.

To one who has lived here in the days of suffrage and remembers too well the disgrace of such in those days, the stench still remains.

God forbid the evil that these limelighters are flouting will ever again besmirch the good name of the District of Columbia, for in my opinion, no honest citizen aware of conditions in those days, wants to see a revival of such government again.

JOHN HADLEY DOYLE.

For the President.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have had an application, dated August 8, 1933, with the Home Owners’ Loan Corporation, Illinois agency, over ten months and I have been unable to get the loan or an official decision to date.

I have written letters to President Roosevelt, with no results. Also wrote two letters to Senator James Hamilton Lewis and one to Senator Carter Glass without getting any action.

Your paper can help very much by seeing that this letter comes to the personal notice or knowledge of President Roosevelt. The question is, will you? I have no work, nor have I any money, so what you will do will have to be done free gratis.

Post Reader for 57 Years.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a lifelong resident of Washington, permit me to express my praise of the wonderful improvement of both the daily and Sunday issues of The Post since the new owner came in control. It affords me extreme pleasure to join with the many other residents of the District and eleswhere in expressing my congratulations upon the wonderful growth and popularity of the paper under its present management. I have followed The Post since its inception, as a carrier boy when 10 or 11 years of age, and as a reader and subscriber, since the days of the late Stilson Hutchins, Beriah Wilkins and other old-timers who were the original owners when The Post started its career. The spurt, along with the fair dealing and progress met with, is very noticeable and is deserving of unstinted and unbounded support and success.

Story With a Moral.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Franklin’s story of a war being lost because of the death of the warrior, caused by the fall of his horse, because of the loss of the latter’s shoe, caused by the loss of a nail that would have held it in place, has a moral which applies to our present dilemma of complexities that beset the Nation.

If it could be shown that the profession of law, while presumably accepting Blackstone as authority, totally ignores the beliefs that vitalized that great man’s reasoning faculties, or clergymen who respect the superior intelligence and saintly character of St. Augustine, yet, in their submission to the physicians or their theories show their rejection of Augustine’s teachings, who shall say that the proverbial nail has not fallen out of the pillar that supports the structure of the Nation?

Then come journalists and physicians, less bound to observe the ethics of law and religion than the lawyer and the clergyman, unhindered by the other two classes they play upon the unsuspecting public mind as practically a nonintelligent instrument or organ, that responds to whatever note is struck upon it. I mean, the average man and woman says amen to those four professions, and if the light that is in them be darkness, “lo, how great is that darkness!”

The Post and Thomas M. Cahill Are Commended for Coverage of Bankers’ Convention.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My tenure of office as president of the Life Underwriters expired Thursday, and I should be very unhappy had I failed to thank those who have so generously contributed to my own efforts.

The splendid and timely publicity The Post gave our organization during the last year has been very stimulating to the underwriting fraternity, made a good impression upon the general public, and will be remembered by me in future years as one of the most pleasant features of my administration.

THOMAS P. MORGAN, Jr.

Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A letter from George O. Vass, retiring president of the D. C. Bankers Association, commending the work of the convention publicity committee and expressing his gratification at the results achieved makes me realize that the credit is due to the splendid coverage of all news regarding the event before, during and after the annual occasion given by your paper and in the capable hands of Thomas M. Cahill.

I want to express my personal appreciation of the way The Post featured the stories—it was fine work—and of Mr. Cahill’s valued cooperation as a member of my committee.

ELIOT H. THOMSON,
Chairman, Publicity Committee.
Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As the retiring president of Washington Chapter, I attended the convention of the District of Columbia Bankers Association at White Sulphur Spring and, naturally, I was interested in the reports of the events of the convention that appeared in the local newspapers. I should like to take this opportunity to let you know that, in my opinion, the publicity regarding the affairs of the convention was released accurately and intelligently by your paper. You were generous in the amount of space devoted to the convention activities and, in addition, your presentation indicated careful thought and preparation.

R. H. LACEY.

Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As I retire from the office of president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, which I have held during the past year, I wish to express my appreciation to The Washington Post and to Thomas M. Cahill personally for the splendid cooperation given our association during the past year in the handling of banking news in a way that would best serve the public’s interest.

The banks have had a most trying year in maintaining good public relations, and The Post has been most helpful in furthering our efforts along this line.

I also wish to express my appreciation of the generous space the convention received in your columns.

GEORGE O. VASS.

Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the manner in which you handled the convention news at White Sulphur Springs.

The only suggestion I have to make is perhaps your paper might be willing during the coming year to consider enlarging the space allotted the local bankers, and also to have available information written under the name of the financial editor.

Radio Waves and Ripples

THERE'S really very little that a radio announcer doesn't know something about.

Take Jim McGrath, of N.B.C., for instance. Go ahead, take him.

Jim's not the best announcer in the world. And he's far from being the worst. He knows a thing or two about wrestling, for example. In fact he likes to wrestle himself—when there's no one else about to wrestle with and he is particularly in need of brushing up on holds. And Jim isn't so dumb either when it comes to musicians and musical instruments, which he collects—the instruments, you dope!

But there comes a time in the life of every man—this goes for radio announcers, too—when all previous training and experience are worth just so much stuff, when all the things you learned in school and unlearned afterward are about as useful as a shirt to Mr. Gandhi. One of those times comes to Jim June 26.

That's the day of the lip-reading contest in the Mayflower Hotel which the N.B.C. minds have elected Jim to broadcast. Jim knows nothing about lip-reading. He's not that unlucky.

The contest is part of the fifteenth annual convention of the American Federation for the Hard of Hearing for the selection of the Nation's champion lip-reader. It will be worked this way—pronouncers will silently read sentences which the contestants will attempt to repeat aloud. Judge Fay Bentley, of the District Juvenile Court; Dr. Fred N. Sperry, of Yale University, and Mrs. Edith Farrand, of the Minneapolis League for the Hard of Hearing, will pick the champion.

And now for the anti-climax. In a distant corner of the Mayflower ballroom will be Jim with a microphone and a duplicate of the pronouncers' sentence list. So Jim doesnt have to learn lip-reading in ten easy lessons, after all. It would have been a good story, though, if he had.

That ornamental hall tree with phosphorescent hooks, which was to have kept us from painfully and inadvertently chinning ourself in the evening, and which was to have been our present from Aunt Sadie last Christmas, probably will turn up during a WMAL program Thursday night.

So will a lot of other things of a variety and number to warm the heart of a South African ivory trader and retire him for life at Southampton—ladies' hose, handkerchiefs, jigsaw puzzles, umbrellas, shotgun shells, stove ovens, washtubs, bath mats, beads, skid chains, spoons, new and old razor blades, stamps, infants' wear.

These and more are to be sold at auction—sold, not traded—by the Postoffice Department's Dead Letter Office, and WMAL is broadcasting the proceedings from 10 to 10:30 p. m.

LIKE all true radio performers, those members of The Washington Post staff who have regaled our women folk with bits about the theater, fashions, stage, news of the nations, &c., on WJSV five mornings of the week, are taking a vacation, beginning tomorrow, and in their places you will find The Post's John Heiney.

Not in all their places will you find Mr. Heiney. For he, too, likes to take things a bit slowly during the dog days.

On Tuesday and Friday mornings only Mr. Heiney means to bring into the studios of WJSV the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, and the lady who runs the travel bureau at the Union Station, the people whose jobs are slightly less glamorous, but none the less interesting, than being a Cabinet member or his wife. Mr. Averageman and his missus, if you don't mind.

The time for the broadcasts has been advanced from 11:45 to 11:15.

And there were other boys and girls whose performances that night are expected to move them on to bigger things . . . Marie Fowler, Bert Bagranoff, Helen Ault, the Dixie Harmonies—just to mention a few.

How to Keep Well

Why Worry?

Certain persons worry subconsciously, some worry consciously (and are proud of it), others worry obviously, and still others vociferously. The quiet worrier who nurses real or imaginary trouble may lay and frequently does lay a foundation for disease of severe character. Few persons are able to adopt a philosophy of life that eliminates worry. Too often there is a tendency on retiring at night to think over every act and every word of the day, not realizing that the day is past, that it is water over the dam, and that the night is made for rest in preparation for another day. The mind is unusually alert following restful sleep, but what mind can meet the problems of a new day if the body has spent a restless, tossing, worrying night? There is an old saying: "Put off thy cares with thy clothes; so shalt thy rest strengthen thy labor, and thy labors sweeten thy rest."

Anxiety is a killer of human efficiency. It puts the nervous system on edge and prevents clear thinking. There are, of course, many situations where anxiety can not be avoided, but a ceaseless round of worry rarely helps the individual to find a way out of a perplexing situation. Physical rest may mean little unless it is accompanied by mental rest. To really rest one must rest in body, mind and soul and unhappiness and ill health frequently result because one or more of these phases is lacking.

Body rest should mean mind rest. A serious problem for which there seems to be no solution may after an hour's nap become simple and clear. The vicious cycle of worry sometimes leads to a lowering of body and nervous resistance to a point that approaches mental instability. An exciting evening where the individual may sparkle with wit and vivacity may leave that person poorly prepared for restful sleep. It takes time for a highly emotional nervous system to quiet down. We must not cheat the old adage "eight hours for work, eight hours for play and recration, and eight hours for sleep." Booth Tarkington, in his "The Hopeful Pessimist," has the patient who has suffered a physical and nervous breakdown say to his family doctor, "I have been in a hurry for 25 years," to which the doctor replies in a kindly vein, "Twenty-five years is too long for a man to be in a hurry."

That great Philadelphia physician, novelist and poet, S. Weir Mitchell, would take the worrying type of business man and the nervous, jittery, scolding woman, and, in many instances, succeed in restoring tired, fazzled nerves to normal stability. He did this by means of rest, proper food, congenial surroundings, and ofttimes with nothing but a change of scene or of occupation. Many a woman with three of four children on her hands and all the duties of the household is so fatigued at the end of the day that she is ready to scream. This tired, worrying sort may sometimes be transformed into an optimistic, happy individual through a readjustment of household routine following a week or more of complete rest from home and family.

Perhaps worry is not the essential cause of high blood pressure. It is at least a significant factor. Poise is observed only in those with adequate body and nervous resistance. If worry accomplishes nothing, why worry?

Thyroid.

Mrs. C. M. J. writes: My husband has toxic thyroid. He has had it more than a year. His symptoms are typical. He is in the care of a fine physician and is about holding his own. Should she be operated on? Can he be cured? Are there physicians who specialize in goiter?

Reply.

Some cases are cured without operation. However, the rule is that operation is the best treatment.

Your husband is in the hands of a competent physician. His opinion as to whether an operation should be done and, if so, when and by whom, is better than that of an outsider.

Auto Engine, No Bigger Than Before, Has Lots More Power

Builders Use Higher Compression, More Efficient Fuel Induction, Better Metals to Achieve Great Improvement Since 1930.

By William Ullman.

Automotive engineers are literal minded. They speak in phrases that are intensely practical. Because they do, it is possible for the interested public to learn precisely how much better automobile engines are in 1934 than they were in 1930.

A 250 cubic inch (piston displacement) engine is taken as the basis of the comparison made by Delmar G. Roos, president of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

According to his figures, that engine in 1930 was capable of developing 76-horsepower. It would withstand a 50-hour, wide-open throttle test at a speed of from 3,500 to 3,800 revolutions per minute.

Now for the same engine today, one with exactly the same dimensions. Instead of 76-horsepower, it develops 110-112. It can run, without failure, at wide-open throttle for a period of 100 hours at a speed of from 4,500 to 4,800 revolutions per minute.

How It Came About.

What has happened that engineers are able to extract such impressively finer performance from the automobile power plant?

In the first place, they have adopted higher compression pressures; in other words, they have learned to make a given amount of motor fuel produce more energy. They have given engine fuel induction systems a precision and wear ability vastly improved over the 1930 standards. Lubrication and metallurgical progress have produced bearings capable of standing far greater loads. The art of mixing fuel and air in engine carburetors and distributing it with balanced perfection to the cylinders has been greatly advanced.

In the face of such a convincing summary of accomplishment, one might think the engineer ready to rest for a while on his laurels. He is nothing of the kind. He is more busily engaged in his laboratory at the automobile factory today than at any time in years.

Insurance Liability.

Motorists who carry liability insurance not only should know the amounts of the coverage limits, but they also should understand exactly what those limits mean.

For example, let it be assumed a motorist carrying a standard limit $5,000-$10,000 policy is involved in an accident in which more than one person in the other car is killed or injured and a judgment of $10,000 is rendered against the assured. Assume further that—as frequently occurs—three persons are injured and judgments in their favor are rendered in the amounts of $7,000, $2,000 and $1,000. The assured carrying a $5,000-$10,000 liability policy must pay $2,000 of the $7,000 judgment himself because the policy sets forth definitely that the limit, for one person, can not exceed $5,000.

Motorists should know that this is not a "trick" feature nor is it found in the policy of any single company. It is standard in all liability policies.

Touring Requires Fuel.

Some motorists, strangely enough, anticipate that their cars will yield more miles to the gallon on the touring trip than when they are driven in ordinary routine service, because there is a vast difference in the number of starts, stops and waiting periods.

There is, however, another factor that weighs more heavily than any of these with respect to diminished city gasoline mileage. It is that out on the open road the car is driven at higher speeds. The pace of the touring trip calls for a greater power output on the part of the engine and it takes more fuel to make this additional power.

Oil Injures Tires.

Oil that leaks out of the crankcase of the automobile does more than discolor the floor. Oil and grease are two of rubber's worst enemies and, given a chance to attack the tires of the vehicle, do heavy damage.

Low Tire Pressure.

There are other disadvantages than the exceptional wear on the tires as a result of running them at below the recommended pressure. This is especially true when the pressure not only is subnormal but varies between the different tires.

For example, a variation in the pressure between the two rear tires means the whole chassis is twisted with corresponding strain on the engine, transmission, frame and body. The effects of varied pressures upon steering and braking, and broadly, upon safety, are well known to all observant drivers.

Our Traffic Rules.

It is a violation of the law to deface, move, obstruct or interfere with any official traffic sign or signal. Why?

The reason for this is that such signs are placed only at points which are hazardous or at which special directions are required for the safe and orderly movement of traffic. Defacement, removal or obstruction of the sign exposes street or highway users to the hazard or confusing condition which its erection is designed to eliminate or minimize. In the event of involuntary defacement of such signs or signals, motorists are required to make an immediate report to the proper authorities.

Guards at Polish Border Must Know Their Geography

Katowice, Poland, June 23 (AP).—Patrolling the Poland-Czechoslovakia border in Silesia is no sinecure, take it from the guards and customs officials stationed there.

Here the smuggler can, in many places, walk into the front room of a house and be in one country; as soon as he walks into the kitchen, he finds himself in another country.

Along the 210 miles of one of the most complicated frontiers in the world there are no less than 353 separate items of real estate which are divided in two by the border.

In Ruba Slaska, a town in Polish Silesia, the frontier passes at the edge of the town, a few feet from the last row of houses. To throw objects through open windows, thus passing them into another country, is mere child's play.

New Deal Test Is Expected in Montana Vote

Challenge to Wheeler and Erickson Is Issued by George Bourquin.

Helena, Mont., June 23 (AP).—Montana will be a testing ground for the Roosevelt Administration next month.

In a typically eloquent announcement, George M. Bourquin, Republican, former Federal district judge, brought the "New Deal" issue into the Montana primary of July 17 by declaring he is for it, "but only after it is put through the furnace of the Constitution, the slag of misdeal and raw deal run off, and the recovery of any pure metal of the square deal of Theodore Roosevelt."

It was a challenge to Senator Burton K. Wheeler and John E. Erickson, whose allegiance to President Roosevelt and his theories have been unwavering.

Bourquin, who retired in June after more than 20 years on the Federal bench, will seek the Republican nomination for the United States Senate for the long term. Senator Wheeler, a Democrat, as a candidate for reelection, will seek the nomination to oppose the 70-year-old Bourquin, whose decisions, handed down from Federal benches is as widely separated States as New Jersey and California, have attracted Nation-wide attention.

Heavily Democratic.

"Government by the people's laws and not by various men's uncertain wills must be maintained," Bourquin said.

"I am for preservation of the Constitution at any cost."

Montana, normally Democratic, added a flood of ballots to the heavy Democratic majorities in the last general election.

Bourquin will be opposed in the Republican primary by O. H. P. Shelly, a publisher, of Red Lodge. Senator Wheeler will be in the Democratic contest against Bert Replogle, State Representative from Lewistown.

Senator John E. Erickson, who left the governorship to succeed the late Senator Thomas J. Walsh, will seek the Democratic nomination to fill the remaining two years of Mr. Walsh's term. He is opposed by a number of candidates, including the only woman in the primary list, Mrs. W. W. Hamilton, Dodson, former member of the State Legislature. His other opponents are James F. O'Connor, Livingston; John A. Loveland, Bozeman; James E. Murray, head of the Montana PWA, and State Senator Louis P. Donovan, Shelby.

Republican Contest.

On the Republican side Scott Leavitt, Great Falls, member of Congress for five terms, will compete with a list of candidates for the short term, which includes James A. Jergensen, Whitehall; Leonard C. Young, Hobson, and Wellington D. Rankin, Helena, former district attorney.

The youngest member of Congress, Joseph P. Monaghan, Butte, is opposed by Dennis A. Dellwo, Charlo, speaker of the State House of Representatives, and John M. Evans, Missoula, former Representative, for the Democratic nomination for Representative in the First District. Sherman W. Smith, Helena; Robert C. Edgington, Dayton, and D. D. Evans, Helena, will compose the Republican list.

In the Second District, Representative Roy E. Ayers, Lewistown, a veteran campaigner, is unopposed for the Democratic nomination, but T. S. Stockdal, Billings; District Judge Stanley E. Felt, Baker, and Julius J. Wuerther, Great Falls, will seek the Republican nomination.

The Montana voters also will select candidates for the offices of chief justice, associate justice, the railway commission and clerk of the State Supreme Court.

Gallery Glimpses

By Robert C. Albright

BARE, silent corridors, where a few days ago all was bustle, confusion and ceaseless talk.

Empty halls, ghostlike in their stark stillness, oppressive with the memory of gavel rappings and static speeches.

Subways, forbidding as the catacombs; galleries, stoically quiet as the second balcony on a bad first night.

This is the Capitol with Congress adojurned. This is the Senate and this is the House in that long, peaceful stretch from June to January.

Only a few members linger behind—mostly those not particularly worried about campaign opposition.

Others hastened away in the first two or three days after Congress adjourned, and right gladly, too.

For six months they will live a life of importance—large, tailless amphibians in small pools of water, where the title of "Congressman" still has some glamor.

In Washington's big pond they are lost. Bigger frogs croak louder and break the water with a splash more resounding.

Yet blase and naive Washington alike will miss them, as a never-failing conversational topic. It is like removing the weather when Congress adjourns. People like to laugh at their antics, or discourse sagely and knowingly on sterner matters of legislation.

And what will become of that stock question:

"When do you think Congress will get away?"

SPEAKING of adjournment, we beg leave to report that G. Hunter Osborne, press gallery martyr to the cause of Congressional dignity, has gone into brooding retirement.

Osborne, you may recall, was to lead the gallery in singing "The Man on the Flying Trapeze" when John Rankin called off the "undignified" entertainment.

After three days of quiet meditation, Osborne gave forth the following poetic effusion, born of the great hurt that was in his soul:

Once I was happy but now I'm forlorn,
Just like this Congress I'm battered and torn,
Left in this gallery to weep and to mourn
'Cause last week you didn't adjourn.
Oh a gal that I love is a pippin
And I brought her up here for to please,
But your growls and your howls sent her slippin'
Right back to a gink on a flyin' trapeze.
Chorus
Oh he floats through the air, &c., &c.

(And this)
Once I was happy but now I'm forlorn
For now my big moment has come and has gone
Without one lone warble or toot of a horn
Because of some fool dignities.
Oh the song that I had was a sad one
And the tears from the eyes it should tease.
But jealous John Rankin gave my hopes a spankin',
Cut the ropes on my vocal trapeze.
Chorus
(There ain't one)

AND we now are reliably informed the tumult and fanfare accompanying this session's bank "pay-off" drive accomplished all Representative Clarence McLeod sought.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is ready to make loans on millions in Detroit frozen bank assets, when and if they are asked.

Which was all Mr. McLeod, of Detroit, really wanted. Or so goes the gossip.

SAID IN PARTING.

Speaker Rainey—We have done more work and we have talked less than in any other Congress in the history of this Republic.

Representative Bertrand Snell—May you all soon go to your homes and enjoy the rest and comfort to which you are entitled.

Representative John O'Connor—Every man and woman in this House, no matter what any other members may think of him or her, serve some useful purpose in the composite scheme of our united attempt to solve the problems of our people.

Representative John Rankin—For my part I can truthfully say that my cup of gratification is literally running over.

Representative William Lemke—The battle is on.

Representative Randolph Carpenter—I have not missed a single roll call vote during these two years, and have only missed two quorum calls.

Representative Tom Blanton—I will have no rest.

Representative George Foulkes—The Nation needs more Dr. Tugwells.

Senator Charles McNary—We are moving so rapidly that it is difficult to know just what is being done.

Senator Huey (Kingfish) Long—Somewhere, somehow, something is going on that nobody understands here.

Senator Joe Robinson—The President states he has no further communication to make.

At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

World Champion Dr. Alexander Alekhine brought the current titular match to a close in the twenty-sixth game, as he drew with his challenger, E. D. Bogoljubow, German champion. Alekhine had won the twenty-fifth game and the draw which followed ran his total point score to 15½, a stipulated terminus for the fray. The game score was Alekhine, 8; Bogoljubow, 3; drawn, 15, and the outcome caused little surprise to any. Already Fred Reinfeld and Reuben Fine, New York master players, are collaborating on the preparation of a volume to contain the biographies of the competitors, summaries of the play, an analysis of the openings adopted, and the score of all the games with exhaustive annotations. Orders for copies should be sent direct to Reinfeld, 2265 Newbold avenue, New York City.

Federal Chess Club.

Play in the fifth round of the club's Group A elimination tourney left Knapp and Naidel the only entrants remaining for the final round. Knapp eliminated Seidenberg by dealing him a double defeat, while Naidel won a single game from Sturges.

In the Group B tournament Eskin, Schaeffer, Nail and perhaps Gleason have battled their way to the semifinal round. Double victories were scored as follows: Eskin from Haygood, Schaeffer from Page, Nail from Burch. Gleason and Murray halved their games, one each.

The annual meeting of the club has been called for June 27, when officers will be elected and a summer program drawn. Prospective members are urged to attend. The clubrooms are located at the Parrot Tea Rooms, Connecticut avenue and S street northwest.

Capital City Club.

The Capital City Chess Club has decided to stage a rapid transit tournament, 10 seconds per move, on the first Tuesday of each month of the summer season. A Kriegspiel tourney has been begun in which play occurs on remaining Tuesday evenings. To date the entrants are G. E. Bishop, C. W. Stark, Martin C. Stark, F. W. F. Gleason, F. T. Parsons and J. A. Kirby. Kirby and Martin Stark have played their initial partie, with Stark winning. Duplicate bridge, for members only, will be played each Thursday evening. Sunday's open house will be held for the same game.

Appended is the score of one of the games from the Capital City versus Ladies' Club match. Mrs. E. R. Shephard was causing her opponent considerable trouble until her plans went somewhat awry a few moves before the close.

Checker Players, Attention.

We regret that the checker problem recently published contained an error, which made it unsolvable. Here is the position which occurred between Paul F. Grove and William Orrin Daudt: White—common men on 12 14 15 25 30 and 32; king on 8; black, common men on 3, 6, 7, 21, 24 and 28. Mr. Grove, playing white, won in beautiful fashion, which you checker fans may take for a problem. White to move and win.

But here is an actual problem composed by Mr. Grove, based on one the source of which is uncertain. He titles it Father's Day Problem, in commemoration of its composition last Sunday. Black: common men on 6, 7, 15, 17, 21, 22, 23; king on 26; White, common men on 5, 24, 29 and 30; kings on 8, 13, 14 and 16. Black to move and win.

Mr. Grove, incidentally, was the first vice president of the Capital City Chess Club at the time of its formation in 1911. W. B. Mundelle, famous local chess player, and one-time District checker champion, was its first president.

Notes.

The Virginia State Chess Congress gets under way at Roanoke July 4, with contestants from all major cities of Virginia expected to participate. J. J. Shelton, who recently wrested the Roanoke championship from J. Curtis Merkle, is a favorite to win the State championship honors.

The inital analysis by F. L. Congress on the Bogoljubow-Alekhine game was republished in full in the Allentown (Pa.) Morning Call, with acknowledgment to The Post. Incidentally, if Mr. Congress will favor us with his address, we shall be glad to forward to him some further analysis submitted, at his request, by N. T. Whitaker.

Solutions to Problems.

The key to No. 579, three-mover by G. C. Holroyd, is R(B)-B3. The solvers found this one to be especially difficult. The two-mover by the same composer, No. 580, yields to Kt-B6. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, J. W. Harris, Willis J. Nolan, N. T. Whitaker, W. B. Mundelle and Henry M. Ward.

W. J. Nolan terms No. 579 "especially good." Jacob Frech comments, "Only logic's equivalent for problem-solving genius (viz.: systematic adequate reverification of premises) can surely discover the relevant syllogistic middle terms of problems as complex as Nos. 579 and 580, viz.: re 579: A problem in which white can force one of the following only quickest series of forced mates: 1 R(B)-B3; 2 R(Q3 or B3)-K3 or P-B3; 3 R(Q3 or B3)-K3 or P-B3 or Kt-K6 and re 580: A problem in which white can force one of the following only quickest series of forced mates; 1 Kt-B6; 2 Q-K3 or R-Q4 or Kt-Q5 or -R5. The problems generate, respectively, 3,000,000 and 17,000 series."

Henry M. Ward writes, "No. 579 is easy. Kt-K8 is alluring, but yields to P-QB4. I am glad to have time to tackle problems once more."

What Today Means

"Cancer."

If June 24 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 to 12 a. m., from 3 to 5 p. m., and from 8 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 7 to 9 a. m., from 1 to 3 p. m., and from 10 p. m. until midnight.

Sunday, June 24, will be filled with numerous pleasant activities, providing you are in a receptive frame of mind. It might be advisable to try to agree to do the thing that is suggested. Opposition might be misconstrued as a selfish desire to have your own way. There is a possibility of your meeting for the first time a person who, unfortunately, gives the impression of having a rather unpleasant personality. Remember outward appearances are often deceiving, and "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Sentimental couples should find this a propitious day for the furtherance of their plans.

If a woman and this is your natal day, the agility and gracefulness with which nature has endowed you with gifts that should be made good use of. You would probably be very successful if you took up dancing professionally. Physical culture is another field that offers opportunity. Love, however, is possibly going to play a very important part in your life, as you are the type that makes a marvelous success of married life. You must guard again allowing jealousy to arouse unfounded suspicions. A distrustful husband or wife can cause more discord than did even the serpent in the Garden of Eden. Be careful a friend, addicted to gossip, does not get you into the habit. Gossiping is a dangerous pastime to indulge in, trouble usually follows in its wake. Keep your eyes and ears open, for shortly you will either receive a letter bearing good news or you will hear some.

The child born on June 24, as it grows up, may reflect great credit on its parents by evidence of its innate refinement. This child should display an unusual amount of grace in its movements, and be outstanding among its playmates in athletic sports.

If a man born on June 24, if not already married, "get busy," for marriage will keep you out of trouble as you are very susceptible to the charms of the fair sex and flattery. If you keep your mind on business and put forth your best efforts, your financial returns may prove a pleasant surprise. Be very careful about listening to a friend's advice, regarding an "easy way" to make money. Bear in mind speculation is the lazy man's idea of making money without working for it, and it does not always prove to be a good one.

Huge Dragnet Combs Ocean For Dangers to U. S. Ships

Experts of Geodetic Survey Fish Up Wreckage and Blast Off Tops of Submerged Rocks to Make Sea Safe.

number of these hidden dangers were actually on the usual courses of large passenger steamers, and others were very close to those courses.

At the present time, the Atlantic coastal waters have been very completely covered by the drag operations, with continuing use of the equipment being currently restricted to small-scale work for confirmation of results of the sounding activities linked with the gathering of material for drafting and revision of charts.

The Guide, one of the Survey's large ships used in the advancement of major phases of the drag work, now is operating south of San Francisco, where it is "fishing" for obstacles close to the beach and below the surface of waters into which vessels steer their courses during periods of exceptionally bad weather.

One of the most spectacular discoveries which have resulted from dragging coastal waters came when Capt. N. H. Heck, who pioneered in development of the apparatus, was directing a wire-drag operation in the channel leading into Key West several years ago.

Here is the story of that discovery as told in an official report by Capt. Heck:

"The work at Key West was undertaken in connection with the possibility that a straight channel might be established as a substitute for the existing lane.

"In the main channel we found a pinnacle of rock which might have changed history. It was in the course that was followed by the Maine when she departed on her last trip. She might easily have struck it when outward bound for Havana.

"We caught the drag on this pinnacle several times. Later divers placed dynamite at its base, and blasting by the Army engineers put an end to its dangerous existence."

Among the strangest stories connected with these activities of the Survey is the one which tells of the disappearnace and subsequent discovery of the small craft which bore the long name of "Reliable Fuel Oil Supply Barge No. 3," which sailed from Brooklyn, January 30, 1930, bound up Long Island Sound, with Bridgeport as its destination.

The first stages of that trip were made at night, with weather conditions being none too good. And old Reliable failed to get beyond those first few miles. She disappeared without trace. Weeks went by, and still no indication of what had happened to the barge presented itself.

Several months later, two women, each claiming to be the widow of the barge's captain, put in their appearance and sought to benefit by his insurance policy. But their pleas did not carry weight, nor was an investigation launched to determine which of the claimants truly was the widow, and this for the simple reason that nobody could be at all certain that the captain was dead.

Almost a year after the barge disappeared, two of the Survey's launches were dragging a wire line approximately 1,000 feet long between them in the effort to provide assurance that no sunken craft or dangerous rocks were present in the channel as potential dealers of death and damage.

The launches were moving along at a moderate rate of speed when the line became taut at a place where no obstruction appeared on the charts to which latest revisions had been applied.

Before the speed of the boats could be slackened, the line parted from the submerged obstacle, bringing to the surface a mast which obviously was a part of a small vessel.

Salvaging operations were instituted as a result of the discovery and divers soon identified the craft as the missing barge.

More recently, the 36-foot sloop Sea Fox disappeared with almost identical results following.

Lieut. Henry E. Finnegan, in charge of a party making a Long Island Sound drag, reported the discovery of the vessel which was resting at a depth of 48 feet in water off the entrance to Greenwich Harbor. In his report he indicated clearly how the sunken vessel was a danger to navigation of ships plying along the north shore of the sound. Before the drag line caught on that vessel, improvised methods by private parties had been used without success in the search for the craft, and airplanes even had been utilized, but without success.

In addition to locating sunken vessels, which are in the paths followed by ships in moving through coastal waters, the drag lines frequently encounter pinnacle rocks which are slim spires that protrude close to the surface of the water. These rocks are so small in diameter as they approach the water's surface that vessels might pass close by them for years before a craft might be so unfortunate as to come into direct contact with one of them. It was on a rock of that type, which, however, had been discovered and charted, that the Aleutian, a large vessel plying Alaskan waters, met disaster several years ago.

One of the most remarkable rock formations located by the draggers was found in these same Alaskan waters. It is a rocky spire which is more than 600 feet in height. Soundings and other observations made following the discovery revealed the rock to have a contour quite resembling that of the Washington Monument. It, accordingly, was given the name of the famous obelisk.

Though virtually all the paths followed by vessels in plying coastal waters of the United States have been followed by the survey's launches that drag the obstacle-revealing lines behind them, the dragging operations continue in all areas. Uncle Sam's strange "fishermen" can take no chances that a sunken vessel or uncharted rock might remain hidden below the water's surface as a menace to lives and property. And the patience and perseverance of those men who pursue so unique a vocation give strong assurance there will be no counterpart of the Dresden disaster near our coasts.

The Battle of New Orleans had no effect on the outcome of the War of 1812. It did not take place until early January of 1815, while the Treaty of Ghent, which ended the war, was signed on December 24, 1814. This was an age of slow communications, and nobody in America knew the war was over until days after the battle was fought. The Battle of New Orleans, nevertheless, was in many respects the most important battle of the war.

The battle was an engagement between 10,000 British veterans under Gen. Pakenham, and a force of about half that number of Americans under Gen. Andrew Jackson, the English attacking and the Americans defending New Orleans. It ended in the utter defeat of the English, who lost 2,000 men. The American force, which was composed mostly of woodsmen, but with some slaves and a few pirates in the ranks, lost eight dead and thirteen wounded.

The effect of the battle was great. It made a National hero of Jackson, paving the way for his eventual elevation to the Presidency; it increased American prestige in Europe more than all the rest of the war; it brought about a much needed Nationalism in the United States; it saved the mouth of the Mississippi from invasion; it gave to the West a feeling of security and confidence; it removed the danger of a British threat to the Louisiana territory; it strengthened the Administration and sounded the death-knell of the Federalist party, and it gave to military experts of the world a practical demonstration of the value of rifle marksmanship as a defense against mass attack.

Cotton Reduction Causes Suffering to Share Cropper

constantly shifting about from one plantation to another and its tenure of land has been short and uncertain," Prof. Amberson reported. "These people are probably the most depressed body of workers in America, exhibiting grave cultural, moral and intellectual deficiencies. This report will indicate that a considerable section of them, contrary to the intent of the Government, are now reduced to an even lower plane than before, and, in many cases, are being denied access to the land and to the only labor that they know and are capable of doing."

In interviewing share-croppers Prof. Amberson found, he reported, many instances where the 1933 contracts to plow up cotton were not carried out in good faith—evidence indicating the difficulty of getting voluntary cooperation in crop reduction even when the farmer is paid for it.

Frauds Discovered.

Prof. Amberson reported that 140 families, or 37 per cent of the group studied, last year plowed up no land at all; 18 families, or 5 per cent, plowed up all their land; 98 families, or 26 per cent, plowed up some land, but less than the one-fourth of the crop specified by the contract; 103 families, or 27 per cent, plowed up more than 25 per cent; 37 families plowed up the agreed one-fourth.

"The sample is small, but there is the distinct suggestion that less land was actually plowed up than was specified in the contract," the report stated. "We have had frequent testimony that where a whole crop was plowed under it was so handled because it was poor, and we have even had one well attested case where corn was plowed under in lieu of cotton.

"In many cases the families report that no settlement for the plow-up was ever made. In a few cases families were evicted from their homes and denied all compensation."

Cases were found, the Amberson report continued, where on large plantations the part of the 1933 acreage plowed up was cultivated on a day-labor basis, instead of plowing a part of the acres worked by share-croppers. Thus the latter were prevented from having any claim at all for a part of the benefit paid by the Government.

Can't Get Land.

Prof. Amberson found greater discrimination against share-croppers in plans for the 1934 crop. Planters were asked to agree to reduce this crop 40 per cent, for which they will receive aggregate benefit payments of $130,000,000 this year.

"Our records cover 103 white families and 13 colored families, who, having had crops in 1933, have been unable to keep or get any land whatsoever in 1934," the report stated. "It has been one of the main objectives of this committee to determine, beyond any possibility of doubt, whether the acreage reduction program has created a new agricultural unemployment, contrary to the plain intent of the Government, and both spirit and letter of the 1934 contract.

"We can state with authority that it has so operated, and can assert that, at a conservative estimate, at least 15 per cent, and probably 20 per cent, of all share-cropper families have lost their opportunity to make a living on the land by the only labor which they know."

The Amberson report recited interviews "with dozens of families who have been evicted, or in whose hands there are eviction notices" and added that "many other families have been forced to move by pressure and intimidation, without service of papers."

"Most of these people are still living in the country, some in tents, some in abandoned houses, a few in such miserable shelters as corn cribs and cotton houses. Many of them have drifted into the cities and towns where they are dependent upon direct Federal relief."

Rely on Good Faith.

Prof. Amberson found these conditions in face of a provision in 1934 crop reduction contracts requiring the producer to "endeavor in good faith to bring about a reduction of acreage contemplated in this contract in such a manner as to cause the least possible amount of labor, economic and social disturbance and to this end, in so far as possible he shall effect the acreage reduction as nearly ratable as practicable among tenants on this farm . . . shall permit all tenants to continue in the occupancy of their houses on this farm, rent free, for the years 1934 and 1935."

Prof. Amberson found that reasons for the refusal to give land to share croppers and for evicting them were that restriction of acreage guaranteed a higher price for cotton raised this year and that there was less cause to share the risks of the season with share tenants and croppers and that by throwing agricultural laborers out of employment the crop reduction program created such competition for the work which remains that "many laborers are now forced to accept working conditions which are appreciably worse than they have ever heretofore endured."

In fact, he discovered an accelerated tendency to abolish the share-cropper system in favor of the employment of day labor, paid at the rate of 50 to 75 cents a day for work from sun up to sun down. The plantation owner is turning to day labor in an effort to retain for himself all benefit paid by the Government for crop reduction.

Found Improvement.

Aroused by the criticisms of this report, as well as attacks by Norman Thomas, the leader of the Socialist party in the United States, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace assigned Dr. Calvin B. Hoover, professor of economics at Duke University and author of "The Economic Life of Soviet Russia" and a recent book on Germany, to examine into this question.

Dr. Hoover contended that "the recovery program has undoubtedly greatly improved conditions in the South" and that the substantial revival in purchasing power and decrease in industrial unemployment in the South "far outweigh any unfortunate results and individual injustices which have been produced by the acreage reduction program."

He contended that many of the investigators of conditions in the South have been "unfamiliar" with the economic history of that section and "have often jumped to the conclusion that the acreage reduction program has been responsible for all undesirable conditions which they found." He went on to point out that the miserable condition of the share croppers existed long before the crop reduction program was started.

But Dr. Hoover agreed that "it is inevitable that with acreage reduction there should be pressure toward reduction in the number of people employed in producing cotton." He said that for four or five years the number of former tenant farmers who are without means of livelihood has been steadily increasing, resulting in an increasing number of "squatter families."

Living in Shacks.

"These families formerly were able to obtain a crop to tend but are now unable to do so," he pointed out. "Many of them are living in tumble-down tenant houses and tobacco barns and any sort of shack which they can find. Their standard of living is appalling and is even much below the customary low standard of living of tenant-farmers who are engaged in production. The rehabilitation of these 'squatter' families is demanded by every consideration of National responsibility."

He reported also that prior to signing the 1934 contracts some landowners dispensed with the service of tenants and "in many cases tenants left farms and plantations as they normally do, but when they tried to find employment elsewhere they were unable to find it on account of acreage reduction.

"Their former landowner naturally did not feel under obligation to take them back after they had left of their own free will," the economist explained.

Dr. Hoover agreed that the reduction program had accelerated the increase of idle tenants, pointing out that the reduction contracts contained nothing to prevent landlords from reducing the number of hired laborers or affecting the compensation of hired laborers with the consequent temptation "to replace tenants with day laborers since tenants have some rights in the contract."

Rights of Tenants.

He intimated that the provision guarding the rights of tenants in the contract was loosely drawn and he threw out the suggestion that "the landlord was induced to sign the cotton contract by an inducement obtained at the expense of the share tenant and share cropper."

After the Amberson and Hoover reports were made public, Norman Thomas wrote Secretary Wallace that "it seems to be that both reports confirm the charges I made." He contended that "the entire method of land tenure and operation is wrong; that some of the worst examples of landlordism in the world are to be found in the cotton country, and that it is idle to talk about prosperity for cotton farmers as long as these conditions of virtual peonage continue."

Secretary Wallace has undertaken to correct some of the evils pointed out in the Amberson and Hoover reports by a more rigid enforcement of the provisions in crop reduction contracts designed to protect tenants and croppers. Field agents of the AAA were named in eight of the cotton States where there had been complaints to investigate and adjust misunderstandings and to report violations to the AAA in order that necessary corrections may be made or benefit payments canceled.

(Editor's Note: In a second article next Sunday, Mr. Waltman will present viewpoints as to whether the cotton production program is feasible and desirable from the economic interests of the South and the Nation and the reply of AAA to charges that the Bankhead bill represents "regimentation.")

Mississippi Calm On Liquor Ballot

Usual Excitement Fails to Appear on Rum Issue.

Jackson, Miss., June 23 (AP).—Characteristic Mississippi enthusiasm over almost any political issue has been absent thus far in the campaign to determine whether legal liquor shall be sold by the State.

Ballots to decide the liquor issue will be cast July 10, a quarter-century after Mississippi adopted State-wide prohibition.

The referendum will be held under authority of the May-Roberts bill, passed by the 1934 session of the Legislature, which proposes to put the State into the liquor business. Should a majority of the voters participating in the referendum approved that legislation, a State liquor commission would be created to purchase and distribute intoxicants in all counties permitting their sale.

Firemen Will Hold Carnival July 7 to 21

The Silver Spring (Md.) Volunteer Fire Department will hold its annual carnival July 7 to 21, inclusive, it was announced by the carnival committee.

Those in charge of the affair are J. A. Granger, chairman; Clay Davis, treasurer; George Hamilton, Harold Harmon, Victor H. Bender, J. Thomas Kennedy and Everett Schrider.

Nazis Rebuked By Von Papen

Hindenberg Helps Him in Move Against Hitler.

we know nothing to make der Fuehrer link arms with our traditional enemy, do you?

And although most do not know that Von Papen at Marburg urged the necessity of a critical press if the Nazi government is to be kept from degenerating into flabby bureaucracy (that was putting it cautiously), many can wonder why the indefatigable Goebbels should elect to hurl a special thunderbolt at carping critics and to warn them that only party members have a right to criticize the head Nazi, Handsome Adolph.

Into this atmosphere of restiveness and perhaps even suspicion Von Papen has hurled a gage. He has said, in effect, it is time to ease the pace and return to greater rationalism. Thinking with the blood instead of the head won't do indefinitely, however appropriate it may have been this past year and a half, he added tactfully.

Against this line of thinking stand row upon row of impatient storm troopers, increasingly convinced the reason things aren't so good is because there hasn't yet been enough revolution. They believe that more of the same is a sure cure for whatever ails the state.

With the split in points of view out in the open at last, a showdown has become inevitable. The decision rests with the mystical and curiously impersonal Hitler. Upon his capacity as a statesman depends the future of Germany—slowly upward again to a lost respectability, or downward into a primitive barbarism that has shocked the world profoundly.

But Hitler is still der Fuehrer.

U. S. Concerns to Build Chilean Rail Equipment

Santiago, Chile June 23 (AP).—A contract for half a million dollars' worth of rolling stock for the Chilean State Railways was awarded to United States manufacturers.

Although German bids were lower than the American, the Baldwin Locomotive Works at Philadelphia and the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation won the contract, calling for five locomotives and 15 coaches, to be built at a cost of $445,000.

Business Boom Follows Pilgrims to World's Fair

self that light is a vibration with a wave length of about twenty-millionths of an inch. You can step on a revolving platform and change the speed of it by raising or lowering a pair of dumbells which you hold in your hands. There are models of Caesar's city plan for Rome, miniature oil wells in action, radio tubes are made in front of your eyes. Electrons and protons are there, invisible themselves, but their effects demonstrated.

Time Moves Rapidly.

The "Clock of the Ages" compresses 2,000,000,000 years of geological time in 4 minutes by the clock. Mammals appear almost at the end of one revolution of the clock and man is reached only in the last few seconds. Dr. Auguste Piccard's first stratosphere gondola is there after a trip 54,000 feet up.

You can see the evolution of the human face, from fish to man, and you'll be reminded of friends back home. A life-size model of a man shows the circulation of the blood with the heart pumping, the valves working, the red blood flowing out through the arteries and the blue blood returning through the veins, lungs move, ribs expand, and the larynx vibrates. There is also a "transparent man" showing all internal organs as if looked at by an X-ray eye.

In the electrical building it is the magic show that draws the crowds. A man runs enough current through his body to light an electric bulb which he holds on his finger-tip. By synchronizing light rays with the speed of a revolving disc it changes into all sorts of colors and patterns before your eyes, depending on the variations in the speed of the disc. A graphophone is started and the volume grows or disappears entirely depending on an invisible beam thrown from across the room. The invisible beam will light electric bulbs many feet away as if they were in a power socket.

Modern Miracles.

Similar exhibits depict the marvels of industrial processes, tire manufacture, mining of coal, gold and silver, glass making, television, railroad operation, radio, telegraph and telephone, the work of the social sciences, agriculture and horticulture, the stories of religion and art, the many activities of government, and inventions which have turned kitchen drudgery into a series of small machine operations. Real automobiles are made while you watch. One of the major new exhibits installed this year is Ford's $1,500,000 plant covering 11 acres where, as in the General Motors exhibits, cars are built on the assembly line before your eyes, shatter-proof glass is made, fabrics are woven, and parts welded.

But by this time the visitor probably has wandered off to the Spanish village, or to the Black Forest village where, on a hot summer afternoon he can look at roofs around him which seem to be laden with snow, and at a towering snow-covered mountain, and enjoy his beer while watching the ice skaters. And there's a gal who does a black panther dance—if the Fair's censor has not interfered by now—and a damsel in the Streets of Paris who seems to have gone entirely nudist, though the cautious Fair management swears it's just an optical illusion and that the lady really has something on.

City of Midgets.

Grown-ups as well as the kids hang around the midget city and watch the little men and women get their hair cut in the diminutive barber shop which is part of this pint-sized community with its own policemen, its Liliputian fortune tellers, its small tough guys, and a real giant in a big red uniform who is always being ganged by the tiny fellows.

All of this provides a welcome holiday and a source of new interest and hope to a country that has had good cause to be disillusioned about modern civilization. None of the millions of Fair visitors under 25 can remember back to the peaceful prewar world when things seemed reasonably normal. Ever since they were born there has been nothing but war and—except for a few dizzy years—depression and hard luck. Here 3 long miles of man-made land beside Lake Michigan are assembled the products of the best that is in the human animal, which if properly applied should insure comfort, adequate food, clothing and shelter for every one and a pretty good time in addition.

It ought to make people feel better about the human race—except that this Fair sure is hard on the arches, and you get to the point where you don't care what science has done if you can only sit down and rest the dogs.

Large Nitrate Deposits Are Located in Peru

Arequipa, Peru, June 23 (AP).—Large quantities of almost pure sodium nitrate, a chemical widely used in the manufacture of explosives, have been discovered near this town.

It was reported here that a company is being organized to start the exploitation of the nitrate, which it is believed will give employment to about 10,000 laborers.

Murray's Foes Assail Anglin

Concentrate on Governor's Choice for Successor as Vote Nears.

Oklahoma City, June 23 (AP).—Tom Anglin, William H. Murray's selection to succeed him in the governorship, bore the brunt of the attack of other leading candidates today as the preprimary campaign neared a close in Oklahoma.

Voters will determine July 3 which two of a record field of 15 Democrats will enter the July 24 run-off.

The field apparently has been narrowed to a half-dozen leaders, including Anglin, Corporation Commissioner Jack Walton, an impeached and ousted Governor; Representative E. W. Marland, of Ponca City; Lieut. Gov. Robert Burns, Attorney General J. Berry King and Gomer Smith, an Oklahoma City attorney. The name of Porter Newman, Durant district judge, also is mentioned frequently.

But it is on Anglin, Speaker of the the House and beneficiary of the administration organization, that the most of the aspirants are turning their fire.

Walton Offers Pensions.

Opponents charge his election might mean a continuation of policies pursued by the fiery "Alfalfa Bill" during his stormy administration.

Walton supporters predict the former Governor, who was ousted by the 1923 Legislature, of which Anglin was a member, will go into the run-off.

Flaying Murray and Anglin, the latter as an "impeachocrat," Walton promised old-age pension legislation and a tax on wealth for relief purposes, free textbooks and homestead tax exemption are on his platform.

Anglin, pointing to his long record in Senate and House and to recent ad valorem tax reductions, has said little about Murray's indorsement except to declare he has not promised to retain Murray employes and that Murray has not asked him to do so.

Murray is stumping the State, assailing Walton, Burns, King, Marland and Smith and urging votes for Anglin.

Marland, former oil millionaire, is stressing the New Deal, is advocating a closer relationship between the President and the Governor and promising to apply Roosevelt policies to Oklahoma. Marland went to Congress two years ago.

Burns, running on a platform of "no ring in my nose," is advocating the abolition of the tax commission, created by Murray and defended by Anglin.

A. U. to Open Public Affairs Class Tuesday

Summer Students Will Get Close-Up of New Deal in Action.

The Capital City's first laboratory for a study of Government will begin to function this week with the opening of the American University's School of Public Affairs.

With students in attendance from all sections of the Nation, the university will, for the next eight weeks, devote all efforts toward making it possible for the undergraduates, graduates and teachers who will attend the session to observe at first-hand the operations of what are referred to as the emergency agencies of Government.

The university has invited six outstanding specialists in the social sciences to assist in the project.

Members of the faculty are: Dr. Arnold Bennett Hall, formerly president of the University of Oregon, now director of the Institute of Government Research of the Brookings Institution; Dr. George A. Graham, of the Princeton School of Public and International Affairs; Dr. George C. S. Benson, of the Department of Government of Harvard University; Dr. William C. Casey, of the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University; Dr. Ernest Griffith, of Syracuse School of Citizenship and Public Affairs; Dr. Howard S. Piquet, of the Department of Economics of New York University's School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance, and Dr. Richard L. Schanck, of the Department of Political Science of American University.

The faculty will conduct group conferences each morning on the American University campus. Of late afternoons they will meet students who are employed during the day, at the American University Graduate School, 1901 F street northwest. Round-table discussions will be held evenings under the leadership of some of the outstanding administrative officials in the Government today. Prominent leaders, from Cabinet members on down the line, have indicated willingness to participate in this part of the program.

Afternoons the student body will make first-hand observations, under expert guidance, of the manner in which various governmental agencies are functioning.

The Institute will open Tuesday, June 26, and close Friday, August 17. Tomorrow has been set aside for registration purposes.

Capital Society Ceases Formal Activities With Departure of President

Underwood & Underwood.

MRS. ERIK GEORGE PETERSON, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roderick Duncan MacDonald, of Houston, Tex., whose marriage took place recently in the garden of the home of Mrs. Edwin B. Parker on Wyoming avenue. Mrs. Parker is an aunt of the bride, who was formerly Miss Mary Katherine MacDonald.

Margaret Keith Is Married To Mr. Jeffries at Fairfax

The wedding of Miss Margaret Randolph Keith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Randolph Keith, of Fairfax, Va., and a niece of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. R. Walton Moore, to Mr. Louis E. Jeffries, jr., son of Mrs. Louis E. Jeffries, of Washington, took place yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock in the Truro Episcopal Church at Fairfax, which was decorated with palms and ferns, with white lilies and tall tapers on the altar. The Rev. Herbert A. Donovan officiated.

Among the guests from Washington who attended the ceremony and the reception which followed were the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the war-time President.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Moore, and wore a gown of white satin fashioned on simple princess lines, with a square neck and long-fitted sleeves ending in points over the hands.

Sisters Attend Bride.

The veil of rose point lace fell from a cap of the same lace which was held in place by a bandeau of seed pearls embroidered in an orange blossom design. The bride carired a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley.

The bride's sisters, Mrs. Charles Perry Howze and Mrs. Carlos Drake, were her only attendants. Both wore filmy frocks of turquoise blue chiffon fashioned with cowl necklines and brief trains. Their sashes of yellow taffeta matched the trimming on their wide-brimmed leghorn hats, and they carried arm-bouquets of summer flowers.

Mr. Alexander Jeffries was best man for his brother and the ushers were Dr. Charles Perry Howze, Mr. Nathan Scott and Dr. B. Lauriston Hardin, jr., of Washington; Mr. Bennet Crane and Mr. James W. Thomas, of Baltimore, and Mr. George Munce, of Richmond, Va., a brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

Owing to the illness of the bride's father, the reception which followed the ceremony took place at Mr. Moore's residence in Fairfax, and the guests were limited to the two immediate families and a few close friends. The young couple were assisted in receiving by the bride's mother, who wore a handsome gown of black chiffon trimmed with white and a hat to match, and by Mrs. Jeffries, who wore a gown of printed chiffon with a wide-brimmed hat.

Mr. Jeffries and his bride left on a wedding trip, the latter wearing a navy blue ensemble with a hat of navy blue silk faced with white straw.

They will be at home after July 15 at 2202 Wyoming avenue.

Capital Society Rests As Roosevelts Leave

First Lady Plans Tour of Country While President Is on Hawaiian Cruise; Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt and Baby Ruth at Hyde Park; Astor Off to Europe.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

With the White House "closed" for the summer months, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt in residence at their home at Hyde Park, N. Y., and Congress finally adjourned after almost a week of delay, Capital society is officially on a vacation. There will be very little formal entertaining until autumn, and even the entertaining done by official members of society who are still in town will be for the most part informal.

To Sail on Houston.

The President plans to sail aboard the U. S. S. Houston next Saturday, through the Panama Canal to California, and thence to Hawaii, where a royal welcome awaits him. It has been many years since a Chief Executive has gone so far afield in the summer. All during the Hoover regime the White House was open during the entire season, Mr. and Mrs. Hoover contenting themselves with the Presidential camp near Rapidan, Va. While the President is en route to the Pacific Islands, the First Lady will spend several weeks traveling over the country, and will meet the President in San Francisco the end of next month, to return east with him.

In spite of the fact that the President will not have his two grandchildren, Sistie and Buzzie Dall, with him during his stay at Hyde Park, he had the pleasure Thursday of making the acquaintance, for the first time, of his young daughter-in-law, Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, and her six-week-old daughter, Ruth, who arrived bag and baggage from Fort Worth, Tex., with the proud husband and father. The Elliott Roosevelts will remain at Hyde Park until the President returns from his cruise and will probably linger there to be with him some time after his return.

On Friday the President and Mrs. Roosevelt proudly watched their son, Franklin, jr., row in the Harvard "Jayvee" shell at the famous Harvard-Yale regatta. The President and his party viewed the races from the jaunty Presidential yacht Sequoia, commanded by Lieut. Walter Jones, U. S. N., which was anchored in the Thames River near New London, Conn. The Sequoia was escorted by the cutter Cuyahoga, and as the little yacht swung into the river guns barked the Presidential salute of 21 guns from the Naval Base, from old forts on the Sound and from the Coast Guard College. The largest crowds in years gathered in the old whaling town of New London Friday, arriving by train, motor, boat and airplane to watch the most popular boat races in the country. Beautiful yachts assembled in numbers which rivaled the nautical gathering in the New York Harbor last month for the review of the United States Fleet. The Corsair, with Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan and a large party on board, was in the group, as were Commodore Arthur Curtiss James' Aloha, the Hi-Esmaro of Mr. and Mrs. H. Edward Manville, which was recently in Washington; the Captiva, with Mr. and Mrs. John Hay Whitney aboard. The Nourmahal of Mr. Vincent Astor, aboard which the President has frequently cruised, was absent from the group, having sailed for Europe. Mr. Astor, who sailed on the Manhattan, will board his yacht on the other side and cruise in northern European waters.

To Greet Colombian.

In spite of the fact that the White House is really closed for the summer, the President will be there Tuesday and for the few days between then and the time he plans to sail from Annapolis on his cruise. On Tuesday the Chief Executive will greet the President-elect of Colombia, Senor Dr. Don Alfonso Lopez, who will spend several days in the Capital, arriving today. The President will entertain at a men's luncheon on Tuesday for the distinguished visitor, who will be entertained extensively during the brief visit he pays the Capital.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Francis P. Garvan, of New York, who have recently been visiting the former Attorney General and Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer at their apartment in Wardman Park Hotel, entertained at a brilliant party in their home, Roslyn House, at Wheatley, Long Island, for their daughter, Miss Mabel Garvan, and Miss Emily Hornblower, daughter of Mrs. George S. Hornblower, of New York. The party was a supper dance, at which the two young girls were presented to society. They will take an active part in the de-

MRS. JOHN D. CREIGHTON, who before her recent marriage in New York was Miss Betty Harwood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harwood, of Bronxville, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Creighton have returned to Washington from their wedding trip, and last evening entertained at a house-warming party in their apartment in Kew Gardens.

Carolina Holds Annual German

Many Social Groups Are Represented; Event Is Traditional.

Nearly every State in the Union was represented in the brilliant assemblage of guests who attended the fifty-fourth annual June german given in Rocky Mount, N. C., Friday by members of the Carolina Cotillion Club.

Leaders for the grand march, in which the numerals "34" were worked out in stately tread, were President George P. Arrington, whose guest was Miss Alice Winston Alexander, of Charlotte; Mr. George L. Weeks, vice president, who was with Miss Mildred Joyner, and Mr. Leslie F. Hinson, secretary and treasurer, who was with Mrs. Ninson. Mr. R. Bruce Savage, with Miss Louise Davenport, directed.

A second figure, which formally opened the german, was staged by the honorary club members and was led by Mayor M. D. Munn and Mrs. P. L. Thigpen. Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Fenner directed.

The Cotillion Club, which was organized in 1880 with Mr. Thomas H. Battle its first president, brings together each year the largest aggregation to assemble in the South. It is one of the oldest social units in the entire Southland and its annual dance climaxes a series of events which extend through a week. Every important social unit in the city takes part in the elaborate program.

butante festivities of the metropolis next winter. The beautiful gardens of the Garvan estate were lighted with colored lanters, and the huge marquee, where the dancing took place, was covered with a gay striped awning. Supper was served at small tables on the terraces of the house. Preceding the ball, Mrs. Manolo Wiechers, of Brookville, Long Island, entertained at a large dinner for Miss Edith Lord, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George deForest Lord, who will be a New York debutante next winter.

Miss Garvan was the guest of honor at a large dinner dance given before the ball by Mr. and Mrs. Carll Tucker, aboard their yacht, Migrant, anchored off Glen Cove harbor. Long Island is a gay place in the summer with so many magnificent estates opened and so many charming girls making their bows at delightful al fresco balls and dinners.

In Washington the debutantes must wait until the autumn when a short few weeks of the season is handed to them for their own. Already Capital debutantes of the coming season are grooming themselves for the fray and the winter's crop includes a number of misses who have been most popular as subdebs.

The country clubs, for this month at least, are the mecca for this younger set, and there they try their wings for the winter flight through the arduous mazes of a season in Capital society.

The marriage of Miss Eleanor Margaret Waite, daughter of Mrs. William Franklin Waite, of Washington, to Mr. Henry Branch Johnson, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Branch Johnson, of Cabin John Park, Md., took place yesterday at the Central Presbyterian Church at 3 p. m. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. James H. Taylor.

Organ selections were given by Mr. R. Deane Shure, prominent Washington musician.

Palms and ferns formed an effective background for the wedding party. The two gold vases given to the church by former President Woodrow Wilson were filled with white daisies.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. James P. Waite. She wore a white satin gown, made on medieval lines, with lace yoke and sleeves terminating in points over the hands. Her skirt fell into a graceful train and her waist-length white tulle veil was held in place by bands of orange blossoms. She carried a sheaf of calla lilies.

Sister Is Maid of Honor.

Miss Louise Waite, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a frock of pale green mousseline de soie, made with short puffed sleeves, high neckline and full skirt. Her hat was pale green horsehair, trimmed with velvet of deep green, and she carried a bouquet of Joanna Hill roses.

Mr. Livingston Johnson, cousin of the bridegroom, was the best man. The ushers were Mr. Alfred Johnson, Mr. John Johnson, Mr. Leland Willis, and Mr. David Trundle. A small reception for relatives and close friends was held following the ceremony at the home of the bride's mother on Kanawha street. The home was decorated with palms, ferns, and summer flowers. Mrs. Waite, mother of the bride, wore a gown of green and brown chiffon with a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Johnson, mother of the bridegroom, was in brown and yellow chiffon, with a corsage of Joanna Hill roses and lilies of the valley.

Leave for Florida.

After the reception the young couple left for a tour of Florida and the South. The bride wore a yellow and brown plaid linen suit, with brown accessories. Upon their return, they will make their home here.

Both are graduates of American University. The bridegroom took an active part in athletics there.

I LOST 38 POUNDS
—without diet or exercise

I was so fat people laughed behind my back. I tried everything I had ever heard of to reduce . . . diet, exercise, purgatives . . . but nothing helped. Purgatives weakened me. Exercise left me exhausted. And I lacked the will power to diet when all my friends were eating the rich, sweet foods I adored.

Then, when I'd almost given up hope, I learned about a simple corrective for abnormal obesity, known and prescribed by physicians the world over . . . a corrective that would change the food I ate into energy instead of excess fat. I found out that this simple corrective was put up, in convenient tablets containing the right quantity, by one of the best-known medical laboratories in America.

And so I took Marmola—4 tablets a day—and quickly my excess fat began to disappear. What delighted me even more was the way I felt as a result of taking it—so mentally alert, so full of pep!

Now I'm down to normal—and never again will I let myself put on that deadening load of useless fat. Whenever I start to gain again, I take Marmola. It keeps my weight exactly right.

That in brief is what thousands who have reduced the Marmola way might well tell you. Since 1907, more than 20,000,000 packages of Marmola have been purchased. Could you ask for any better recommendation than that?

Today—buy a package of Marmola, and start at once. You will soon experience Marmola's benefits. When you have gone far enough, stop taking Marmola. And you will bless the day you first discovered this marvelous reducing agent.

Marmola is on sale by dealers everywhere—from coast to coast.

Newfoundland Is Popular Playground Easily Accessible to Visitors From United States

Varied Attractions Offered By Unique, Historical Island

Moderate Temperatures Prevail During Most of Day, While Nights Are Comfortable; Fishing and Canoeing Good.

By Darrell Preston Aub.

At the mouth of the beautiful St. Lawrence Gulf, off the east coast of Canada, is Newfoundland, tenth largest island in the world, a pleasure land easily accessible to visitors from the United States.

Contrary to general impression, Newfoundland is not an icebound, fog-swathed country. From May to October, the island enjoys a temperate climate. In July and August, the thermometer frequently reaches 80. The evenings here are cool and bracing, ideal for respite after a warm day.

Although the Icelandic sagas relate that Lief Ericson and his crew discovered Newfoundland about 1000 A. D., the first authentic discovery is accredited to John Cabot. In 1497, Cabot, a Genoese mariner, obtained a charter from King Henry VII of England to seek new territory in the New World which Columbus had discovered five years earlier. Cabot reached a port in the "New Founde Land" on the feast day of St. John, and the name of St. Johns was given the principal harbor.

Outdoors Playland.

Newfoundland is becoming the goal of a growing army of spring and summer vacationists, for here nature has displayed a lavish hand in creating a playground for those who love the outdoors.

Roughly triangular in shape, the island is about 300 miles long on each of its three sides. The coastline is extraordinarily irregular and rugged. Many large bays are studded with innumerable islands, giving the coast a scenic grandeur and charm. Narrow fjords extend their watery arms far inland. The interior is watered by countless lakes, ponds and small rivers, which are so well stocked with fish that the ardent angler may catch as many fish as he desires.

The thrill of a visit to Newfoundland begins long before one sights its rugged cliffs, for one may encounter whales and porpoises and flotillas of fishing schooners, long before reaching the island.

The approach to Newfoundland by sea is crowded with splendid and unusual sights. The rocky and irregular coastline is an almost unbroken succession of huge cliffs rising 200 to 400 feet high. The approach to St. Johns is beautiful, for ship seems to be steaming head on into the cliff ahead. Suddenly there appears a cleft in the rock, so narrow that it is invisible at sea.

Attractive City.

The visitor to St. Johns will find many pleasing aspects in the city. The most commanding structure here is the Roman Catholic Cathedral, which rises 225 feet on a high hill above the city. There are, too, a number of other fine structures. St. Bonaventura College and the Anglican, Methodist and Presbyterian colleges, the government house, the public hospital, the market house and the postoffice.

The waterfront of St. Johns is a scene of constant interest to visitors, for here the glamour of sea life reaches its height. Hardy natives go about their activities of handling and shipping enormous quantities of seal, cod and oil.

St. Johns is built upon the Avalon Peninsula, which is at the southeastern point of the huge triangular island and is connected with the island mainland by a narrow isthmus. The interior of Avalon is rugged and hilly. Rivers, lakes and apparently endless forests make the interior an ideal playground.

For the visitor who is interested in picking up antiques and provincial products there will be found happy hunting ground. Hooked rugs, hand-carved ship models and the justly famous knitted goods are among articles of native handiwork.

Rich in Minerals.

Part of the island colony of Newfoundland is Labrador, a large territory on the Canadian mainland rich in minerals, water power and timber. It possesses coastal scenery of gorgeous beauty and its rivers and lakes, as in Newfoundland, abound in salmon and trout. This is unexplored territory, comparatively, and it more and more attracts sportsmen and travelers.

The position of Newfoundland as the half-way house across the Atlantic makes it a logical air station for transatlantic flights. There is a large runway at Harbor Grace on the East Coast, which has been the destination of many fliers who have essayed the Atlantic crossing. St. Johns saw the take-off of Alcock and Brown on the first successful transatlantic airplane flight. Since then Newfoundland has witnessed the flights of Col. Lindbergh, Chamberlain, Byrd, De Pinedo, Schlee, Brock and many others.

Motor Travel Gains In Canadian Town

Fredericton, New Brunswick, June 23.—Motor tourist traffic to New Brunswick, as shown by the returns compiled today by the Canadian customs officers at the 25 ports of entry along the international border, showed an increase on May 31 of 19 per cent over the corresponding period of 1933.

"Not only is our motor tourist traffic from the United States showing a substantial increase this year, but our inquiries from nonresident anglers seeking fishing dates in New Brunswick, have jumped more than 40 per cent," said D. Leo Dolan, director of information and tourist travel for the New Brunswick government.

"Our advertising campaign started about ten days ago in United States publications. During the first five days of June the bureau of information at Fredericton handled 311 inquiries from potential tourist visitors and nonresident anglers, the largest five-day period we have experienced in some three years."

Quebec Will Keep Dust Out of Motorists' Eyes

Even if the old bus won't step along as fast as that new streamlined job next door you'll have to eat no dust in the Province of Quebec this summer. The Hon. J. E. Perrault, minister of roads for Quebec, has announced that $300,000 will be spent this year to keep Quebec's 30,000 miles of highways free of dust.

The roads over more than half of the Quebec highways system, penetrating all parts of the big province, are improved, but even in remote sections where gravel routes lead to the big fish and game, calcium chloride applications are making sure that no "smoke gets in your eyes."

Foundrymen of World Arrange Visit to D. C.

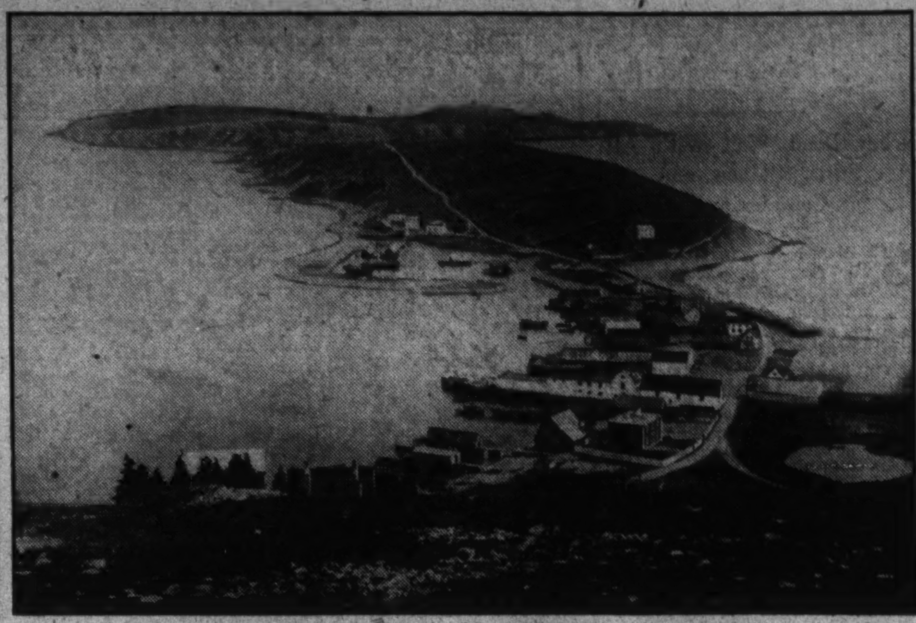
New York, June 23.—The fifth International World Foundrymen's Congress will meet in Philadelphia October 23 to 25, it is announced by George White, manager of the American Department of Thomas Cook & Son, Wagons-Lits, Inc. Delegates from Europe will arrive in New York October 10. About 100 members are expected. Arrangements for the tour are being handled by Cook's.

The foundrymen will visit Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Washington and Philadelphia before sailing October 27. The tour includes a trip to the Ford plant in Detroit, a visit to Niagara Falls, sightseeing at the World's Fair in Chicago. A reunion from previous meetings will be held in Washington. The international convention was last held in the United States in 1927.

Carioca Is a Mountain.

Americans who visit Rio de Janeiro on their way via the Cunarder Franconia to the Eucharistic Congress in Buenos Aires next fall will get a good view of the Carioca range of mountains, after which the new tango craze was named.

Goal of Many Summer Vacationists



Newfoundland's many large bays are studded with islands, giving the coast a scenic grandeur and charm.

Mallorca to Celebrate In Memory of Serra

New York, June 23.—George C. Gaede, passenger traffic manager of the American Export Lines, announces that his company has received the advance program for the Mallorca commemoration ceremonies for Fra Junipero Serra, founder of the California Missions. The program focuses attention on an important chapter in the history of the Pacific Territories that once belonged to Spain and the great bronze bells, graceful arches and cream gold walls that still give the exotic touch of Mallorca to the American Southwest.

The celebration will be held throughout the Island of Mallorca from July 10 to 20, with services in the little pueblo at Petra, the birthplace of the distinguished Mallorquin, pioneer of the Franciscan Order in America.

Ice River Valley Tour Is Scheduled

Banff, Alberta, June 23.—The Ice River Valley, a seldom-visited region of the Canadian Rockies, will be the main objective of this year's official four-day ride by the trail riders of the Canadian Rockies July 27-30, inclusive.

The starting point for the 42-mile trek has been set just east of the Leanchoil (B. C.) station of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Students Leave July 3 On Scandinavian Trip

Final itinerary arrangements for the first American school movement to Sweden was completed this week under the direction of Robert C. French, head master of the Garey School, at Aberdeen, Md.

The traveling summer school will leave New York July 3 on the Swedish-American liner Gripsholm. The event marks the initial step in the Swedish cooperative educational plan, to enable youths to hold a "tour and study" course in Scandinavia this summer.

Curacao's Own Souvenir.

A popular souvenir picked up by passengers on the Mauretania's Sea Breeze Cruises to the West Indies and South America, is a bottle of curacao, purchased in the island of the same name. It is flavored by the aromatic orange which grows nowhere else but Curacao. The liqueur is made in Holland, to which country the oranges are shipped.

American Group Sails June 27 to Study Soviet

A group of Americans will sail for Russia June 27 in the Aquitania to make a new study of the government and economic system of Soviet Russia, according to an announcement by the Cunard Line.

The group, to be known as the Second Russian Seminar, will travel under the leadership of several specialists, including Prof. Samuel H. Cross, of Harvard University.

Scenic Area Slated To Be Kept Intact

A recent item of interest to nature lovers is the decision of the National Forest Service Commission to withhold from settlement the 240,000 acres of scenic grandeur on the Sun River in northwestern Montana. The region to be perpetuated is 35 miles long and 15 miles wide, and tips the northern section of Glacier National Park.

While almost as wild as before the advent of the white man, it is now being listed as the most primitive of American scenic spectacles by the American Express Co. in its cooperative railroad program of "Circle Tours" to exploit the American West this summer.

World's Southernmost City.

Punta Arenas, now called Magallanes, is the southernmost city in the world. It is located on the Straits of Magellan, in the south of Chile. The temperature averages 50 degrees in summer and 38 degrees in winter. Although it rains or snows almost daily, 25,000 people live there.

Sunday Eve Supper Bid Is an Honor

Only Intimate Friends Invited to These Affairs.

Simple Menus Are Served as Informally as Possible.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

IF YOU receive a calling card with "Buffet supper at 7 o'clock, Sunday, July 1" written across the top, count yourself fortunate. Such an invitation comes only from an intimate friend, and the Sunday night buffet supper is the most delightful entertainment on the list.

The hostess who knows her rules on these intimate little meals won't plan anything elaborate. Nothing of the terrapin-champagne type is suitable. Simple dishes and simple decorations are in good taste. The intricate centerpiece and the lace-inserted, heavily embroidered table cloth will be rserved for the formal dinner.

Hot Dishes Last.

A plain white linen cloth is appropriate. A bowl of flowers in the center of the table with candles at either end also fits into the picture. Dishes of sandwiches, salad, stacks of plates, forks and spoons, cups and saucers, and a coffee service are placed on the table next. Later, at the hour set for the supper, hot dishes—which may be creamed chicken, croquettes, creamed eggs, or lobster Newburg, with scalloped potatoes or baked macaroni and hot buttered rolls, are brought in.

Card tables may be arranged near chairs in the living room where guests may sit after serving themselves at the table. Dessert is served at the card tables later.

The Dutch Buffet.

An even more informal type of Sunday night entertainment is the "Dutch buffet supper," including nothing hot except coffee. Dishes of liverwurst, baked ham, potato salad, two or three kinds of cheese, pickles and rye bread take the place of the daintier dishes appropriate to the other Sunday supper. Beer is served at the card tables, and later, dessert.

An invitation to a supper of the latter type may be given the day before over the telephone or in an informal note.

Query—Is it proper to remain standing through the entire wedding ceremony, even when the bride and groom kneel for the final prayer?

Answer—Guests should remain standing during the entire ceremony, from the time the bride's mother walks down the aisle.

Query—Please suggest some suitable wedding gift (not costing over $5) for me to give a cousin of mine who has just married.

Answer—A linen luncheon or breakfast set, half dozen wine or cocktail glasses, a table lamp or a picture would be suitable.

Requires a Reply.

Query—Won't you please tell me if an invitation to a wedding reception requires a formal acceptance or regret?

Answer—An invitation to a wedding reception requires a reply. It should be written on the first page of a sheet of note paper. Although hand-written, the words should be spaced as though they were engraved and in keeping with the words of the invitation. For instance, an acceptance should go like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis White
accept with pleasure
Mr. and Mrs. Lee Thomas
Browning's
kind invitation for
Wednesday the second of June

A regret should be phrased as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis White
regret that they are unable to accept
Mr. and Mrs. Lee Thomas
Browning's
kind invitation for
Wednesday the second of June

Query—If there is a guest of honor at a bridge party, should the person who wins the high-score prize present it to the guest of honor?

Answer—The person who wins the high score prize should not present it to the guest of honor. The hostess should provide another gift for the honoree.

Query—A friend of mine recently told me the tea wagon had gone out of style. Please inform me if she was right.

Answer—The tea wagon has gone out of style in ultra-fashionable circles, but it is still virtually indispensable in a servantless house.

No Maid or Butler.

Query—I have no maid or butler. When I am having guests to dinner, should I greet them at the door, or should my husband greet them first?

Answer—When receiving dinner or luncheon guests, your husband should open the door to greet them. On other occasions when visitors ring, you should open the door.

Query—I am going to be married at a church. I plan to have six bridesmaids and a maid of honor. The wedding party will also include six groomsmen and a best man. As yet, however, I have not decided whom to have for flower girl and ring bearer. Is it absolutely necessary to have either or both of these in a big wedding?

Answer—It is not necessary to have either the flower girl or the ring bearer.

Query—How long should a widow wait to remarry? Also please tell me in detail how a second marriage ceremony should be arranged.

Answer—A widow is supposed to wait a year before she marries again. This second ceremony should be a quiet one in a chapel or at home. Her wedding dress should be a simple afternoon frock. worn with a hat. She may have one attendant, but usually does not.

Friend Has Birthday.

Query—I am sending a birthday gift to one of my friends whom I haven't seen in a long time. Please tell me whether I should send a note with it and, if so, what should I say? I haven't exchanged letters with this friend in a long time.

Answer—Sending a note with the gift is not necessary, but it would lend a personal touch. You might write a note of this type:

Dear Helen:

Today is your birthday and I want to send you my heartiest congratulations and best wishes for many happy returns of the day. I hope the little gift that goes with this will prove to be something that will be of use. Fondly,

MARY.

Hope Ridings Miller answers questions on etiquette in The Sunday Post. When personal replies are desired, self-addressed, stamped envelopes should accompany the question.

The GENTLE SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

A Man Who—

Being a model address for a Congressional wife campaigning this summer before women's groups.

"LADIES—I AM NOT going to bore you this afternoon with any dry-as-dust discussion of my husband's platform. I know you do not give a tinker's damn (Editor's note—It might be better to substitute "darn" with some audiences) about my husband's stand on Dr. Tugwell, Dr. Wirt, or even the carryings on of the Mdivani brothers. I know you do not care who his grandfather voted for in 1868. But I know you will be interested in learning why every wife—and every would-be wife—should vote for him.

"He has never been known to throw a newspaper on the floor after reading it.

"When he calls up to say he has to work late, he scrupulously explains where, when and with whom he is going to dine.

"He does not explode if any one touches his pipe, razor blades, fishing tackle, buttons, pieces of string, or accumulations of cigar bands.

"When a motorist in front makes a wrong turn or hogs the road, he does not exclaim, 'Another woman driver!'

"He will sit sweetly attentive through an entire evening listening to my friends discuss permanents, banana diets and the merits of two-way stretch girdles.

"He is politely attentive to my plain women friends and politely indifferent to the fascinating ones.

"He never turns to stare appraisingly at a pretty woman—at least, not when I am with him. He never gapes at a scantily dressed one nor snickers at a homely one. And he never comes home indignanat because some bounder of a married man at his office has been trying to make a date with some pretty little stenographer who has fled to him for protection.

"When a woman's name is mentioned, he does not immediately ask, 'How old is she?'

"He never speaks of club women as 'old hens.'

"He does not refer to women past 45 as elderly nor to those past 35 as middle-aged, and he does not ask my spinster friends every time he meets them when they are going to get married.

"He does not straighten his tie every time a cutie smiles at him.

"He constantly tells me I am as beautiful as Cleopatra, as stylish as Gloria Swanson, as intellectual as Sappho, as IT-ish as Jean Harlow and that no woman he has ever seen on stage or screen or behind a cigar counter could compare with me."

June Anvil Chorus.

"I SEE where Sadie Slipper's marrying Hal Sparks."

"You don't mean it! She'll be about his third, won't she?"

At least. I guess, though, Sadie couldn't be too particular. She was getting on. Did you hear about Mabel Dobyns?"

"No."

"She's engaged to Sam Nutter."

"Not that fat slob! He's getting terribly bald in the back."

"Yes, but his folks have oodles of money."

"Well, all I can say is, she can have him. I never could see him. You know he tried to get every girl in town."

"I'll say he did. Did you know Sonia March finally got Earl Dodger?"

"You don't mean it! Well, she'll certainly have her hands full with his temper."

"Yes, and her mother."

"Well, all I can say is I bet it don't last six months."

"I bet it won't either."

It is far more effective to pick lint off a man's coat lapel than to pull motes out of his eye.

One of life's mysteries—Why parrot-nosed women invariably buy green hats.

One never realizes how many rich men there are in the world until hearing the descriptions of June bridegrooms as given by relatives of June brides.

Whenever a woman tries on at home the unbecoming hat she bought downtown under the spell of the saleswoman, she decides that after all it's personality that counts.

Plain Shirts Are Best Bet For Any Man

They Look Well With All Suits, Collars and Complexions.

SOME men have an undeniable flair for being well dressed. Others have just as pronounced a flair for selecting colors and patterns that make even casual beholders wince. No wonder their wives insist upon tagging along when they go shopping.

The man who has any reason to doubt he lacks the intuitive clothes sense of a Beau Brummel can climb into the well-dressed class simply by observing a few rules. At least, that is all that's necessary where shirts are concerned.

Rule 1 demands the pattern of the suit should be different from the pattern of the shirt. The more fanciful the suit is in color or design, the plainer the shirt should be. All of which means it is impossible to reach the saturation point in plain white shirts.

Here Are the Rules.

Here are some more rules: Plain shirt patterns or those with tiny stripes or fine checks are best for plain suits. They are also the best choice for herringbone or fine-striped suits. Shadow checked shirts or those with infinitesimal stripes are satisfactory with plaid suits, although a plain shirt is undoubtedly smarter.

And now for the material of the suit. Rough fabrics, cheviots and tweeds look their best when combined with flannel or Oxford-weave shirts. Worsted suits get along happily with madras, broadcloth or Oxford shirts.

Madras and broadcloth are developed in all sorts of unusual colors this year. A shade of yellow that borders on lemon is good looking with white Palm Beach suit and blue tie, providing the man's complexion can stand that combination.

Purple shirts are attracting a deal of attention. They naturally would. It must be admitted, however, that not all of it is favorable. For the business man these deep heliotrope affairs are a bit "arty."

Short colored bosoms with narrow pleating distinguish some of the new imported madras shirts. The cuffs and collars are in the same material and color. The lightweight body of the shirt is usually white or in a paler shade of the bosom's hue.

Their Suave Lines Make Them Suitable for Any Summer Daytime Affair

Most Useful Costume

EVENING CLOTHES MAY possess high brilliance or classic beauty. Street costumes may be mannishly tailored or sleekly feminine. Sports clothes may be practical or decorative. But spectator sports clothes can be anything and everything. They may be developed in silk, cotton, linen or wool. They may be intensely practical while being just as intensely decorative.

* * * *

Best of all, they may be worn for street, for travel, for informal afternoon affairs; in fact, for everything but formal affairs and active sports. The versatility of this type of costume makes it ideal for the American woman whose life is full of "little things."

* * * *

The European woman spends most of her time in her home. When she does step out, it is usually for a stroll on the boulevard, for a visit to the theater, opera or dinner in a glittering restaurant. This means she can get along beautifully with very casual clothes and very formal clothes. The former she wears within her own home. The latter she dons when she is going places.

* * * *

But the American woman attends numerous small daytime affairs. She dashes out to club meetings, to bridge parties, feminine luncheons and teas, to country club affairs. If she has given her clothes problem much thought, she has undoubtedly discovered the most all-round costume she can own in the summer time is a little dress, ensemble or suit that fits in the spectator sports category.

* * * *

Novelty Materials For Sports

WASHINGTON SHOPS, in addition to the customary linens, boucles and sheer wools, have several new materials made into stunning spectator sports things this season. The materials themselves may not always be startlingly new, but their use for sports attire is strictly a 1934 development. Take string lace, for instance. Like ordinary lace, it doesn't crush, yet it has a much less dressy appearance, which is all to the good where sports apparel is concerned.

* * * *

Cut-out embroidery is another fabric being used for spectator sports dresses and ensembles this summer. It is cool, has a crisp appearance, and adapts itself sweetly to fairly tailored lines. Many of the smartest cut-out embroidery costumes are in dark colors. Navy is every bit as fashionable now as it was two or three months ago. Brown is forging ahead daily.

* * * *

But genuinely new is a dusky shade of green that approximates the color of evergreen trees at twilight. Light slips are worn under dark frocks to give them a summery look. White, ecru, lemon, yellow or palest pink look well under navy blue. The same tints are grand beneath brown cut-out embroidery, although the pink may be several shades darker than that worn with navy.

Accessories Work Wonders

LINES ARE AS IMPORTANT for spectator sports things as for tailored clothes. The idea is to keep everything simple, but to corral a dash of novelty if it can be managed discreetly. Thus, a svelte brown string dress that "sculps" the figure has two ropes of contrasting velvet tied about the waist. Shorter ropes of burnt orange and green are twirled into a bow at the collarless neckline. Could anything be more incongruous than cotton string and silk velvet?

* * * *

Yet the effect is what designers invariably characterize as smart. Other string lace dresses have wide tailored belts of contrasting canvas or felt. Those who never get enough of initials or monograms can design their own, whack them out of canvas or felt, then attach them to dresses with which the belts are to be worn. Canvas or felt bags complete the accessory ensemble idea.

* * * *

In fact, accessories are the things that make or break the spectator sports costume. A perfectly plain gray crinkly cotton dress becomes downright urbane if black linen hat, black linen envelope bag, emerald green wide belt and emerald green gauntlets are added. The green can be exchanged for firemen's red, deep-sea blue or grape purple whenever the wearer's mood calls for a bit of variety.

Fashion Foibles Of the Famous

This is the last of a series of articles telling of the styles introduced by queens, empresses, and other noted women in history.

The Empress Eugenie.

THE famous Titian hair of the Empress Eugenie was always brought out to the best advantage in the costumes of its owner, who was the fashion leader of France during the reign of her husband, Napoleon III. Lilac was a favorite color of the empress and she usually wore violets in her corsage. Among her other favorite colors were water green, lemon, pearl gray, and the various shades of blue, all of which were effective with her transparent skin and delicate coloring. Silver and white was her favorite combination on regal occasions.

Though she dressed quietly at home—usually in simple black cloth—Eugenie was fond of dress in public. Her trousseau contained a flounce of Alencon lace upon which 36 women had worked 18 months. When she went to the opening of the Suez Canal, on a two-month absence, she carried 250 gowns with her.

Eugenie was the inventor of many practical fashions, including invisible hair nets, colored petticoats and the summer umbrella. During the latter part of her reign she made a religious vow never to wear silk again but to dress in brown wool. After that for a long time even her ball dresses and dinner gowns were of this material.

White Pique Omnipresent In Capital

Starched Material Seen All Day and Far Into the Night.

THERE seems to be no code for the working hours of the humbler fabrics in the minds of fashionable Washington this summer. White pique starched to the last degree and polished with a hot iron is on duty from sunset to dawn and a less stiffly laundered variety of this material serves many a matron and maid from sunup to sunset. Other cotton fabrics that have been raised to the realm of smartness this summer are gingham, voile and their demure cousin, calico.

At a luncheon at one of the country clubs last week the predominance of gingham dresses with wide-brimmed hats and gauntlet gloves to match was a matter of comment. The gingham dresses included tiny pin checks, Scotch plaids, striped effects. At this luncheon flowered pique dresses with hats to match were also noted.

Mrs. Henry C. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, went shopping last week in a suit of white mesh material with a huge organdie bow at the neck. Mrs. Wallace wore a wide-brimmed white felt hat.

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who likes to wear white in the summer, is wearing a particularly effective costume in white silk pique with a fagotted yoke. The sleeves come well below the elbows. With this Representative Rogers wears a chic white straw hat.

Lady Lewis, wife of Sir Wilmott Lewis, was seen lunching at one of the down-town hotels last week in a cool-looking sports dress of striped, mercerized gingham. The stripes were in cream, tan and blue. Lady Lewis had on a wide-brimmed natural colored straw hat.

Mrs. George Murray, in the same luncheon party, had on a dress of figured cotton and silk, made with a deep cape to form short sleeves. With this she wore a very large black straw hat.

Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, who has arrived at her summer home in Newport, R. I., from a tour of Europe, had on at one of the out-of-door events a white silk knitted dress with a knotted collar and elbow sleeves. Her hat was white felt.

Mrs. Frank W. Mondell looked smart at a recent out-of-door tea party in a dress of blue and white figured material with which she wore a wide-brimmed white straw hat.

Shops Offer Useful Helps To Gardener

Rose Shears and Tool Baskets Make Season's Debut.

By Katherine Smith.

WHERE LARKSPUR LIFTS blue blossoms that match the sky and nasturtiums are bright and golden, where lilies are timid and palely beautiful and roses reach long arms over fence and arbor—that may be your garden.

Then again, where a few green pots add a touch of color indoors, or the sunshine rests on blooms on a window sill—that may be your garden.

A plot of ground, however large or small, holds a charm for all of us. The dust may gather indoors while the garden is being cared for. And manufacturers have produced all sorts of charming and useful gadgets for indoor or outdoor gardening.

• • • •

Garden Utensils.

Let's begin with the garden itself. Copper watering cans with long, straight spouts—modern, silly things—cost little more than $1. A green can with a removable nozzle costs $1.

When you clip roses, protect your hands from the thorns with new efficient shears, now being sold. They cut the stem and hold the blossom upright until you want to release it. No more thorns, no more groping to hold the stem.

• • • •

Handy Baskets.

A nice gift for the amateur gardener—a sturdy basket containing trowel, weeder and transplanting trowel. There is another basket with a long cane thrust through the middle. Why? Stick the cane in the sod—a pointed metal tip is there for that purpose—and there need be no stooping and breaking of backs to get the flowers in the container.

• • • •

Oaken Buckets.

The old oaken bucket comes out of the well and pertly offers to hold your loveliest potted plants. To begin at the beginning, a flat circle of wood has a chain looped over the edge. At each end of the chain swings a little brass-bound bucket. They may be hanged on the porch, dripping ferns or ivy in a truly coy fashion.

There are green metal pot stands with pots to match. The stands are simple, sturdy and light, gracefully modeled and suitable for small spaces. Sizes and prices vary.

• • • •

Window Boxes.

What a wide assortment of window boxes there are this year! Every color, size and price. Green and red, cream and yellow, they frame a window with charm and the most aristocratic blooms will feel comfortable in them.

• • • •

Wrought Iron Table.

There's a little wrought-iron table that can be used not only as an end table, but as a stand for your choicest vase filled with your choicest flowers. The tabletop is a tray, copper and shining, that fits into the iron frame. The tables are tiny and square, large and oblong. They are priced from $3 to a little over $5.

So bring the garden into the house, and let these gadgets make it easier for you.

Season Opens For Sun Tan And Blisters

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IN THE summer a woman's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of tan. Either she wonders how to get it or how not to get it. Whether to buy it or risk burning. And what to do with it after she has it.

When she goes to the beach, or plays tennis in the broiling sun, she should always carry along a sun cream or sun oil. The oil mediates the burn, but the cream is surer for scaring it away entirely. In the evening, if she feels called upon to emerge from her boudoir two shades darker, it's a matter of ten minutes to rub a good clinging foundation lotion over her arms, neck, face and back, and put suntan powder over this. Or she can use a specially prepared "film," really a fine coating—that won't come off until it's creamed over.

THIS MODERN mermaid is acquiring her sun-tan the scientific way—slowly, that is, using lots of oil.

Beware of the Sun!

Every woman, blonde, brunette or a combination, should take tanning—or not tanning—seriously. When she's exposed to the sun for any length of time she should certainly use a sun lotion. Either one that permits a light tan, or prevents one.

When it comes to tanning there's the matter of lashes. They're liable to bleach and to dry, and break off. But if they're brushed over with a good reliable eyelash grower they will continue to stay sleek-groomed and healthy.

One can hardly say to the gardenia brunette or the blonde—don't tan! But to the woman past 35 it's a different matter. The sun dries the skin and makes it more prone to wrinkles (too much sun, of course). And the tan tone inevitably makes a woman appear older than she actually is.

Should 16-Year-Old Kiss Boy Friends Good Night?

By Mary Haworth.

MY DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am 16 and just beginning to go out with boys. What I want to know is whether I have to let them kiss me, because they seem to expect it when they bring me home?

Sometimes I like it and sometimes I don't. What I mean is, I like some boys to kiss me but others I'd rather not, but I don't want them to think I'm a short sport.

What can I say or do to stop them without making them think I am a prude? JEAN W.

Kiss Not Obligatory.

MY DEAR JEAN W.: No girl owes a boy a good-night kiss in payment for an evening's entertainment. In the first place, a boy doesn't seek a girl's company unless she has attracted him—by her good looks, her gayety, her popularity, her companionability, or her social accomplishments.

• • • •

A girl should remember that when accepting a boy's attentions. Then she will realize she does him favor enough when she consents to spend an evening in his company. Boys accept girls at much the same evaluation girls put upon themselves.

• • • •

It is only your youth and inexperience which make you afraid boys may think you a "short sport" or a "prude" if you don't kiss them good night. When you are a little older, you will understand that the courage to say "no" to a kiss you don't want is part of being sophisticated, while to accept one you don't want is to be spineless and "easy."

One Woman's Theory.

ONE OF THE loveliest and most-sought-after actresses of the stage and screen—said by Mary Pickford to have the greatest magnetism of any woman in Hollywood—gives this bit of advice to girls:

"Always manage to look your loveliest and most enticing when saying 'good night,' but don't let him kiss you, if you want to make sure he calls again."

• • • •

To that I would add—at the risk of sounding old-fashioned and preachy, perhaps, that it really does pay a girl to be very, very economical with her kisses. Popular romance to the contrary, a boy seldom falls in love with the girl he finds he can kiss after the first occasion or two.

• • • •

Since the dawn of civilization, poets and artists have emphasized the spiritual beauty of the first kiss of real love. It is something worth waiting for, and scarcely to be expected when a girl is 16. It comes a little later, usually not until after she is 20. And she will miss the full value of this experience if she has known too many careless kisses before.

How to Be Tactful.

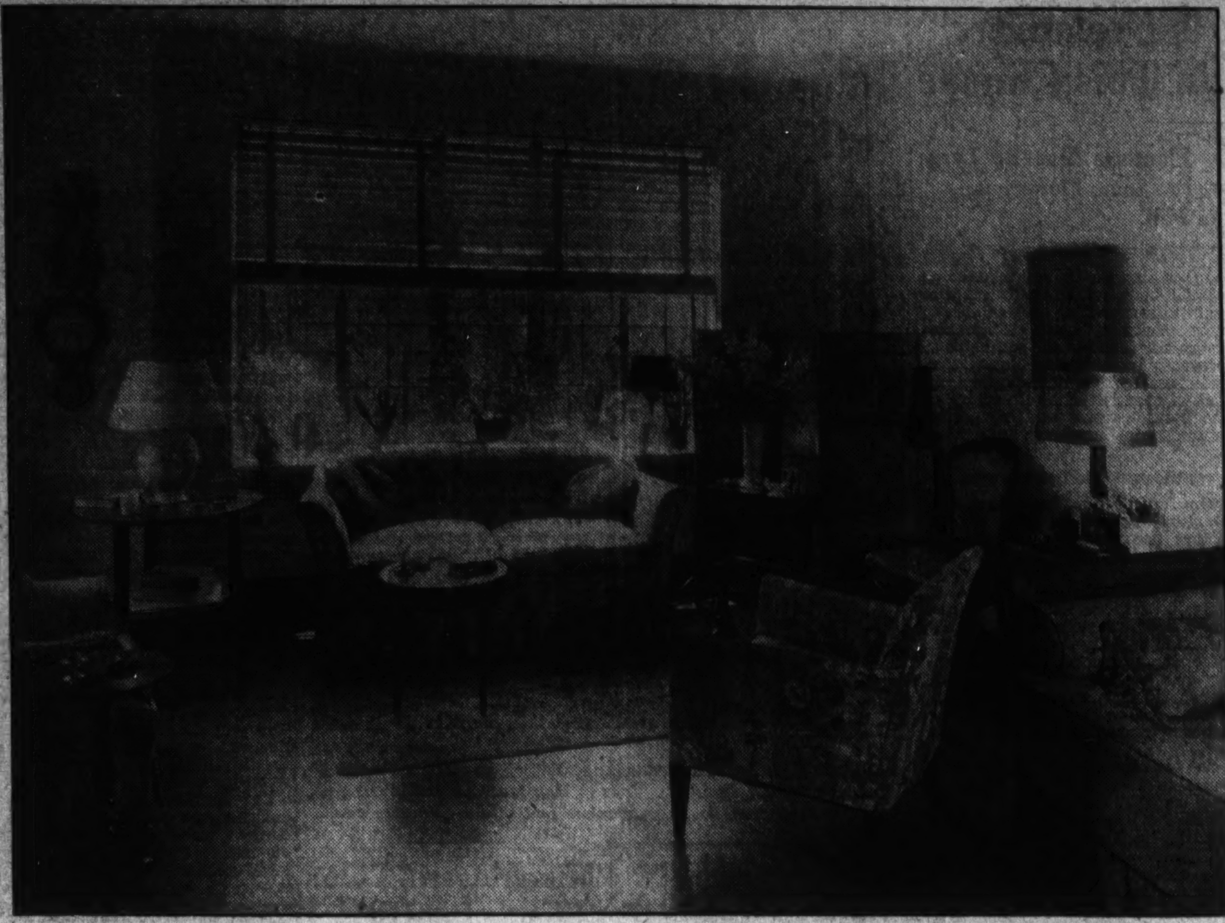
THE BEST PLAN for avoiding being labeled a prig or a prude is to develop a casual and light-hearted attitude toward boys and toward the question of being kissed. A fund of gay conversation up to the moment of saying "good night," should keep the most love-smitten youth at arm's length.

• • • •

However, if in spite of your nonchalance, he precipitates a situation where you have to decide to kiss or not to kiss, you may laughingly brush the suggestions aside. Laugh with the boy—not AT him; don't hurt his feelings nor injure his dignity—as though you both realize it's just a joke.

• • • •

Either course makes you master of the situation, and will have the boy wondering. When a boy can't quite figure out your reactions, you become just twice as attractive in his eyes. When a boy finds he can have fun in your company, even without kissing you, you are elected to the rank of pal in his eyes. And any boy in his teens would rather have a pal for a sweetheart than just a girl he can kiss.



THE SECRET OF ACHIEVING charm in an old house, furnished with old things, is first to decide upon a color scheme. Then adhere to it religiously. Slip covers help turn the trick—and don't be afraid to exclude too-impossible pieces.

Slipcovers Provide Method For Blending Odds and Ends

Decorators Often Find Relic Pieces in Better Taste Than Too-Bright Modern Products—Example of Room Done in Old Style.

THERE ARE MANY professional decorators who declare that they would rather work with old furniture and an old house than to assemble the too-bright pieces of new furniture in the too-sparkling and severe new structure. The work of such decorators is usually known for its charm, for with old pieces there is, when lines are good and colors harmonious, an atmosphere of good taste seldom achieved with brand-new things. Such rooms usually fall back on the slip cover as a simple means of relating odds and ends of furniture, seemingly bringing it into the same style family.

Such a room is shown here; old woodwork, old window trims and needless ornament were stripped from the walls; they were then painted light robin's egg blue.

The major upholstered pieces, such as the sofa in the window, the chaise lounge, a large armchair and a small armchair, were then disguised under slip covers of an interesting striped chintz.

Details of Decoration.

The chintz is chocolate brown, robin's egg blue and faded pink, the wide stripes of the dark color, and the faded pink appearing in it in luscious English roses. Brown was used for the plain covers of a day bed, a slip cover made with a simple tailored, pleated valance around the bottom; small Victorian side chairs were newly upholstered in brown sateen; an old three-panel screen was covered in gold tea chest paper and small colorful prints.

The windows were given new Venetian blinds, painted the same delightful blue as the walls, and were left uncurtained for the summer. The floor was stained a rich walnut brown, rubbed with wax and polished, and also left bare for the summer, except for small scatter rugs of old hooked patterns, although a chocolate brown chenile rug is used in the winter.

A number of small tables and other small pieces of furniture were refinished in walnut color and waxed to a dull glow to resemble antique pieces. Lampshades in this room are eggshell parchment; lamp bases are eggshell pottery, lapis blue pottery and old tore in black and gold.

The secret of re-creating an old room into something as charming as this room is first to decide upon a color scheme, then adhere to it religiously, adding quality fabrics in the slip covers and draperies, and not being afraid to exclude a few of the too-impossible pieces from the old room.

Good lamps and shades are cheaper than ever this summer; fine chintzes and linens for decorating are in better patterns and colors than in any season previous, and there is always the willing cabinet maker who will help you restore, refinish and remodel good pieces of furniture for a new life in a remade room.

Victory Over Summer Heat Is Obtainable

THERE are various ways and means of accomplishing a strategic victory over the enervating heat of summer. Of first importance is keeping the rooms of one's home as cool as possible.

One way to do this is to keep the windows and doors closed and shades drawn during the hottest part of the day. Another is to have awnings over each window, and over doorways not sheltered by porch or portico. Awnings have been proven by actual survey to be a very real help in reducing indoor temperature.

Electric fans make a big contribution. They furnish a constant current of changing air which evaporates body moisture and creates a comfortably cooling atmosphere on the hottest day or night.

Of inestimable value are ventilating fans for the kitchen—always a summer purgatory for the woman who does her own housework. Seldom is the kitchen of a city apartment so well ventilated as to provide a cross-current of fresh air, and in such instances the installation of a wall-type or window-type ventilating fan is advisable.

Liquid Diet Aids Health In Summer

Body Needs More Water to Increase Rate of Perspiration.

WHEN the temperature is high the body demands far more liquid than it needs on a cold day.

Do not worry if you find yourself paying frequent visits to the water pitcher or tap. You are merely securing liquid to take the place of that which has been lost by perspiration during the past hour or so. Perspiration is the method used by a healthy body to get rid of its excess heat. With the liquid which sometimes seems so annoying, we lose much of the heat of the body and many of the impurities which we might find it very difficult to get rid of were it not for heat and its companion, perspiration.

Instead of attempting to drink less so that you will perspire less, rather lean toward the other extremity and drink more so that you will perspire more. You are not likely to drink yourself to death if you limit your beverages to those which come from nature's receptacles—be they wells, mountain streams or the cells of some healthful fruit.

Certain beverages are extremely popular in certain sections of the country. Many farm hands have been brought up to appreciate a pail of spring water into which a handful of oatmeal has been stirred. Others seek the dairy on their trips across the farm to drink a glass of ice cold milk or possibly of buttermilk. Still others prefer to drink direct from an ice cold spring of water.

Fresh cider, raspberry vinegar, grape juice and lemonade all have their following. Of late years with fruits of various kinds always obtainable, the fruit punch or a drink made from the juices of several fruits has become quite popular.

Drinks containing the juice of oranges or lemons are among the most desirable of all. These fruits contain minerals, salts, and are rich in vitamin C. Thus they are extremely healthful as well as delicious. Few drinks quench the thirst and satisfy so thoroughly as a large glass of good old-fashioned lemonade. No matter how pleasing some of the combination drinks may seem, it is doubtful if they will ever entirely supplant this old favorite.

Here is a recipe for a lemon drink which may be prepared and served at any time:

(Serves 6.)

6 lemons
¾ to 1 cup sugar
6 cups cold water
Lemon slices

Extract lemon juice, add sugar to taste, and stir until dissolved. Then add water and serve immediately, pouring into glasses over crushed ice. Place a lemon slice over the rim of each glass.

Don't Say "Don't" to a Child To Obtain Willing Obedience

By Alice Fox Pitts.

AN EMINENT psychologist once placed a dish of dried beans on the table in a room where half a dozen children, under 10 years of age, were playing happily with their toys, then went out to watch through the keyhole to see what happened.

The children continued to play with their toys. He returned and said: "Now, children, whatever you do, I don't want you to stuff those beans up your noses," and left the room to watch again. Instantly all five children left their toys and—need I tell the end of the story?

We are all prone, more than we realize, to put ideas into children's heads by the power of suggestion, and then complain because they adopt them.

"Mary, you haven't had a vegetable yet today, so I particularly want you to eat your spinach," suggests to Mary that she can create a scene by refusing. Don't give her that advantage; and if she does refuse, on principle, don't make an issue of it. Give her a glass of tomato juice instead and let the spinach go until some other time.

"Oh, dear, Junior, your nails look terrible. You'll never get them clean for Jimmy's party this afternoon." When you say that, your perturbation fills Junior with pride. Instead, give him an orangewood stick wound with absorbent cotton and dipped in cuticle remover and show him how to get the dirt from under those grubby nails. The dirtier they are, the more fun in scraping them clean.

Don't let him know that he presents a problem; don't put ideas in his head; don't make an issue of anything unless it is a matter of prime necessity. If you give him an opportunity to rouse you to excitement, he'll do it, for children, like adults, like to be the center of attention.

If any of the following problems are baffling you, check in the space indicated the ones on which you would like Mrs. Pitts to base future articles.

Does your child:

Dawdle over going to bed, washing the dishes, or at other unpleasant tasks?........

Show defiance to your orders? ....

Run away from home periodically?........

Tease and annoy smaller children?........

Exhibit shyness in the presence of strangers?........

Refuse to eat?........

Never wash if he can possibly avoid it?........

Break expensive toys and then ask, "What can I do now?"........

Quarrel ceaselessly with brothers and sisters?..........

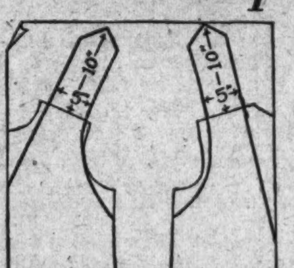
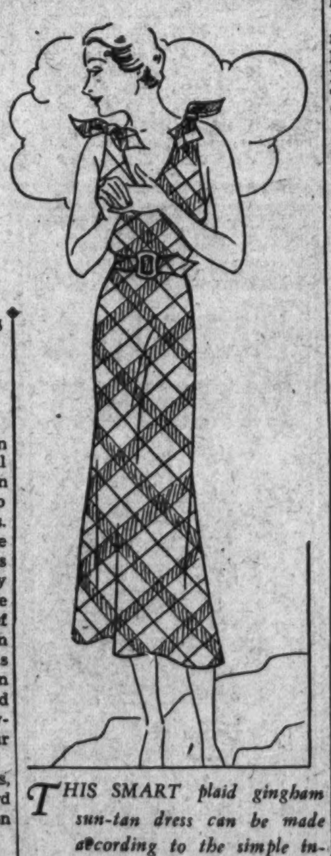
This Sun Tan Dress Is Simple to Create





THIS SMART plaid gingham sun-tan dress can be made according to the simple instructions given herewith.

Plaid Running on Bias Gives Slender Effect to the Figure.

WHETHER YOU expect to don a coat of tan or not, you will enjoy wearing a suntan dress. Make it of gingham and do choose one of the smart new plaids.

The plaid runs on the bias of the goods in some of them, and the bias lines of the pattern give a very slender effect to the figure. If the plaid you like is on the straight of the goods, you can cut your dress on the bias to get this effect. To do this you will need to make a seam down the center front of the dress, and don't forget to add a seam allowance to the center front of your pattern.

If you cut the dress on the bias, you will need about half a yard more material than if it is cut on the straight of the goods.

Narrow Bias Facing.

You can use your plain dress pattern as a foundation for making a pattern for a dress like this one.

Place the front and the back of the plain waist pattern on a large piece of paper and draw around them, as shown by the light lines in the diagram at the left.

When this is done, outline a deep V-neckline in the front and a still deeper one in the back, and continue these lines on beyond the shoulder seam lines of the waist pattern to make the shoulder ties as indicated here in the diagram by the heavy lines.

As shown here, the ties are 5 inches wide and 10 inches long. It is not absolutely necessary to cut them in one with the waist, as a seam where they join the shoulder lines of the waist would not show under the knot, but be sure to outline them all in one with the waist when you are making the pattern so they will be the right shape to fit perfectly.

A very narrow bias facing is the best finish to use for the neckline and the armholes. Prepared bias tape is useful for making finishes of this kind, and it is a good thing to have it on hand, as it saves the trouble of cutting narrow bias strips.

The shoulder ties should be made double—that is, faced with self material.

Perspiration Stains Yield To Salt Bath

WITH the thermometer hovering around 100, there is going to be plenty of discomfort caused, not only from the excessive heat but also from the danger of forming perspiration stains on delicate dresses.

Here is one successful plan for removing such unsightly stains:

Goods that will bear cold water may be successfully treated for perspiration stains by soaking overnight in a strong salt water solution. Use just enough water to cover the goods well and rinse well afterward to remove the salt. This is comparatively safe, as the salt holds the dyestuff.

If the garment is silk, after rinsing roll it up between some large turkish towels or a sheet to take up the surplus moisture before hanging it out to dry. This prevents water streaks.

Another way is to use one teaspoonful of ammonia, three teaspoonfuls of alcohol, two teaspoonfuls of ether and two teaspoonfuls of soft water. Apply as for any other stain.

Delphiniums Grown From Seed Need Care to Thrive

Summer Sowing Is Declared Preferable in This Climate

Seedlings From June or July Plantings May Be Large Enough to Be Transplanted to Some Flowering Quarters in Fall.

By Crowell Baynes.

Delphiniums are in their late June glory, the pride of gardeners who are successful in growing the fine hybrid strains. In Washington it seems to take considerable care and skill to grow these from seed, but they are well worth the effort.

In Washington, summer seeding is usually preferable [illegible] early as it is possible to obtain seed. Seedlings from late June or early July sowings may be large enough to transplant to flowering quarters in the fall. Later seedings may need to stay in a cold frame until spring.

Whether in a box, in a clay seedpan, or a frame, the soil for seeding should be a rather sandy mixture with a leaf mold or peat enough to hold plenty of water. Formaldehyde dust added to the soil helps to prevent damping-off. Fresh seed will usually germinate promptly and vigorously, but with many of the hybrid strains the late germinating seed produce the finest flowers.

Success With Delphiniums.

One of the most successful delphinium growers in this vicinity carries her seedlings through the late summer in boxes on a low table on the north side of her home. The legs of the table are in cans of water to foil the slugs and snails, which are extremely fond of young delphiniums. The boxes are about a foot square and eight inches deep. An inch or more of pebbles provides good drainage, and the soil is a rich mixture of a light loam enriched with leafmold and cow manure.

She transplants from her seed boxes to those growing boxes as soon as the seedlings have produced their second leaves. In the fall the stronger plants go into the border and the growing boxes go to the cold frame. Each box will accommodate from a dozen to 20 seedlings for the summer and about half as many for the winter. She covers young plants lightly with leaves held down by evergreen boughs. The plants wintered in frames, she transplants about the middle of May.

Farther north, delphiniums are grown in full sun, but in Washington they seem to appreciate some shade, at least during the heat of the day. The soil should be rich and fibrous and must be well drained to protect the crowns from standing water in winter. A bed raised 6 or 8 inches above the general level is good winter insurance.

Bloom Following Summer.

Planted soon, delphiniums should bloom well next summer and should be about at the height of their glory the following year. Early spring plantings may or may not flower the first year. In Washington delphiniums ordinarily are not long lived, but some amateur growers are successful in dividing three-year plants. Commercial growers get a rapid increase of desirable plants by rooting cuttings from the early spring growth.

A. C. Hottes, a leading plant authority, says a good preventative of delphinium diseases is to dig into the soil in spring a small quantity of dry Bordeaux mixture, and to follow up by Bordeaux sprays several times before the blooming season.

All the higher growing delphiniums and the large flowering hybrids require careful staking. June and July thundershowers accompanied by high winds often wreck the results of months' careful work, and a towering spike of delphinium is well worth the additional work of staking it securely.

Delphinium time is also the blooming season of the Madonna lily and the Regal lily, both of which thrive in about the same soil mixture which the delphiniums like best. These make a combination hard to beat for sheer loveliness and beauty, a combination that repays considerable work in preparing the soil, and in nursing the delphiniums through the difficulties of damping off and protection from slugs, snails and disease.

Potomac Roses Include Many Valued Types

New Miniature Variety Is Shown; Climbers Escaped Winter.

A visit to the rose garden in Potomac Park between the railroad and highway bridges is well worth while in mid-June. The labeling of most of the varieties has been improved greatly in the last few weeks, and a gardener needs a notebook for listing varieties for fall or spring planting.

The rose gardens this season make effective use of the dwarf polyanthus rose, Gloria Mundi, a free-flowering bright red variety with a fairly long season of bloom. As pruned and trained this rose will suggest itself for use in edging large beds of roses or even as an edging for large mixed borders, where the bright red will not conflict with blues and pinks in the border. It comes into bloom just as iris and peonies are going out and would do nicely as an edging for beds of either of these two flowers.

Jacotte, a richly colored climber in apricot shades, will please many rose growers.

Miniature Type Interesting.

One of the novelties that will interest many visitors who take the trouble to find it is a planting of Rosa Rouletti, a truly miniature rose, which has been rather extravagantly recommended by several nursery firms, and which shows some promise of almost living up to the recommendations. At the rose garden this planting is to the left of the main pathway to the central pool as you enter from the Fourteenth street entrance and about 75 feet east of the pool. It is in a bed with plants of the white rose, Mme. Jules Bouche.

Rosa Rouletti, its sponsors say, never grows to a height of more than 5 or 6 inches, but is a regular rose, perfectly formed in all its parts, but on a reduced scale. The pink blossoms are not much larger than a dime, and the claim is that it will blossom most of the summer, and if potted will continue blossoming through the winter in the house.

We shall see whether it proves as satisfactory as claimed. The tiny plants at the rose garden have been blooming for a month now. It would be a charming addition to a small rock garden if it proved amenable to such conditions, but it would probably be necessary to take it into the house in winter. It was introduced by Henry Correvon, the noted Swiss Alpine specialist.

Survived Hard Winter.

The hard winter did not seem to affect the roses planted along the high fences south of the Department of Agriculture greenhouses, along Constitution avenue from Twelfth street to Fourteenth street. From Twelfth to Thirteenth the fine white Silver Moon covered the fence. The western section of the fence was planted to the pink Mary Wallace, growing high at each post, with the brilliant Paul's Scarlet Climber planted half way between the posts and pruned back to keep it clear of the pink masses of Mary Wallace.

Some of the hybrid perpetual roses which ordinarily carry their bloom on substantial stalks from 3 to 6 feet tall are blooming virtually at ground level this year because the old stalks were winter-killed. It will pay to limit the bloom on these plants this season, cutting back most of the shoots nearly to the ground soon after they start and concentrating most of the vigor of the plant into development of two or three substantial stalks. By the first of August it will be wise to withhold water to a minimum and encourage the hybrid perpetuals to ripen the new wood for winter. Heavy feeding now or in late summer would not be good management for these severely injured plants, even though their growth seems vigorous.

It is still practical to fill in blanks in the rose beds by buying potted plants.

Queries

Question—Should coral bells be divided after flowering, or when? E. C. P. Answer—Fall is the best time for diving coral bells—late September or early October.

Question—Our hybrid tea roses died back to the ground last winter, but there are many new shoots this summer. Is it all right to let all of them grow? F. H. DeM. Answer—It might do no harm, but you will probably fined it more satisfactory to cut back all but one, two or three shoots (depending on the general vigor of the plant) and restrict bloom somewhat this year to reestablish a new woody head in the plant. This may mean some sacrifice of bloom this year, but a gain for next season.

Gardener Explains Treatment of Seed

T. A. Weston, an experienced gardener, writing in the June 1 issue of Horticulture, offers two suggestions for preventing the damping off disease of summer sown seeds of perennials. One is the use of formaldehyde dust as directed by the makers.

"Or else," he said, "the pots after filling should be watered with a copper carbonate solution. This is made by mixing two parts of finely powdered copper sulphate with 11 parts of powdered ammonium carbonate. This mixture should be stored in a glass or stone jar tightly corked for at least 24 hours before use. To make a solution, dissolve one ounce of the mixture in two gallons of water and use immediately.

"A little hot water will dissolve the salts quickly and the full amount can be made up with cold water. On no account dissolve or use the mixture in tin, iron, or zinc vessels and do not delay using the fluid after it is made up. The seedlings, when they are about ready for transplanting, can be treated again, but not, of course, flooded."

The white phlox Miss Lingard is the earliest of the summer-flowering varieties with large panicles. It is in high favor for cutting and is useful in the border to separate colors that would otherwise clash.

Trees Need Watering During Early Summer

In late June and July many trees, shrubs and climbing roses need watering. In cities, and even in suburban areas, a considerable part of the root system of many of these plants is covered by walks, pavements or drives, or the natural water supply is restricted because the plant is set close to a building from which the water drains in eavetroughs.

In hot weather large plants require more water, and unless rains are regular they can not make full growth without supplementary water. This is best supplied by allowing the hose to run with a trickling stream for several hours.

The Gardener's Calendar

What to See.

Roses in Rose Garden, Potomac Park, at Franciscan Monastery, Brookland, and in many homes and gardens.

Several varieties of lilies at Botanic Garden.

Perennial plants along Speedway to Hains Point, and cannas and other bedding plants on the Mall and near public buildings.

Delphinium plants in many private gardens, also hollyhocks.

What to Do.

Seed perennial seeds as available, in seedpans or boxes, or in seedframes or carefully prepared beds.

If snapdragons show signs of rust, spray with Bordeaux mixture of dust with dusting sulphur.

Stop deep cultivation between rows of annuals. Most have shallow spreading roots and will be injured. Stir top soil frequently and pull or hoe weeds.

With few exceptions flowering plants benefit by applications of manure water while buds are forming.

Once or twice a week dig into the garden soil for a foot or more and inspect the moisture supply. If soil is not moist from a depth of 2 inches to a foot it needs thorough soaking with hose. Moisture in upper two inches not so important.

Watch undersides of nasturtium leaves for aphids. Spray with nicotine sulphate. Many other plants affected by aphids.

Mulch evergreens, azaleas, rhododendrons, laurel, and most ferns and woodland wildflowers with half-rotted leaves or with granulated peat moss.

Make final planting of gladiolus by July 1, if you expect to lift and save corms. May be planted up to July 15 or later, but are not likely to ripen after bloom.

Mullens Leave Capital.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Mullen have gone to New York to spend a week or ten days. Later they will go to their home in Nebraska for a brief visit. Their son, Mr. Arthur Mullen, will remain in their Georgetown home during the absence of his parents.

ATTENTION!

A prominent editor, author and explorer, of Washington, after many years of delving into ancient ruins and histories, believes he has found the lead to the key to the Mayan hieroglyphic writings that will unfold the history of that lost civilization, and thus give the Americas their real records prior to the coming of Columbus.

To accomplish this unlocking of the sealed past a local group is forming a syndicate for the specific purpose of establishing in Washington a high-grade publishing house. As a basis for this business the syndicate has acquired an unusually attractive book on the Mayas, embodying the known history of that wonderful race to date in a striking story of wide appeal, written by the above editor and author. The syndicate has created a very unique sales plan for the book, devised to drive distribution above the normal best-seller mark, which should assure members of the group a quick repayment of their investments, leaving their interest in the organization clear for future profits. In addition, the returns should supply sufficient capital to the treasury to conduct a well-considered expedition into Mexico, Yucatan, Central America, Java and India, for the purpose of solving the lost Mayan history.

This expedition will provide the publishing house with other books to follow the present one, ready now for publication. It is expected that the full translations of the three ancient Mayan books, held in Dresden, Paris and Madrid museums, unread up to this time, will be among the subsequent issues of the Washington Publishing House. It would be difficult now to estimate their almost fabulous value.

The syndicate group is limited. Its management invites a few enterprising persons, who would like to share the fame and profits of this sound, meritorious undertaking, to investigate carefully with a view to taking a financial interest in the project and becoming active in its management. For full particulars, apply to THE CAPITAL PUBLISHING SYNDICATE, 948 Shoreham Building, Washington, D. C.

'Miss Lingard' Phlox Comes Into Bloom

Variety Rated Profitable Garden Plant.

The white pholx variety, Miss Lingard, is now blooming in many gardens and deserves to be seen in many others. Cornell University has just issued its bulletin 588, "History, Culture, and Varieties of Summer-Flowering Phloxes," in which the author, A. M. S. Pridham, says:

"The Miss Lingard variety was first sold in this country about 1907 with very little publicity, and has become the most popular of all phloxes. Miss Lingard is white, with a faint cream cast which is slightly deeper in the region of the tube or the eye area. The growth is rapid and vigorous and the plant is free from disease.

"Flowering is early and prolific. If the panicles are cut off immediately after flowering, a second bloom may occur in September. The first bloom is excellent for landscape effect, or the spikes may be cut for table flowers. Miss Lingard is one of the few varieties generally used for this purpose. A pink variant of Miss Lingard has recently been introduced under the name Miss Verboom.

Miss Lingard is one of the suffruticosa group of phloxes. The later flowering decussata group has a wide range in color and there are scores of named varieties of merit, but none is regarded as more generally desirable than Miss Lingard.

Phloxes are best planted in the early fall, soon after flowering, though they may be divided at almost anytime except just before blooming. The clumps increase in size rapidly and should be divided every two or three years, making small divisions.

Phloxes are heavy feeders and revel in a rich loamy soil. They will bloom more abundantly if they have plenty of water just before and during the blooming period.

Garden Lovers Told to Work Early Shrubs

Methods of Cultivation and Care of Plants Is Discussed.

Late June is as good a time as any to cultivate the early flowering shrubs which have been pruned after flowering. Cut away suckers at roots of lilacs and fork over the top soil lightly, turning in any mulch material that is reasonably well rotted.

Drive a spading fork (not a spade) into the soil its full length in several places, and push the handle backward and forward enough to loosen the soil somewhat but without tearing the root system.

Shrubs that wintered well can now make use of a weak solution of a quick acting nitrogen fertilizer—sodium nitrate for most shrubs, ammonium sulphate for acid soil plants—not more than two tablespoons to five gallons of water. This will stimulate growth and will be used by the shrubs in time so that it will not prevent ripening of wood for winter.

Cut back any turf that is encroaching on the shrubs leaving a circular space two feet or more in diameter. Mulch this area with lawn clippings, peat, half-rotted leaves or straw. Practically all shrubs do better with a light summer mulch which prevents caking of the topsoil. For evergreens, particularly, throw up a small ridge at the edge of the cultivated space to form a small basin that can be filled with water which will soak in to the root area.

A good way to insure that water will get into the roots of shrubs is to drive a 1-inch iron rod into the soil in several places about where the outside line of foliage comes. This will open the soil at the place where feeding roots are thickest.

Rhododendron and azalea roots are close to the surface, and cultivation should be little more than a stirring of the soil, working in a little of the old mulch and renewing the mulch—preferably half-rotted oak leaves or pine needles. In most Washington gardens, the aluminum sulphate treatment to make the soil acid is not necessary if the oak leaf or pine needle mulch is renewed twice a year.

Sale of Post Model Homes Sets Record

Unpurchased Dwelling Is Presented to Public View Today.

Two homes sold in two weeks and each sold on the first day of its presentation. Such is a new record for Washington Post model homes made in The Post presentation group in the 6400 block of Barnaby street northwest, in Chevy Chase, D. C. With five of these six homes sold, presentation of the remaining unpurchased dwelling at 6331 Utah avenue, at the corner of Utah avenue and Barnaby street, is announced today.

This house is built by Paul T. Stone, Inc., presented by J. Wesley Buchanan, Inc. realtors; furnshed by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon. The rugs are from Manoukian Brothers.

In the construction of this house, convenience, beauty and arrangement have been the chief aims. Featuring a group of homes built by the Stone Corporation, the display house is an excellent example of residential construction.

Of the Colonial style of architecture, this house of sturdy brick is in a row reminiscent of an ancient village.

Complete insulation, waterproofing, automatic heat, refrigeration and complete electrical equipment are included. The thoroughness of the electrical equipment program has given the dwelling a second designation as an "electric kitchen health home."

The stove, clock, ventilating fan, refrigerator and other labor-saving devices are operated by electricity.

Route to Home

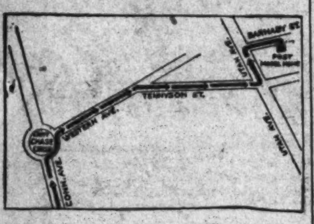

Chart showing route to this home. To view it, drive out Connecticut avenue to Chevy Chase Circle, turn right at the circle on Western avenue to Tennyson street, then to Utah avenue and left one block to Barnaby street.

The living room is distinguished by a broad, hospitable fireplace. The interior is in colonial early American detail of knotty pine.

The screened porch and rear portico afford views over the nearby wooded hills. There are three bright, airy and well-ventilated bedrooms and two tiled baths, with tub and shower.

A roomy basement provides ample space for servants' toilet, laundry, heating plant and a cheery, tile-floored recreation room, with fireplace, chimney nook and comfortable settee. There are a storage closet for guests, chairs and card tables. A graceful stairway arrangement permits entrance to the recreation room from the living room without crossing the service section of the basement.

Likening the great improvement in home building to the betterment of automobile manufacture, Mr. Buchanan said both, like many other things, were the result of keen competition in lean years, when it is necessary to give the buyer the best for the least money.

Mr. Buchanan recalled that during the "boom days" contractors built and sold hundreds of homes from uniform plans in which not even the position of an electric outlet was changed. This was because they could be built cheaply and readily sold.

Today, he added, a home must represent living comfort, economic maintenance and esthetic worth, all at a reasonable price.

The house is not, he declares, the product of a builder's spare-time plan, but the work of a registered architect who has given consideration to beauty of location and design and stability of construction.

Post's Second Model Home Is Drawing Many

"Show House" Is Located at 3902 Benton Street, Glover Park Heights.

The second Washington Post model home of the year continues an outstanding event in real estate. Situated at 3902 Benton street northwest, in Glover Park Heights, the home is furnished by Hutchison, Inc.; draped by John F. Ligon and constructed by B. H. Gruver.

The display home is of English-type architecture, of all-brick construction. It is 20 feet wide and contains eight rooms, including four bedrooms, a reception room, two baths and a breakfast nook. There is also an electric kitchen, with every labor-saving device, including Westinghouse refrigerator and electric ventilator.

The house is weather-stripped and screened throughout. It is fully equipped with cedar closets and an automatic storage water heater. Its large recreation room has stippled walls. Kitchen and baths are sanitas walled.

Garage Is Convenient.

A built-in garage adds convenience in the arrangement of the home. The building site is a landscaped lot, fronted by a running brick retaining wall.

The living room has a conservatively modern sofa, upholstered in a deep rust shade, and chair upholstered in a contrasting shade of green, over antique velour. The occasional chair used in this room is covered in gold material. There is a Gov. Winthrop secretary desk with a Winthrop armchair to match. The assortment of occasional tables and end tables in mahogony are furnished with lamps. A domestic Oriental rug of the Sarouk pattern covers the floor.

The dining room is furnished with a true Sheraton suite of ten pieces. The chairs are upholstered in deep blue haircloth. The rug is of the same design as in the dining room.

Off from the kitchen is a colorful breakfast set with a porcelain-top refectory table and four chairs matching it in green.

The draperies for the living room are interwoven flowered silk damask of a brown background with urns of multicolored flowers. The

Foxall Home Boasts Many Fine Features

Taylor Displays House of Elizabethan English Architecture.

A new, detached home combining many unusual features in plan and design is offered today by the builders, Waverly Taylor, Inc., at the corner of Foxall road and Volta place northwest, in Foxall.

In a community noted for the outstanding character of its group homes, beautiful wooded parks and adjacent estates, this home is admirably adapted to its setting on an open corner site. There are several beautiful shade trees and appropriate planting of small evergreens and shrubbery around the house. The gently sloping lawn has a rolling terrace to a low brick retaining wall at the sidewalk.

The home itself is of modified Elizabethan English architecture, combining deep red brick with occasional clinkers for textural effect, and interesting gables of cream-colored stucco and brown half timbering. The roof is of mottled green and purple slate of random lengths and widths. The use of such permanent materials as these, with cypress trim and copper gutters and downspouts, insures an absolute minimum of upkeep expense.

Wall Space Well Arranged.

The entrance hall, with its practical tile floor, has a coat closet at one side. As one passes through to the main floor, the living room opens to the left and the dining room is at the right. Both are large, sunny rooms with concealed radiators and well-arranged wall space. There is a stone fireplace in the living room framed in colonial paneling. In addition to the windows on three sides of the room, there is a French door leading to the living porch, screened with bronze wirecloth.

The dining room has an ornamental and practical chair rail of graceful design. Above is a pictorial paper on a yellow background. The lighting fixture is reminiscent of the old colonial oil lamps.

Next to the dining room is an efficiently planned kitchen, containing a double drainboard sink, gas refrigerator, table top gas range, built-in kitchen cabinet, electric clock, vanity cabinet, broom closet and many storage cupboards. There is a ceiling exhaust fan to eliminate the heat and odors of cooking and to draw in cool air from the outside. The floor is covered with green inlaid linoleum and the walls decorated with a light green Sanitas covering.

Between the kitchen and rear portion of the living room is a small study, paneled in knotty pine and having built-in book shelves at one end. With a large window facing the east, this room would make a delightful breakfast room and in the evening serve as a quiet retreat for reading, studying or writing.

Studio Suite in Basement.

From this room there is an entrance to the studio suite in the basement. Here will be found a large studio, paneled in knotty pine and stained to give an antique effect, oak floor and sand finished ceiling. There is a real fireplace with Dutch oven and long mantel shelf of early American scroll design. The windows are double steel casements to afford full ventilation and they are equipped with Venetian blinds to preserve privacy without shutting off the air.

At the rear is another paneled room, to serve as either a sleeping compartment or downstairs study. Next to this is a complete tiled bath room with large shower stall. Both of these rooms are also equipped with Venetian blinds.

There is a separate front entrance to this studio suite, with practical tile floor. With this convenience, it is possible for the owner to rent this suite without interfering with his use of the floors above in the least.

In the basement there is also a built-in garage with overhead doors opening to the front. At the rear are a service room for the laundry equipment, gas furnace and storage water heater.

On the second floor are three bedrooms, each with cedar lined closet and one with full length mirror door. In the hall is a picturesque solarium window with glass shelves between the window jambs

Sales Records Are Shattered By Electrolux

Estate Gas Range Campaign Also Meets With Fast Buyer Approval.

Shattering all previous sales records, the Electrolux air-cooled gas refrigerator and Estate Gas Range campaigns have gone over the top with amazing success. These campaigns sponsored by the Washington Gas Light Co., introducing the latest models of labor-saving gas appliances, feautre special prices for a limited time and attractive terms of purchase, whereby the home executive can have both the new Electrolux air-cooled gas refrigerator and the 1934 Estate gas range in her kitchen for as little as 23 cents a day for both appliances.

Throngs are visiting the showrooms of the Washington Gas Light Co. at 411 Tenth street northwest, to inspect the variety of models, priced to fit every pocketbook. They are enthusiastic in their praise of the many practical and esthetic new features of this equipment which add to the beauty of the kitchen and increase the efficiency of the housewife's work.

The vogue for kitchen modernizing and the interest in making this room as charming and colorful as the rest of the home, finds modern gas equipment prepared to take its place in harmony with the character of popular designs and color schemes. Bright and cheerful surroundings, with arrangement of equipment to save unnecessary footsteps and providing the utmost utility, is the keynote of modern kitchen design. Visitors to the showrooms of the gas company have viewed with interest the model kitchen and have picked up many interesting suggestions and menus from Miss Ruth Sheldon, director of home service. While no formal announcement has been made regarding the close of these campaigns, it is understood that they will be withdrawn in the very near future.

Only 13 Cents Daily.

The variety of Electrolux models on display features air-cooled gas refrigerators to meet the needs of every home with a wide price range and budget purchase plan that adds no extra burden. For an average of 13 cents a day, every Washington home can have this most satisfactory type of refrigeration, which introduces a new principle of freezing whereby a tiny flame does all the work. This ingenious application has eliminated machinery and moving parts and consequently there is no noise or vibration with longer life and carefree operation.

Home executives, throughout the United States, have accepted the Electrolux with enthusiasm and the thouasnds of installations in Washington homes echo the national acceptance of satisfied users. The gas refrigerator has an extremely low cost of operation, a double advantage when one considers that Washington gas rates are among the lowest on the Atlantic seaboard. Aside from these outstanding points of interest are many new features and novel innovations that catch the housewife's eye and meet with her ready approval for they add extra convenience and utility to the use of the Electrolux.

Timely buying with the cooperation of the manufacturer make possible unusual savings of from $20 to $35 in different models of the 1934 Estate gas range for a limited time only. Marked by simplicity of design and beauty of finish, these porcelain enamel ranges, with chronium trim and finished in combinations of ivory, tan, white and black with adjustable legs, complement any color scheme.

Automatic Lighting.

The hinge-slide top cover, a new feature, lifts and slides easily from burner to tabletop and the ring-type burner gives increased efficiency and cuts fuel cost. Lighting automatically, without even pressing a button, the flame is easily adjusted from simmering to fast cooking. The Estate fresh-air oven, insulated with Rock-Wool, keeps the heat in the oven where it belongs and provides perfect baking. Thick insulation keeps the kitchen cool in summer and the accurate heat regulator illuminates oven-watching.

Oven racks are controlled by leveracks which slides them forward and backward automatically without the danger of burnt fingers and unnecessary stooping. The insulated Estate double broiler, in a roller-bearing drawer, is adjustable. It pulls out smoothly and is easily raised or lowered. Of a new design, it has a drip-pan which can be used as a skillet on the top of the range to make gravy. There are two steel roller-bearing utensil drawers, one with compartments for spice canisters, knife sharpener and cooking utensils with a handy recipe card file, containing instructions for operation and tested recipes; the second utility drawer provides additional storage facilities.

Paint Helps Brick House.

The painting of a brick house that is damp and difficult to heat will aid greatly in keeping out moisture, and sometimes results in a substantial saving in fuel bills.

Paint Rustic Furniture.

Rustic furniture, with the bark still on it, is less apt to catch and tear silk stockings and sheer dresses if the wood is coated with a spar varnish.

Wooden Road Marker Legible for 23 Years

Testifying to the protective durability of paint a wooden road marker in the southwest part of Oregon is still legible after being exposed to the weather on a windswept plateau for 23 years. The painted marker began its work of directing people in 1910 and was removed in October last year.

Dark Paint Makes Big House "Smaller"

A large house occupying a small plot of ground, if painted a dark body color will appear less bulky. As a general rule, light and bright tints make an object seem more prominent, while dark tones tend to decrease its apparent size.

Miller Concern Appoints New Sales Leaders

New Arrangement Is Made to Help Production in Westerleigh.

To permit concentration of effort in sales and constructional activities, W. C. & A. N. Miller, realtors and builders, announced last week that direction of sales would be in the hands of A. N. Miller, partner. Appointment of four assistant sales managers also was announced.

The assistant sales managers are Dean M. Rathbun, who will have charge of Westerleigh, the latest Miller development of homes whose price range will be from $12,500 up; George C. DeNeale, who will promote the expansion of Wesley Heights; T. Benjamin Adams, that of Spring Valley, and Edmund J. Flynn, who will superintend the brokerage division.

These executives will direct the activites of their respective subdivisions, each of which will have its own salesmen. The arrangement is expected to increase production and sales for the respective developments and office as an entirety. Although the Miller office will remain general headquarters for this work at present, ultimately it is expected that the activities of the subdivisions will be directed from exhibit dwellings in each of them.

In making the announcement, it was stated that, contrary to widespread impression, there is still room for 40 or 50 good home sites in Wesley Heights, the earliest Miller development. Officials of the organization said the new arrangements will permit an increase or decrease of purchasers' holdings and their continued relationship with the firm.

The same architectural and zoning requirements of Wesley Heights and Spring Valley will be applicable to the new Westerleigh development, it was made known. The Miller organization has approximately 300 acres still available for home construction and approximately 400 families have purchased homes on its land. The company began operation 22 years ago. Its building program for the next fiscal year contemplates erection of 75 homes, representing $1,250,000 in value.

Property Owner Liable If Workman Is Hurt

Chicago newspapers recently printed an article about a handy man who sued a home-owner because his foot was injured while installing a radiator. Had the home-owner taken the precaution of employing a licensed steam-fitter, he would not have been liable for the injuries to the workman because all licensed men carry compensation insurance for their employes.

The compensation laws in most States provide that, if the employer carries no insurance and if he has no property, the injured workman may sue the property owner or other persons who ordered the work done.

4 New Homes Are Displayed By Saunders

Convenience and Modern Equipment Mark Residences.

William H. Saunders Co., Inc., realtors, with offices at 1519 K street northwest, is offering four detached homes, just completed, which are being presented today.

They are located at 5733 Nebraska avenue, 5479 Thirty-first street, 3012 McKinley street and 5421 Thirtieth place, Chevy Chase, D. C.

Of distinguished architecture, they are the last word in convenient arrangement and comprehensive equipment.

Each of Different Design.

Each of these houses is of different exterior design. The house at 5733 Nebraska avenue is of all brick construction and has a slate roof. There is a commodious living room enhanced by a hospitable fireplace.

The well-proportioned dining room is lighted by large windows. The kitchen is equipped with the most complete cabinet unit. The dainty breakfast nook has ample cabinet space. Electric refrigeration is furnished for the kitchen.

Upstairs are three lovely bedrooms and two tiled baths. There is a cozy recreation room with fireplace, four windows and knotty pine paneled walls. There is a screened porch and the entire house is copper-screened and weather-stripped. The attic is celotexed and has a cedar storage closet. An oil burner completes the program of this home's appointments.

No less charming is the residence at 5479 Thirty-first street. Of colonial architecture, it is of sturdy brick construction overtopped with handsome slate roof. The dining room is roomy and dignified and the living room the acme of comfort. Here is a large and inviting fireplace.

Modern Kitchen Equipment.

The kitchen is the latest in equipment with every convenience to lighten the burden of the housewife. Its catalogue of labor-saving devices includes everything, even electric refrigeration. The cabinet space is arranged to save many steps. Everything is at hand. Nearby is a dainty breakfast nook with additional cabinet facilities.

The large bedrooms on the second floor are cheery and well ventilated. The tiled baths are a delight to the eye. Nothing more comfortable can be imagined than the recreation room for games and guests.

The house is copper screened and weather stripped throughout. It has a cool screened porch. The finishing of the attic is in celotex and a large cedar closet augments the storage space in this part of the house. Clean oil burning heat solves the heating problem.

In a wooded background is located the third presentation at 3012 McKinley street. This house is of brick construction with slate roof. It has a living room with a splendidly designed fireplace.

Its kitchen is modern with every item of equipment. A breakfast nook adds to the convenience of the layout. There is an abundance of cabinet space handily placed.

The large reception room is one of the showplaces of this dwelling. All of the weatherstripping and screening are of copper. The large celotexed attic will relieve any part of the downstairs from being used for storage purposes.

The large, airy bedrooms are truly intriguing. The two baths are most attractive in their tile finish and metal fixtures. The oil-burning plant is both modern and dependable.

The fourth offering is located at 5421 Thirtieth place. A stately sloping slate roof accentuates its beauty and it is fronted with a handsome porch and balcony.

The living room boasts an attractive fireplace, while the dining room is roomy It is lighted by numerous windows. The kitchen, like those of the other presentations, is modern in every detail.

Every one of the offerings is located on more than 5,000 square feet of landscaped ground bordered by metal fences.

All have brick garages and are located on high, cool and healthful elevations close to transportation. To visit them, drive out Nebraska avenue to the intersection of Thirty-first street and turn right to the homes.

204 Towns in State Lack Water Plants

Fourth of Wells in Use Called Unsafe.

Wisconsin has 182,000 farm homes of which only 28,454 are equipped with running water, while only 14,533 or 8 per cent have bathrooms, according to Frank R. King, director of the Bureau of Plumbing and Sanitary Engineering of the State Board of Health.

Mr. King urged Wisconsin plumbers at their annual convention to join with the State board of health in a State-wide campaign to effect the installation of public water supplies and sewerage systems in 204 cities and villages in Wisconsin which, at the present time, have neither.

From 25 to 30 per cent of the wells now used as a source of water supply would be found unsafe, if tested, Mr. King said.

"With the installation of a public water supply system, not only is the hazard of impure drinking water removed, but there is an appreciable reduction in the drudgery of women and better living conditions," Mr. King told the contractors.

Application, Quality Important.

Paint blistering, peeling, scaling, fading of color and premature chalking is usually avoided if good quality paint is used and if proper care is taken in application.

Ca

Typifies Part Its Played in War o. Revolution.

Of unusual interest to home lovers is the presentation by H. L. Rust Co. of the Valley Forge reproduction house in select Colonial Village of Rock Creek Park Estates. This dwelling at 1817 Plymouth street is a reproduction of George Washington's headquarters during the most trying time of the American Revolution.

—This home was selected by the owners of the development because of the important part its original played in early American history. In fact, the Valley Forge headquarters exemplifies the courage of Washington through the terrible ordeal of suffering during that critical winter.

This reproduction has been visited by thousands of persons, who have expressed not only appreciation for its charm and architectural accuracy, but have commended its entire idea and ideal. It is in a community that was the first to present the only collective reproduction of historical homes in America.

A large cabinet radio is handy for amusement.

Bedroom in Maple.

On the second floor is a small bedroom furnished in maple to create an early American atmosphere. There are a youth's bed, a vanity table and hanging mirror and a solid maple chair. The room is completed with several small boudoir lamps and genuine hand-hooked rugs.

The master bedroom is a true colonial room. The suite, all in mahogany, consists of low poster beds, a spacious chest and dresser with a hanging mirror and bench. To add a cheery tone to the room, there is a boudoir chair covered in a gray glazed chintz. This chair harmonizes with the drapes and hooked rugs. Dainty boudoir lamps complete the furnishings in the master bedroom.

The rug in the living room is an antique Persian Sultanabad in an atractive old rose background with floral designs. Sultanabad is the name of the town where these rugs are made. The name translated into English means "The Town of Kings."

Harmony in Borders.

The borders are unusually harmonious, compared with modern Orientals, and the subdued tone of the colors of this beautiful piece of Oriental art gives richness and warmth to its surroundings.

The rug in the dining room is a Kandahar with floral designs set in navy blue background. The rich blue, mixed with different harmonizing colors, gives the dining room a luxurious appearance and blends well with the color scheme of the room. This particular rug, with its flashy body, will withstand hard wear and will resist the elements which so easily soil ordinary rugs. Although it is comparatively more modern, it is making a very desirable contrast with the one in the living room.

Draperies furnished by Mr. Ligon are arranged as follows: Living room, French dotted net tie-back curtains with draperies of silver flowered designs; dining room, French dotted net tie-back with draperies made of mulberry kapok; kitchen, glazed chintz in designs of red and green checks; recreation room, rough-finished ratine with red flower design; master bedroom, white dotted net tie-backs with ruffles of old blue and rose and draperies of multicolored rose and blue; den, white dotted net tie-backs with yellow ruffles and tie-backs; rear bedroom, white dotted net tie-backs and green ruffles; bath, rose and black aqua proof silk matching shower curtain.

Paint Room Fixtures To Match With Walls

When a room is redecorated, lighting fixtures, wall plugs and switches often detract from the improved appearance of painted walls and ceilings. In such cases consult the master painter about the advisability of painting the fixtures to harmonize with the fresh colors of the newly decorated room.

Applying Priming Coat.

The use of old, leftover paint as a priming coat is not recommended. since the primer is the foundation for all future painting and should be carefully applied with the best of materials.

Horse-Shoe Farm Sold to Realtor

Joseph M. Samuels Pays $48,713 for Tract.

Orange, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—The 521-acre Horse Shoe Farm property of R. M. Brady, located in the forks of the Rapidan and Robinson Rivers in Culpeper County, was sold at public auction for $48,713 to Joseph M. Samuels, Orange realtor, in behalf of a buyer whose name was not revealed.

The mansion house, which contractors state could not be replaced for less than $50,000, was erected in 1830 by Col. Charles P. Moncure, who came with his brother from Stafford County.

The place was sold in 1872 to the late Joseph Wilmer, a classmate of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, who often visited Horse Shoe Farm with his family while President.

Mr. Brady had made his home there since buying the place for $50,000 from Mr. Wilmer's executors in 1912.

Color Harmony in Kitchen.

Harmonious color schemes enhance the beauty of the kitchen. It isn't difficult to transform dustpans and broom handles into attractive additions to the kitchen color scheme. Painting the back walls of cabinets, cupboards and shelves also produces attractive results.

Randle Cliff Beach Is Being Sold at Popular Prices.

U. S. Randle, owner and developer of Randle Cliff Beach, announces the 1934 season is now under way at this summer home community on Chesapeake Bay. This beautiful and restful resort is located 1½ miles south of Seaside Park, being ideal for summer holidays, as it embodies real comfort and happiness.

There are now 125 cottages at the beach, spaciously separated. The new State road now runs through Randle Cliffs, which assures a safe and secure investment. Prices are said to be far below those of surrounding or equivalent beaches. The public is asked to visit the free bathing beach and picnic grove and inspect their values or call Mr. Randle's Washington office, Lincoln 1879. Arrangements will be made without obligation to take them to Randle Cliff Beach and back.

Randle Cliff Beach, one of the most accessible salt water resorts, is only 33 miles from the District line. There is a new bus line running over this road from Washington for those who do not have a car. Those who prefer to go down by train may do so for 25 cents a round trip.

This tract overlooking the bay is one of the prettiest spots bordering the section from North Beach Park to Plum Point, it being a part of the vast holdings of the late Col. Randle, who, prior to his death, had planned to name it similar to Randle Highlands, located in the vicinity of Twenty-fifth streets and Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Some of the most beautiful bungalows and homes are located in the Randle Highlands section. It is the intention of U. S. Randle to improve the Randle Cliff section on a plane equal, if not superior, to Randle Highlands. Commencing two years ago this fall, Mr. Randle laid plans to promote Randle Cliffs and is going forward in cooperation with the community interest.

He is in daily touch with the community and is sparing neither time nor expense in improving conditions.

The roads leading to areas of the vast section are rapidly being reconditioned, giving easy access to cottages. A concrete pier was constructed a few years ago and considerable activity on the part of the Randle Cliff citizens Association made available a fine sandy beach.

Cooled Homes Introduced in Development

Chevy Chase Land Co. Installs Modern Air System.

At the Chicago Fair this summer, visitors will find an attractive house overlooking the lake, containing a complete air conditioning system.

That the Century of Progress includes in its exhibit of modern, scientific wonders an invention to create cleanliness and regulation of humidity of air, for the occupants of an individual house, large or small, is significant of the trend home builders will follow in the future.

The traveling public already acknowledges the air conditioned train a necessity; hotels introduce air conditioned dining rooms; shoppers buy in air conditioned stores. The great exposition assumes that it would have overlooked an inevitable factor in progressive building had it failed to offer visitors an example of an air cooled and conditioned private home.

Anticipating what the fair proposes to do, the Chevy Chase Land Co. has already installed in four of the completed houses, and is in process of installing in the others of its new development, the Hamlet, at East-West highway and East Blackthorn street, in Chevy Chase, Md., the most complete and modern system of air conditioning.

A cooling unit has been installed at 7 East Blackthorn street. This convenience is so new, the average prospective purchaser hardly grasps the possibilities for comfort and cleanliness involved. It filters and cleanses the air in the houses, freeing it of dust and impurities and keeps up a continuous circulation of reconditioned air by means of an intake and exhaust in each room.

The crowds visiting the Hamlet have been impressed with this novel feature. Nothing could be more indicative of the forward-looking and progressive spirit of the Chevy Chase Land Co. than that they are the first to introduce an air cooling and conditioning system into private homes in Washington, company officials state.

Taylor Attacks Jerry Builder As Menace

Issues Plea for Curb on Unfair Practices Through NRA.

Abuses in the land development and home building industry which should be cured were cited recently by Waverly Taylor, chairman of a division for these activities of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, in a statement issued to the National Recovery Administration concerning a code of fair competition for builders.

Speaking of "jerry builders," Mr. Taylor said they construct homes of poor material, using inefficient and unskilled labor. "They make such homes salable often by surface decoration, by special features and gadgets," he continued. "The quick deterioration of such homes is not only a fraud upon the purchaser, but tends to destroy values of neighboring properties as well. The jerry builder is therefore a public menace who must be controlled through some code which takes specific recognition of the problem which he presents."

Mr. Taylor also attacked so-called "free lot" schemes. "Files of the United States Postoffice and Attorney General's office, the better business bureaus of the country and the real estate boards of the country, are filled by the long history of largely unsuccessful attempts to eliminate this most common fraud," he pointed out. "Millions of dollars could be saved the public if this could be eliminated, as is contemplated by the code. Our Baltimore correspondent estimates that more than $500,000 has been lost in Baltimore through this fraud alone."

The remainder of Mr. Taylor's statement follows:

"Profit from resale 'guarantee, now a common bait used by the unscrupulous operator, could be controlled and possibly entirely eliminated by the code. Thousands of widows and orphans of the country have suffered by this fraud despite the strenuous efforts of the Federal Government and local governments aided by the ethical portions of the industry.

"Inaccurate and misleading advertising could be controlled by the code. It is probable that if the industry is entirely organized as is contemplated by the code, more wholehearted cooperation on the part of newspapers, radio and other advertising media could be obtained.

"Selling a property on which the title is clouded could be controlled. Unscrupulous operators take advantage of the inexperience and ignorance of purchasers to sell them property for which a good title cannot be delivered.

"The selling of lots through high-pressure methods at prices far in excess of real value in distant communities to persons who have no opportunity to inspect such lots personally. The Nation-wide sale of lots in Muscle Shoals and similar abuses will occur to everyone as illustrative of this evil which we desire to eliminate. Only through a Nation-wide code can the public be protected in this matter.

"Unfulfilled promises for improvements, utilities, &c., against which there is no recourse at present, or at best only legal recourse which is too costly for the purchaser who usually is the victim of such a device.

"The organized real estate men of the country have made great progress in fighting the common frauds outlined above. In some States license laws have done much to curb and eliminate some of these practices. All States do not have such license laws. Moreover, the operators most commonly guilty of such practices move quickly from one State to another and it is frequently only by Federal action that they can be brought to justice.

Urban Land Use.

"During the past decade the American public has indulged extensively in real estate speculation as well as in other forms of speculation. The result has been a very great and unjustified expansion of subdivision development. Special assessment laws have made such developments possible far in excess of current demand. The results of this use of the taxing power as an aid in land speculation is proving disastrous for many communities where special assessment bonds are a charge against the general faith and credit of the city. There are no statistics available as yet on default of special assessment bonds throughout the country, but it is common knowledge that such defaults are very extensive. Where the general credit of the city is involved, obviously the cost of premature and ill-advised subdivision developments falls back on the community as a whole.

"It is exceedingly important both from the standpoint of economy as well as from the standpoint of orderly and sound development that a better theory and practice of urban land utilization and home building be developed. This the association is earnestly striving to do.

"We believe that a code for the land development and home building industry, setting up a strong, Nation-wide agency to control this field, can aid not only the industry but every community in controlling and directing this great activity in the future. It is not conceivable to us that this can be done in any manner except through an independent code for this industry.

"It is the desire of our association to aid in the development of sound home ownership in every possible way. We have in the past frequently brought forward construction measures to this end. Three years ago it was our group which initiated the proposal for the Federal Home Loan Bank.

"Two years ago we were helpful in formulating legislation which resulted in the Home Owners Loan Corporation, which is saving thousands of homes for their owners."

Goodyear Service Station Opens Formally

New and specially-designed station of Goodyear Service, Inc., at Connecticut avenue and N streets northwest, which will have its formal opening from Wednesday to Friday of this week.

New Goodyear Station Called Nation's Finest

Occupies Former British Embassy Building at Connecticut and N.

The successor to the British Embassy at Connecticut avenue and N street northwest, the specially designed station of Goodyear Service, Inc., will be opened formally by a 3-day celebration from Wednesday to Friday, June 27 to June 29. On Wednesday evening, R. S. Wilkes, manager of the Washington branch, will entertain several hundred guests at a buffet supper in the building and an inspection of its facilities.

During the three days, officials of the Goodyear Co. from Akron will be here to observe the working of what they regard as the most completely equipped station in the country for all of those little things that the properly maintained car needs to keep it new, from a drop of oil on a door hinge to a changed tire.

With proper regard for the character, past and present, of the neighborhood, Goodyear officials have developed the station along lines of classic simplicity and functional order. As the Goodyear crew have been rehearsing the servicing of hundreds of cars during the last week they have proven to their critical neighbors that the changing of tires, greasing of chassis and repair of batteries can also be done in a de luxe fashion.

Main Building Two Stories.

The main building of the station is two stories high. Its facade in classic Indiana limestone, solves in an interesting way the problem of wide doors for automobiles which today confronts so many home owners and architects. The door openings and the doors themselves are made skillfully a part of the general simple design of the facade.

A canopy of fine wrought iron extends well into the middle of the wide driveway space in front, dominating and almost concealing the gasoline and air and water supply available for passing cars. If further service is needed it is all rendered inside the station.

In addition to the usual facilities for changing or repairing tires, the building is equipped with all of the very latest gadgets for brake and light and battery testing, for inspection, greasing and oiling body, motor and chassis and for those minor adjustments and tightening of bolts that keep the modern car silent and smooth after scores of thousands of miles.

In explaining this service, Mr. Wilkes said yesterday:

"Repairs cost the average car owner about one and a half cents a mile. This special lubrication service we provide here costs not more than a tenth of a cent a mile and it will usually save the repair bill. There are from 19 to 70 points on a car that should be tended to every thousand miles or so. To take care of each properly requires 11 different kinds of lubricants alone. This station has secured the best of each kind with the special tools for applying them. We make a record of each point serviced, report its condition if in need of more than minor repairs and remind the customer when it is time to have the car checked again.

"This can only be done in a station specially designed for the service. And that's what we think we have here. The cars move in almost a straight line from point to point, as on their original assembly lines. They come in Connecticut avenue and out into Nineteenth or N streets. The result is that this elaborate service can be given quickly and economically. The station is equipped to change as many as 500 tires in a day. We do not know how many cars we can service until we try."

Incidentally, the opening of the station will be the occasion for the demonstration of the revolutionary new "G3" tire which Goodyear introduced this spring and which has proven so satisfactory that the company is now selling it with an unconditional guarantee.

Australia Demands More U. S. Turpentine

An increase of building and construction in Australia has resulted in stimulating demand in that country for American turpentine, according to a report made to the Commerce Department in Washington by Assistant Trade Commissioner Wilson C. Flake, at Sydney. Practically all Australian turpentine imports originate in the United States.

300 Realtors Attend Annual Board Outing

Beer and Sports Enliven Picnics; Many Officials Are Present.

Attended by 300 realtors and their guests, the outing of the Washington Real Estate Board at Annapolis Roads Club last Tuesday was the finest in the social history of the organization.

The long auto caravan of the real estate men on their annual picnic, moved promptly to the scene of the merrymaking. Traffic arrangements completed by the Metpolitan and Maryland police were perfect. Escorts from both bodies were provided.

No more delightful spot could have been chosen for the enjoyment of the day. All arrangements for a pleasant sojourn had been prepared from the time of arrival early in the afternoon to departure late in the evening.

On arrival there was good beer to slake the thirst after the long drive. Then came sports and games. There was musical and vocal entertainment and a buffet supper served in baskets and eaten on the portico of the clubhouse or on the broad, breezed-cooled beach.

Among the guests were C. M. Towers, District collector of taxes; E. A. Dent, District surveyor; Capt. Hugh P. Oram, executive officer, Zoning Commission; Calvin C. Lauber, District fire marshal; Col. John W. Oehmann, District inspector of buildings; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highways division; Carl J. Bergmann, president, District of Columbia Council of Building and Loan Associations; Robert J. Cottrell, secretary, Washington Board of Trade; Dorsey W. Hyde, secretary, Washington Chamber of Commerce; Clifford Lanham, superintendent, District division of parks and trees.

During the afternoon there were golfing, tennis, horseshoe pitching, baseball, fishing, boating and swimming events. The sports program was followed by the buffet supper, served from 5 to 7 p. m.

Homer Phillips and Jack Grey tied in the golf tourney for The Washington Post Cup and the play-off will be held later. The Evening Star gold medal, offered the winner of the horseshoe pitching contest, was won by Morris Luchs. The Washington Herald Cup, offered in the swimming event, was won by Jack Weedon. The baseball contest for the Washington Times baseballs resulted in a tie between the Brokers and Builders teams. The Brokers won the toss.

The success of the party was due to the efforts of Fred A. Smith, chairman of the program committee, assisted by the following workers: Baseball committee, John K. Mealy, chairman; James F. Salkeld, Frank S. Phillips, Claud Livingston, jr.; supper committee, Karl E. Jarrell, chairman; T. C. Willis, Frank Bell, Joseph A. Herbert, jr., Carl G. Rosinski, William M. Snapped at Midsummer Outing of Washington Real Estate Board

The building and loan associations of the city as well as the District of Columbia Government were represented at the jolly party. At the left in the foreground is Carl J. Bergmann, president of the Building and Loan Association Council of the District of Columbia. At his right is C. M. Towers, District Collector of Taxes.

These excellent musicians furnished music for the merrymaking throughout the afternoon and evening. Here they are about to begin another of their beautiful compositions. As they prepare, several realtors and guests stop to listen to—aye—even to assist in their next number.

Office Building Expert Warns On Rental War

But Past Year's Reports Show Improvement, Owners Are Told.

Speaking recently before approximately 500 building owners and managers gathered at Toronto for the twenty-seventh annual convention of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, George W. Klein, of Indianapolis, chairman of the renting committee, pointed out that a National survey just completed showed for the first time since January 1, 1930, a slight improvement in office rentals.

"This fact is especially encouraging," stated Mr. Klein, "because more than 600,000 square feet of recently constructed space is included in the survey.

"The past year indicates better earnings in almost every industry except that of office buildings. How we are situated is shown by the fact that country-wide vacancy on January 1, 1934, was approximately 16 per cent greater than that which existed on January 1, 1929, but a study of relative gross income shows the actual average amount of rental income collected during 1933 was but 60 to 65 per cent of the 1929 income. This disproportion must be corrected—and corrected immediately by higher rentals and the extinction of ruinous competition, born of ignorance and lack of conviction of sound values. Otherwise, the time is not far off when tax-collection bodies will be in control of the entire industry.

"There is probably no industry," Mr. Klein said, "in which cut-throat competition has gone to the extent that it has in ours. We all realize this, but are helpless to stem the tide alone, because the market can be upset by the competition of a comparatively small percentage of the buildings in any city. We must sooner or later realize that buildings can not be filled by taking tenants out and putting them in another, and consequently we should devote our efforts to maintenance of present occupancies at proper rentals instead of sacrificing income to occupancy."

"Office building space costs practically as much to produce today as in former years," he said, "and while it is argued that the law of supply and demand controls—to the extent that it has overshadowed value—we should be cognizant of the fact that the supply is not inexhaustible, as additional office buildings will be difficult to finance, and demand is already increasing and must continue to increase."

New Radiators Combine Beauty and Efficiency

Radiators have gone modern in recent years. The better radiators are carefully designed by artist-engineers, and represent the finest union of beauty and heating efficiency ever achieved in radiation. They have thin walls and slender, graceful columns, with emphasis on the perpendicular. Standing along a wall or under a window, the trim, smart lines of the new radiators make them quite unobstrusive.

Mirrors Add Pleasant Note In Decoration

Clever Use Can Bring a New Charm to the Small Home.

Important as the mirror is for shaving, for milady to powder her nose, or similar utilitarian purposes, it has yet another function in the home. From the standpoint of interior decoration, it provides an air of spaciousness when space is at a premium in the small, modern home.

Mirrors are particularly adaptable to remodeling, for they can be obtained in any size and shape and so can be fitted to a particular space. Take, for instance, the problem presented where two narrow windows are so close together in one wall as to give a cramped appearance to the room. To tear down the intervening wall space and throw it open into one large window is an expensive proposition. Yet the same effect can be achieved by building in a plain, pier mirror. This gives the impression of one wide stretch of light, and, in fact, the room is made lighter by the reflections afforded.

Mirror window sills are not only practicable but serviceable and very beautiful.

Useful in Remodeling.

An uninteresting niche, in an old house, may be lined with mirrors and shelved with them. This shelving sets off and adds luster to small objects of art, potteries or treasures of other lands.

Again in remodeling, mirrors may solve the problem of what to do with ungainly pillars in archway or hall. By paneling them with mirror glass, they become a focal point of decoration, adding a mystical touch of multiple reflections.

Perhaps your problem in remodeling is a door in one side of the room that gives an unbalanced effect. In such a case, a built-in panel mirror, painted to resemble a grille door, will give the necessary balance and also will afford an impression of greater width.

In small foyer entrances to apartments, where little or no furniture can be used, carved mirror wall panels are most effective. Plain strips of mirror may be painted to look like bird cages with canaries on diminutive perches, and used as the motif in solarium or dining room.

Will Brighten Stair-well.

One of the most difficult parts of a house to treat artistically is the stair-well. Narrow mirror panels can be placed so as to lend enchantment to this ordinarily uninteresting passageway.

Since judging the quality of a mirror is difficult for the amateur, manufacturers have simplified the process by official grading, in collaboration with the Bureau of Standards of the U. S. Department of Commerce.

Grade "AA" represents as near perfection as it is possible to manufacture. Mirrors of this quality are entirely free from major defects.

Grade "A" allows no major defects in the central area, but may contain a few well-scattered bubbles or other minor defects. These two classes, however, are a very small percentage of the entire mirror production.

Sufficiently flawless to satisfy the average buyer is Grade No. 1, which permits only certain ordinary defects inherent in most plate glass, such as scattered bubbles and faint hairlines.

Grade No. 2 contains more readily seen defects, such as light, wavy lines, occasional coarse bubbles and sometimes a wavy defect known as "bull's-eye."

Grade No. 3 may contain all the defects found in plate glass. The latter grade should be examined carefully before purchasing; it may be satisfactory for some needs, but not for others.

Proper Care Important.

The care of mirrors is important. They should be washed in clear water, with a clean, soft cheesecloth and dried with cheesecloth, then polished with chamois. If the mirror surface has not been cleaned often enough, a commercial paste or cake may be used. It then should be wiped off with soft cloth and polished with a cloth moistened in alcohol. Care should be taken in washing framed mirrors that liquid does not get between frame and glass.

Annapolis Roads Club Will Reopen

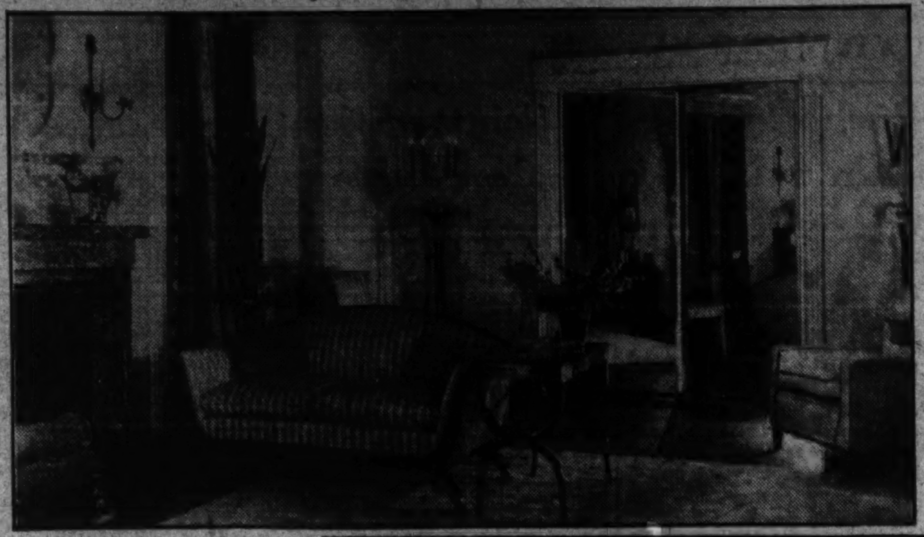
New Management Takes Charge July 1.

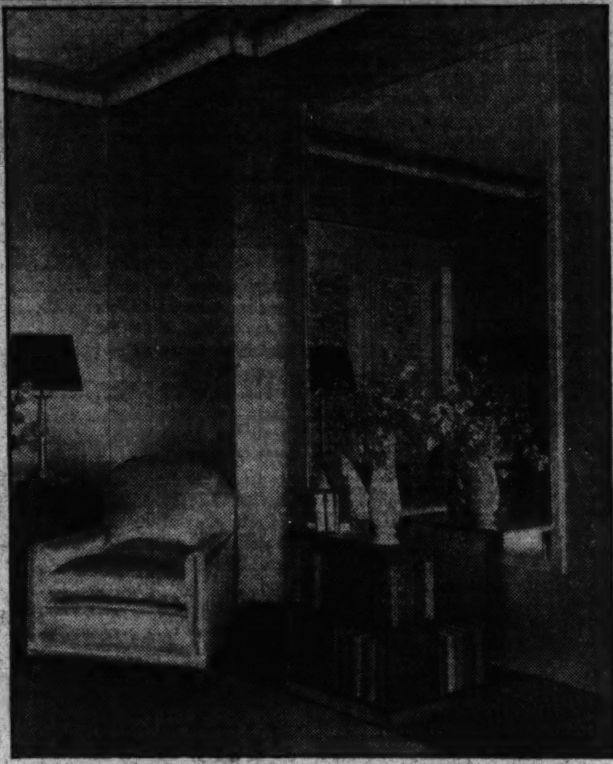
Annapolis, Md., June 23 (Spl.).—With a lower tariff for membership, the Annapolis Roads Club, popular and fashionable beach resort near Annapolis, will be formally reopened under new management July 1, it was announced yesterday.

The final court transaction in connection with sale of the property to the Equitable Co. of Washington under mortgage proceedings, has been consummated, and the Equitable Co. has leased it to the New Annapolis Roads Club, Inc., headed by S. G. Loeffler, of Washington, who has had 14 years' experience in handling golf courses and clubs. Edward I. Farr will manage the clubhouse, beach club and golf club. He was formerly manager of the Marblehead Club, Philadelphia, and manager of the Beaver Dam Country Club.

All life memberships and other holdings under the old regime were automatically erased with the transfer of the property and the new scale of membership adopted shows three classifications as follows: $50 annually for use of golf and beach club, and no further charge except for locker; $25 for use of the beach club only; $10 entitling holder to use golf club for $1 for each day, and beach club, 50 cents per day. The Wasihngton office of the new club, in charge of Frank B. Ochsenreiter, is located in Room 212, Munsey Building.

How Mirrors May Be Used in Home Remodeling





Old-fashioned "sliding doors" between living and dining rooms once were popular, but never beautiful. The same space can be treated in a manner that lends light and spaciousness to the room by the use of double doors lined with mirrors, as illustrated above.

Wall space in a small room may be utilized to give an air of greater distance by building in a mirror in the manner shown in the lower photograph. Both treatments are particularly adaptable to remodeling.

HOLC Reports 306,887 Aided In First Year

$923,416,733 in Bonds, Cash Advanced Since Law Took Effect.

A total of 306,887 individual homes throughout the country have been refinanced to date by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, marking the first full year since the passage of the home owners' loan act, according to the weekly report of the corporation covering operations up to June 15, issued recently.

Bonds and cash amounting to $923,416,733 have been advanced to mortgagees, taxing authorities and other creditors to save these homes from foreclosure or tax sale, and expended on necessary repairs, the report showed.

Applications to the numbers of 20,942 were received during the week ended June 15, the smallest number of applications in any week since the first of the year, and possibly an indication that the flood of applications for aid has begun to taper off.

Office Quickly Organized.

The home owners' loan act, authorizing $2,200,000,000 in bonds and cash for relief of home owners, was signed by the President on June 13, 1933, and by early September offices which were set up to administer the act were functioning in every State. A "wholesale" department, to take over home mortgages held by closed and restricted banks, was organized shortly afterward.

Investigation of applications and closing of loans were accelerated especially after the guarantee of principal of the bonds became certain early this year, and for the past several months loans have been concluded at the rate of approximately 15,000 transactions, averaging $45,000,000, weekly.

During the week of June 15, 16,442 loans, to a total of $52,308,676, were closed. To date applications for loans number 1,465,941, amounting to $4,702,441,796. The amount of the average loan closed is $3,008.

An additional $900,000,000 in bonds for the refunding of past-due mortgages, making a total of $3,100,000,000 in resources of the corporation, was authorized under the National housing act, passed by Congress recently.

Varnish, Wax and Oil Tables.

If you have a table that you wish to finish, select a high grade water-resisting spar varnish that will not turn white when hot liquids are inadvertently spilled upon it. Waxing or oiling will help keep it in good condition.

Realtors Plan Careful Study Of Housing Bill

Many Changes in Business Method and Service Are Involved.

The National housing bill, implementing President Roosevelt's plan for drawing some $1,500,000,000 of private capital into home building and reconditioning under Federal mutual mortgage insurance—the expected central pivot for the future swing of mortgage practice and home building, becomes a central topic for the coming annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards at Minneapolis this week.

The convention will discuss the changes in outlook involved in this bill, the Administration plan for putting the legislation into sound operation and changes in business method and service involved under the bill.

The association has offered its services in working out proposed details of the application of the plan to local communities. It emphasizes the significance of the discount power given to Home Loan banks under the plan, and the importance of developing a well-organized appraisal system as a foundation for the proposed mortgage structure.

The convention will center on changes of method called for by changing general business and social conditions.

Seattle Man in Mortgage Talk.

W. Water Williams, Seattle, president of the Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, will address the mortgage and finance division on "Mortgage Banking Under the New Deal." L. E. Mahan, president of the L. E. Mahan Co., St. Louis, will talk to the mortgage specialists on adjusting the mortgage business to meet present conditions. A. D. Fraser, Cleveland, will speak on the organization and administration of a mortgage business.

The securities act of 1933 and the important question of regulations with respect to real estate mortgages will be discussed by Robert E. O'Dea, of the Chicago Title and Trust Co.

Albert L. Deane, president of the General Motors Holding Corporation, will address the Land Developers and Home Builders Division on Federal aid for the home builder and owner.

Miamian on Selling.

Robert L. Davison, New York, director of research for the Pierce Foundation, will outline to the home builders present trends in building materials and equipment.

"A New Deal in New Home Selling" will be discussed by Guy W. Ellis, vice president of the Keyes Co., Miami Beach, Fla., known to all realtors for his work in National sales conferences.

Grooming properties for the new market will be a forward-looking topic of the new Institute of Real Estate Management. R. M. Dinsmore, of Brooklyn, will open this discussion.

C. A. Mullenix, president of Cuyahoga Estates Co., Cleveland, devoted exclusively to the management of income property, will talk on "Creative Management."

Arthur S. Kirk, of the Chamberlain-Kirk Co., Des Moines, Iowa, will talk on "Building and Operating a Management Business." George F. Anderson, Chicago, will address the management institute on security devices in leases.

Secretaries Meet at Noon.

A. N. Gitterman, managing director of Realty Advisory Service, New York City, will address the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers on real estate data, its filing and use to New Deal appraisers. Realty Advisory Service maintains a statistical department for collating, codyfying and abstracting information of all sales, leases, mortgages, building plans, alterations, &c., in the Borough of Manhattan, collates monetary indices, building materials and labor costs and special data to show neighborhood and population trends.

Conditions under the New Deal that have a bearing upon appraisal of industrial property will be discussed by K. Lee Hyder, M. A. I., Milwaukee, assistant vice president of the American Appraisal Co. The discussion will have special reference to appraisal for financing.

To enable secretaries of real estate boards to circulate through all meetings, the realtor secretaries division will hold its own sessions at the noon interval—as Dutch-treat luncheons—on June 27, 28 and 29. Up for informal discussion are (1) Secretary's duties under the real estate brokerage code; (2) Summary of National legislation that affects property rights; (3) Would a National real estate sales campaign be practical?

Refinished Floors Improve Interiors

Refinished floors add much to the appearance of the home interiors. Floors should first be thoroughly washed with soap and warm water. Worn places should be touched up with stain or paint, as needed, and then the floor given a coat of shellac, varnish or floor paint, as the case may be.

Repaint 3 to 5 Years.

The average frame house requires renewed paint protection every 3 to 5 years. Metal work, if exposed to moisture and the action of rust, may require more frequent recoating.

"Spatter" Gives Floors That Colonial Finish

The splatter floor finish, widely used in colonial houses, especially in New England, is obtained by painting the floor in a dark shade and spattering it with contrasting color in lighter tones. Spattering is done by dipping the brush into the lighter color and then striking the handle of the paint brush sharply, continuing until a uniformity of spatter is obtained.

Old Ivory Finish.

To create a finish having the appearance of old ivory, tint light ivory paint with a little raw sienna and burnt umber. Over this ground finish, a glaze coating of raw sienna mixed with burnt umber may be applied.

Stock Trading Is Dullest in Many Years

Market Gains Six-tenths as Turnover Drops to 233,350 Shares.

New York, June 23 (AP).—With trading for a Saturday session the dullest in nearly ten years, stocks made a gesture toward recovery today but failed to match the exuberant rally of the grain market.

After four days of declining prices, the share market met sufficient support at the week-end to lift prices of leading issues fractionally to more than 2 points.

As selling dried up, traders had to bid for stock to cover short commitments in evening-up their accounts for the week-end. Volume on the stock exchange during the two hours of trading totaled only 233,350 shares, the smallest turnover recorded for a like session since September 13, 1924. A week ago turnover amounted to 576,295 shares.

Motor Shares Improve.

Motor shares, which were targets of selling yesterday, reflected improvement in their technical position and recovered fractions to more than a point of their losses.

The Standard Statistics Co. average price for 90 stocks moved up six-tenths of a point to 78.1.

Generally, the character of the market was not changed essentially. Speculative inertia was pronounced, as most traders clung to the sidelines waiting for incentive to renewal of activity. Despite efforts to dispel timidity of speculators in accepting Federal rule of exchanges, caution was the dominant note as Wall street waited for the exchange control act to become operative July 1 and for a better view of summer business prospects.

On Rising List.

American Telephone, United States Steel, General Motors, General Electric, Chrysler, American Can, Montgomery Ward, Santa Fe and New York Central were fractionally higher at the close.

Passage of the housing bill in the final session of Congress attracted much interest, but had no effect upon the securities markets, for it was felt that the $200,000,000 home renovation plan would not develop rapidly enough to have any appreciable effect upon general business before autumn, and that new home building probably would not develop in volume until next spring.

Indications of active Treasury accumulation of silver appeared, some after the new silver policy act was signed, but financial markets on the whole remained apathetic, as inflationary implications for the nearer future seemed lacking.

The dollar was again inclined to strengthen in the foreign exchange markets. Political and economic developments in Germany were watched with some apprehension, but the Reichsbank maintained its firm grip on the mark. Some important international banking quarters were still inclined to look for eventual devaluation, despite Dr. Schacht's vigorous statements to the contrary.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Domination of Reserve System by Treasury Makes the Shift to Long-Term Governments Last Week an Insignificant Development.

By Ralph West Robey.

Two or three years ago a change in the portfolio of the Federal Reserve System of the character that has just been made would have been viewed, and properly so, as a development of extraordinary importance. This change has been a shift of $66,000,000 from short-term Government obligations to 14-year bonds. At present, however, the move scarcely is worthy of attention except as an indication of the direction in which we are moving in matters of finance.

The reason such a step would have been assigned such importance only a short time ago is that it is directly contrary to accepted policy for a central bank to keep its funds tied up in long-term obligations. Underlying this policy is not mere academic theory but the fact that a central bank's primary responsibility is to maintain the liquidity of the credit system of the country. It does this through serving as a buffer against unexpected strains, using for this purpose the ultimate reserves of the banking system.

Reserves May Be Compared To Savings Against Rainy Day.

These ultimate reserves are somewhat in the nature of savings that everyone likes to have put aside against unexpected misfortunes. One hopes that it never will be necessary to use them, but nevertheless he recognizes that he may have to and consequently in his investment of such funds he considers two things, safety and realizability. If he does not have the first, the savings may be lost; if he does not have the second, he will be unable to get the funds when he needs them.

Now, a central banking system is faced with the same type of a problem. It must invest only in the safest paper available, but over and above this it must keep its funds employed in such a manner that they are available. If it fails to do this it will be unable to meet the strains that forever are developing even in the best-run banking system.

Specifically, what this means from the point of view of a central bank, is that it must never invest its funds in anything but self-liquidating paper — paper which will be paid off in a few months at the most through the completion of a normal business transaction. If its portfolio consists only of this kind of paper there will be a constant replenishment of its funds. The reserves, in other words, may be used over and over as a revolving fund instead of becoming permanently exhausted on the first operation through being tied up in long-term investments.

Central Banks Have Bought Only Short-Term Governments.

In following out this policy it has been the practice of central banks to limit their holdings of Government obligations to short-term paper. This has not been, let me emphasize, because this was any safer than the long-term paper, but simply because it was easier to realize upon in case of necessity.

During the last few years, however, the Federal Reserve system has been brought so completely under the domination of the United States Treasury that all possibility of reducing its Government portfolio as a means of replenishing its funds has been eliminated. Whether it holds long or short term obligations, therefore, is of no moment. Its portfolio is equally frozen in either case, for were it to start to sell its Governments, and the Treasury did not come to the support of the market, the prices would break wide open.

In such a situation the question naturally arises as to what would happen should a strain develop. The answer is that the Reserve banks would look to the Treasury. Then comes the question: But where would the Treasury get the money? The answer is: Borrow it as long as possible, and then start the printing presses.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 86.3 Level

Trading Dwindles to Ebb as Transfers Total Only $4,033,000.

New York, June 23 (AP).—While prices were fairly steady in today's brief bond market, trading was virtually at a standstill throughout the greater part of the session.

Transfers totaled only $4,033,000, par value, the lowest Saturday's aggregate since September 9, last year. This compared with a turnover of $6,273,000 on Saturday, a week ago.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate loans was unchanged at 86.3. On the week this average showed a loss of fourteenths of a point.

News Is Scarce.

News and views were scarce and most potential buyers and sellers were inclined to remain on the sidelines until the political and economic outlooks become somewhat clearer. At the same time prime investment bonds maintained their top positions and a number of secondary issues rallied moderately.

Among gainers of fractions to a point or so were loans of Armour & Co., Baltimore & Ohio, St. Paul, Chicago & Northwestern, Cuba Northern, Denver Gas, Erie, Goodrich, Great Northern, Inland Steel, International Hydro-Electric, International Telephone, Lehigh Valley, Louisville & Nashville, Morris & Co., N. Y. Central, New Haven, Northern Ohio Traction, Northern Pacific, Postal Telegraph, Union Pacific, Western Maryland and Western Union.

List of Losers.

Small losers included liens of Wheeling & Lake Erie, Warner Bros., Utilities Power & Light, Standard Oil of New Jersey and California, Southern Railway, Southern Pacific, Pennsylvania Power, Missouri Pacific, American & Foreign Power and Alleghany Corporation.

U. S. Government securities were unusually quiet and slightly mixed.

In the foreign department obligations of Australia recovered up to 2 points. The Germans, however, were again reactionary.

Guano Deposits Threatened.

Steps are now being taken by the Chilean Government to regulate the guano industry and protect guano-producing birds, in an effort to avert the threatened exhaustion of the country's rich guano deposits, according to Consul F. B. Atwood, in a report made public by the Commerce Department.

Curb Leaders Gain Slightly; Oils Decline

Trading Turns Dullest in Month; Few Issues Are Active.

New York, June 23 (AP).—Trading was the slowest in nearly a month on the Curb Exchange today and price fluctuations were confined to a point or less. Active issues were few in number.

Oil shares, which had shown a decided downward tendency throughout most of the week, were in fair demand as a result of short covering in preparation for the week-end closing, and a number of the leaders improved small fractions to around a point, among them Gulf Oil, International Petroleum, Humble Oil, Imperial Oil and Standard of Indiana.

Other issues showing improvement at the close included Technicolor, National Bellas Hess, Hiram Walker, Armour & Co. (new), Carib Syndicate, Fairchild, Fisk Rubber, General Aviation, Great Atlantic & Pacific and Holinger Gold.

Utilities and metals were extremely apathetic, but the former group showed good resistance to a moderate amount of selling. Such issues as American Gas and United Gas preferred, gained around a point, and Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, Electric Bond & Share common and preferred, Cities Service preferred "B," and others were slightly higher.

Issues closing lower included Bunker Hill & Sullivan, Childs preferred, Pacific Light preferred, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Safety Car, Stutz Motor and Swift & Co.

Wall Street Briefs

New York, June 23 (AP).—Sales of Frigidaire Corporation were 45 per cent greater in March, April and May than in any similar three-month period in the history of the company, it was stated by E. G. Bichler, president.

Raw sugar stocks in the licensed warehouses in New York are at the highest since 1930, totaling 1,277,856 bags, according to the New York Coffee & Sugar Exchange. The present total contrasts sharply with the low of 482,000 bags stored on January 26.

Sales of Chevrolet Motor Co from January 1 to June 10 totaled 316,181 units, according to W. E. Holler, general sales manager, who added that in the first ten days in June sales amounted to 25,935 units, compared with 21,688 in the first ten days of the same month in 1933.

Revivals Found in Ascendency In Spite of Seasonal Handicaps

By Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., New York, June 23.—While business continues to be swayed by the dominance of seasonal influences, recovery is in the ascendency, although latterly it has become steadier, with a conspicuous absence of spectacular gains in any one division.

The slow broadening process in evidence since the first of the year has removed the isolated peaks that outlined progress a year ago, but has left the general level higher than it was at that time, despite the weight which the great mass of unemployment throws heavily upon it.

The general pace of business has yet to be slowed, as the narrower gains revealed in comparisons with a year ago are not indicative of a general let-down, for it was in June, 1933, that the impetus of the New Deal and rising prices pushed activity in many branches to within striking distance of the 1931 level.

Business More Cheerful.

With legislative uncertainties removed by the adjournment of Congress, business sentiment has assumed a more cheerful tone, as during the balance of the year attention may be concentrated on pertinent administrative affairs and trade development, unhampered by the necessity of making constant adjustments to retardative extraneuos influences.

Early estimates on fall distribution are running from 15 to 25 per cent above the 1933 figures, as the Government seems determined to permit no relapse in trade movements, and the plans which are to be disclosed shortly may result in a more liberal upward revision of this percentage.

Both from an industrial and commercial standpoint, the reports received from all parts of the country this week depict the situation as continuing favorable, with only minor seasonal declines noticeable, as yet. If anything, the contrary prevails, and improvement would be more general, if it were not for labor difficulties, both actual and threatening, in a number of districts.

Restraints Breaking Down.

There is a gradual breaking down of the restraints, which have been making headway difficult, and as soon as bearings will have been taken of the changed situation, an upswing based on a more solid foundation than that which developed a year ago is in prospect.

Fewer complexities are noted than a month ago, and the present is being viewed as a resting period before the march forward is resumed. Prices gradually are reaching a more normal level, having shaken off most of the artificial stimuli, which failed to bring the desired increase in buying.

In fact, it is becoming increasingly evident that the greatest invigorator to purchasing power from now on must be provided by the capital goods industries, the recovery of which has been throttled by fears and threats, which have made business men timid about contracting for capital outlays, even though manufacturers of consumers' goods have completed plans for releasing millions for new equipment.

(Associated Press.)

Hides—The week's sales included about 34,000 hides transferred at Chicago at 9½ cents a pound for light native cows and Colorado steers; branded and heavy native cows at 9 cents. These prices were unchanged from the previous sales. In the New York spot market 2,600 heavy native steers sold at 10½ cents a pound.

Farm equipment—"While the abrupt rise in sales since the first of the year was checked during June in some lines," says Dun & Bradstreet, "other branches were benefited, so that the showing for 1934 is expected to be the best one recorded for the trade in three years."

Zinc—United States production in May totaled 30,992 tons against 30,562 in April. Domestic stocks at the end of May were 104,732 tons against 109,375 a month earlier.

Carbon black—Bookings for July delivery have been comparatively light thus far and producers are said to expect a slackening demand over the next two months. June deliveries are estimated below those of May.

Canned foods—The price on California pears, 1934 pack, has been advanced, putting choice brands on the basis of $1.85 per case, Pacific Coast.

Wheat Values Jump Under Buying Rush

European Loss Report Is Trade Incentive; Corn and Oats Rise.

Chicago, June 23 (AP).—A big outburst of speculative buying shot wheat and rye straight upward more than 3 cents a bushel today and corn more than 2 cents.

Sensational reported drought losses both of bread grains and of feed grain crops in Europe, losses estimated at approximately 1,400,000,000 bushels as compared with last year, supplied the chief incentive to buyers.

Fears of a damaging heat wave in Canada added to the skyward impetus of prices, and so did reports of probable outright failure of the wheat crop of southeastern Saskatchewan Province, Canada, involving 10,000,000 bushels.

Wheat Closes Buoyant.

Wheat closed buoyant at virtually the day's top quotations, 2¾ to 3⅛ cents above yesterday's finish, corn 1⅝ to 2⅛ up, oats 1 to 1¼ advanced, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 10 cents.

Conspicuous among the day's developments in the wheat market was the fact that Kansas City prices showed much greater strength than wheat values elsewhere, notwithstanding arrivals of new crop wheat at Kansas City were enlarging rapidly.

Indeed the movement of freshly harvested domestic winter wheat in the Southwest today reached the greatest volume yet this season, totaling 2,056 cars at 10 Southwestern terminals. Unlike experience on any previous day, the pressure of this wheat was readily absorbed, one reason given being that millers were active buyers at Kansas City, paying liberal premiums for good milling wheat.

Jumps of wheat prices in Chicago began as soon as trading commenced, but were successively outdone by Kansas City, where a maximum rise of 4⅛ cents a bushel was shown at the close. Participating in the Chicago stampede to purchase were numerous Eastern stock market sources and Chicago professional operators as well as flour milling interests.

Europe's Wheat Shortage.

The European wheat crop shortage was estimated at 480,000,000 bushels as compared with the harvest in 1933. The companion breadstuff rye was figured as showing a deficiency of 229,500,000 bushels.

Incidentally Liverpool dispatches laid special stress on reports today of severe drought over eastern Australia, emphasizing that drought effects have been world wide.

A leading crop expert said that corn destruction by chinch bugs this season would be almost continuous throughout the entire 1934 corn growth period.

Provisions advanced with grains despite downturns of hog values. It was pointed out that lard was selling below present cost of manufacture, and that indications of decreasing stocks of lard were apparent.

Food Prices Rise 2 Cents To New High

New York, June 23.—Wholesale food prices continued to advance into new high ground in the past week. The Weekly Food Index, compiled by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., for June 19, rose another 2 cents, to stand at $2.19. This increase followed advances of 3 cents in each of the two weeks preceding, and brought the current index to the highest level since August 12, 1931.

Compared with the like week of last year, when the index stood at $1.89, food prices show a rise of 15.9 per cent and it is interesting to note that the total rise since March 1, 1933, now amounts to almost 50 per cent.

The Dun & Bradstreet Weekly Food Index of wholesale prices (the sum total of the price per pound of 31 articles in common use) compared with preceding weeks and years is given herewith:

Women Called Brain Trust Of Business

Sales Expert Says They Control 85 Per Cent of All Purchases.

The real brain trust which most controls the business of this country is its women, according to James A. Sterling, advertising and sales promotion manager of the Norge Corporation, Detroit, manufacturers of Rollator refrigerators and other home appliances, who is in town to introduce a summer sales drive at a meeting sponsored by Columbia Wholesalers, Inc., distributors for this area, held at the Mayflower Hotel on Friday night and which all Norge dealers from a wide surrounding area attended.

"American housewives are our real brain trust," said Mr. Sterling. "They control the purchase of 85 per cent of all goods sold at retail. Upon their clear thinking, careful buying habits, the destinies of all manufacturers and retailers depend. No tradesman dares overlook their comparative shopping methods. They seldom make a buying decision in haste, particularly in the purchase of home appliances which require major investment and are bought for lifetime satisfaction.

"After shrewd comparative shopping the average housewife selects the one electric refrigerator which has most vital differences, compared with others. Price is seldom a determining factor in the selection, because, when buying for lifetime performance, a woman knows the cheapest price may often be most extravagant. She judges differences in mechanism, convenience features, operating cost and styling which makes one product stand out from others as a better buy. Thus, in every line of business, the product having the most demonstrable vital distinction, provided its plus values are made known through newspaper advertising, is the one which wins greatest popular demand."

Bank Clearings Of Week Rise 0.5 Per Cent

New York, June 23.—Bank clearings continue to show some irregularity at a number of points. The total for this week at all leading cities in the United States, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was $5,580,286,000, an increase of 0.5 per cent over the amount reported for the corresponding week of 1933. This contrasted with a gain of 3.5 per cent a week earlier. At New York City, clearings were $3,878,489,000, a loss of 4.4 per cent, while the total of $1,701,797,000 for all outside centers was higher by 13.6 per cent than that of a year ago.

Both New York City and Boston again contributed losses this week. Substantially higher clearings are shown at some of the outside centers. The large increase at some of these points, however, reflects the continued restriction in banking operations at these cities a year ago. This week's clearings, as well as those of last year, cover large settlements for corporation tax payments, due at this time.

Figures for leading cities, compared with those of last year, are printed herewith; also, daily bank clearings for the year to date:

Retail Failures Rise Highest Since April 26

New York, June 23.—A rise to the highest level since the week ended April 26 featured business failures in the United States for the week ended June 14. The total reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was 251, compared with 239 in the week preceding, and 396 for the same period of 1933.

Retail failures rose to 149, against 145 a week earlier, and an increase of 10 defaults was registered for the manufacturing group. There was no change in the other commercial classification, while a decrease of 2 failures occurred among wholesalers.

When analyzed by geographical divisions, gains were confined to the Middle Atlantic, South Atlantic, Central East, Central West and Pacific. In three regions, the New England, South Central and Western, the number was reduced.

Export Trade of Italy Declines to Low Level

Italy's export trade declined to a notably low level during the first quarter of the current year, according to a report prepared in the Commerce Department's division of regional information.

In the January-March period exports were valued at 1,271,400,000 lire, a decrease of 14.7 per cent compared with the corresponding period of 1933, and this showing was particularly unsatisfactory in contrast with the coincidental advance in imports by 4.2 per cent to 2,006,700,000 lire.

Frederick P. H. Siddons, president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, and secretary of the American Security & Trust Co., announced yesterday appointment of the following committees for the association:

Robert H. Lacey, cashier of Columbia National Bank, has been appointed chairman of the Credit Bureau committee for the administration year. The Credit Bureau of the District of Columbia Bankers Association was formed in 1929 and has served a most useful purpose for the members of the association.

Each year there has been some added service rendered by the Credit Bureau committee, which has been of increasing help to all member banks. Cotton's Gain Is Trimmed In Late Trading

July Closes at 11.94 as General Market Rises 3 to 5 Points.

New York, June 23 (AP).—After a moderate advance in the early trading on unfavorable weather reports from the Southwest, cotton reacted partially under continued July liquidation and week-end realizing.

October contracts after advancing to 12.26, or 8 points above yesterday's closing, finished at 12.22, while the general market ended steady at net advances of 3 to 5 points.

During the first hour, in addition to covering and local or scattering commission house demand, there was buying here through brokers with foreign trade connections, and prices showed considerable firmness on the outlook for continued dry weather in Texas tonight and tomorrow.

Active months sold 8 to 10 points above the previous finals, with July advancing to 11.99 and December to 12.38, but July liquidation continued in considerable volume and there was some scattered selling in the late trading. Closing quotations showed reactions of about 4 to 5 points from the best on the more active positions.

There was heavy switching from July to later months, but the trade bought July freely at the wider differences and the selling of the later deliveries was absorbed by buying on the weather news and the favorable action of the wheat and stock markets.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 105,000 bales, against 155,000 last year and 74,000 two years ago.

U. S. Acquires 100,000,000 Units Of Silver

Plans Ready to Purchase 1,300,000,000 Ounces Under Money Act.

By Richard L. Gridley.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Approximately 100,000,000 ounces of silver have been acquired by the Federal Government at a cost of around $50,000,000 since the Roosevelt Administration began the rehabilitation of silver, it was estimated semiofficially this week.

About 65,000,000 ounces were believed to have been secretly acquired in London and New York over the past few months by the Government's $2,000,000,000 exchange stabilization fund. The cost was believed to be from 40 to 50 cents an ounce.

An additional 20,000,000 ounces were acquired last summer at 50 cents an ounce from Great Britain, representing that country's June 15 war debt payment; 8,000,000 ounces of newly mined metal have been acquired at 64½ cents an ounce from American producers since December. Several million ounces more are believed to have been purchased directly in the open market in the past few days.

Large Purchase Planned.

Secretary of Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., was drawing plans yesterday for the purchase of nearly 1,300,000,000 additional ounces of silver to carry out provisions of the silver purchase act of 1934, which provides that the country's silver monetary reserves be increased until they reach one-third of the size of the monetary gold stocks.

Morgenthau said he expected to bring about a rise in the price of silver which many Administration and Congressional leaders hope will contribute to higher commodity prices. Elaborate safeguards have been put into effect to prevent speculators from "cashing in" on the Government's price lifting scheme.

If the estimated 100,000,000 ounces recently acquired were obtained at an average price of 50 cents an ounce, the Government has a huge paper profit, as each ounce in silver represents $1.29 when used as monetary backing. The profit on 100,000,000 ounces at 50 cents an ounce is $89,000,000.

Possible Federal Profit.

If the entire 1,300,000,000 ounces to be acquired under the law is obtained at favorable prices, the eventual "profit" of the Government might easily approach the billion dollar mark.

This "profit," however, is not to be carried on the books of the Treasury Department. Metal bought under the new silver purchase act is to be carried at cost price. Under the law as fast as a dollar is spent for silver, a dollar in silver currency will be printed. If the silver is bought at less than $1.29 per ounce, some silver will be left over, but will not appear on the books.

Preparations for increased use of silver money are being made. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing will shortly begin to print millons of dollars worth of new silver currency.

In an effort to increase its use it is being printed in $5 and $10 denominations. At present the outstanding silver currency consists only of $494,225,271 in one-dollar certificates.

Silk Producers Concerned.

The almost complete dependence of Japan's silk industry on the American market is beginning to cause concern among producers in that country, according to a report to the Commerce Department from its Tokyo office.

MEN
SINCERE MEN OF
THOUGHT AND ACTION

Within the past few weeks we have hired several men in Washington and surrounding territory who today will tell you they are in the most pleasant and profitable business of their lives. Maybe you, too, will meet our requirements and find that a connection with us will prove profitable for you.

We have nothing to sell you. If you are acceptable we do not ask you to do anything that other men in Washington are not doing successfully each day. But we do most emphatically state if you meet our requirements as to character, references, &c., we will give you as good, if not better, opportunity than you have ever had to make a good, honest, honorable living for yourself and your family, on a compensation plan of bonus plus liberal commission, with no investment of any kind from you. The work is dignified and pleasant and you will be glad to look your friend in the eye and tell him about it. The pay is exceptionally good. Especially interested in men from Washington and northern Virginia.

If you earnestly want an opportunity to better yourself and are willing to put sincere thought and action into your work we will be glad to meet you personally Monday morning at 9:15 in the Blue Room of the Hamilton Hotel. Come prepared to spend the entire morning.

Washington Takes Rank as Four-Week Stand in Midst of Summer Heat

one of the most ingenuous of the cinema's younger stars, who is said to take on a new maturity in her role opposite Charles Farrell in "Change of Heart," adapted from a story by Kathleen Norris, current at Loew's Palace Theater. The Gaynor-Farrell screen partnership is one of the most popular Hollywood is able to offer.

The Advocates of Film Reform State Their Cases With Ardor

Opinions Are Both Informed and Uninformed, But All Manifest Willingness to Condemn the Good With the Bad.

By Nelson B. Bell.

THE deep-rooted earnestness of those engaged in the campaign of reform, aimed at the motion picture industry, that is sweeping the country has been eloquently attested during the past week by the widespread and divergent responses elicited by this column's comments upon the purposes and methods of the Legion of Decency, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Research Council and the religious and civic groups that are concentrating their forces upon the furtherance of the crusade.

Many of the reactions, as they have expressed themselves over the telephone or by letter, have betrayed a complete unfamiliarity with even the most fundamental concepts of those engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

They blame the screen for evils of which it could not possibly be guilty to the degree that the conscientious objectors pretend to believe. The implication in many instances is that juvenile delinquency was unknown in the world prior to 1909, when the first motion pictures attempting the relation of a dramatic narrative were being made. This, of course, is arrant nonsense.

Another assumption that can not be sustained is that the entire structure of the picture industry is degraded, sodden and destructive. One is asked to believe that no decent impulse is possible to those primarily concerned in the making of the world's film fare.

It is only to these extravagances of condemnation that this department objects and finds it impossible to support.

By frequent declaration and the printed record of many years, we yield to no one in resentment at the obtrusion of indecency upon the screen, in the living theater or upon the printed page of modern fiction.

As among these mediums of expression we believe the cinema to be least guilty of transgression. Its versions of fictional and stage works are the cleanest made available to the mass public in quest of entertainment. This is patent to anyone who reads and attends the theater.

Our quarrel, if we have any, with the present drive for betterment is not that it seeks to eliminate the evil, but that in so doing it is apparently willing to condemn all that is good, without differentiation, particularization as to what is deemed unfit for public consumption or any specification of the definite objects of its retributive processes.

This is no part of equity, fair play or justice.

* * * *

ONE of the most comprehensive treatises upon the viewpoint and intent of those actively engaged in fostering the campaign of reform bears date of June 18, 1934, over the signature of Robert S. Lloyd, S. J., headmaster of the Georgetown Preparatory School, at Garrett Park, Md.

My respected correspondent flatters the writer by stating in his opening paragraph:

> Yesterday I read your article appearing in The Washington Post, entitled "The Human Equation is a Vital Element in Our Wave of Reform" and today again I read your "follow-up," entitled "Major Motion Picture Producers Conform Voluntarily to Wishes of Reformers."

He continues then with evidence of our obvious failure to make clear the attitude of mind in which we contemplate the movement that is sweeping the country in opposition to objectionable screen material, by saying:

> The tenor of each article leads one to believe that as a dramatic critic you are less interested in the common welfare of the American audience, which is desirous of clean entertainment, than you are in throwing up a smoke screen or an alibi or perhaps a little perfume over the degraded exponents of pictorial filth.

During a long acquaintanceship with leaders of the motion picture industry, dating back practically to the inception of this form of entertainment as an important factor in American amusements, I have met no one whom I could stigmatize as a "degraded exponent of pictorial filth."

There have been many mistakes, many lapses of judgment and numerous unfortunate film "trends," but the circumstances and conditions surrounding the gigantic business of supplying the bulk of the world's pictures are so complex, involve the exercise of so many executive minds and cover such tremendous ramifications that I find it impossible to identify the object of this particular denuncation.

The film industry fundamentally is a commercial project, governed by

Nautical Farce Enters Fourth Hilarious Week

'Sailor, Beware!' Establishes a New Stock Record at the National.

"Sailor, Beware," the nautical farce-comedy by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson, will sail into a fourth week at the National Theater beginning Monday night.

The June success of this rollicking comedy explodes a theory that Washington is a one-week town for stage attractions. In the past Channing Pollock defied this limited engagement belief by playing "The Fool" for a fortnight, "The Green Pastures" is another footlight favorite which ventured two weeks.

"Sailor, Beware," is the only attraction to win a four-week engagement in the ten-season history of the National Players. Singularly, the other plays which enjoyed a month were also presented by Manager Stephen E. Cochran. At the time he was operating the gone, but not forgotten, President Theater he played "White Cargo" and "Rain" to highly prosperous four-week engagements.

As most everybody knows, "Sailor Beware" is the saga of a sailor and his lass, "Dynamite" Jones, of the U. S. N., cherishes a garter as a memento of each romantic conquest. Miss Billie "Stonewall" Jackson is the monopolist of much of the virtue still discoverable in the Panama Canal Zone.

These two meet, and all the men of war and all the lights of love along the waterfront begin to bet on the outcome. The theme is ancient, but ever new. The solution is love. It is acted with a thumb to the nose and the four-week engagement attests its popularity with playgoers.

Roy Roberts and Ruth Abbott continue in the rich lead roles and the other "E" street favorites are pleasantly cast.

For the final week of the "Sailor Beware" engagement the usual matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday.

Plans Proceed To Inaugurate Biting Satire

Lyell MacLean, a new member of the Pierce Hall Players, has been cast in a prominent part in "Rhapsody in Blah," the new play by Frank Baer, which will be given its premiere performance on Thursday evening of this week. Miss MacLean was an active member of her dramatic group in the Castellja School of Palo Alto, Calif., before she recently came to Washington.

The first act of the play opens in the office of Congressman Hercules Rapp in the House Office Building with a conversation between Edmund Evans and Dorine Calcote, who have the roles of secretaries.

Appearing later in the scene are Harry Barnhart, as a bootlegger; Jesse Veitch, as the Congressman; Lyell MacLean, as his sister; Charles A. Bell, as his son, and Virginia True, as his daughter. Others in the play are Yerby Pannill, Paul Alexander, John Kendrick, Ruth Snodgrass, Kent Dyer, William Austin Davis, Clare Sargent, Charles A. Gillman, Clarence Ruebsam and James Kelley.

SALLY BURRILL,
feminine star of the "Words and Music" revue which comprises the sum total of the stage portion of this week's bill at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater. Miss Burrill is surrounded by a large cast and chorus of Chester Hale girls in one of the most elaborate stage productions the Earle has offered in many months of well-balanced vaudeville bills.

KAY FRANCIS,
who, as "Dr. Monica," is the screen star now featuring the cinematographic portion of the bill at the Warner Bros.' Earle Theater. The play of a young woman physician is said to afford the deep-throated Miss Francis one of the most fruitful opportunities she has had before the cameras.

At the Play in New York

By Mark Barron.

NEW YORK, June 23 (AP).—Inspired by a healthy upturn in theatrical business during the last year, Broadway producers after another fortnight will begin active work on an imposing schedule of new shows for the coming season.

An advance review discloses that the theater is reclaiming a number of celebrated writing names, and also indicates a boom market in musical shows.

Before going on tour with "Ah, Wilderness," George M. Cohan will stage a new play from his own pen called "He Won't Want You To" . . . At last that comic novel of a romantic Southern belle, "Cora Potts," has been dramatized for an August debut. Ward Greene is the author . . . Elisabeth Bergner, the English-Jewish actress who was ruled off the screen in Germany, will make her Broadway entrance in Margaret Kennedy's play, "Escape Me Never."

NOEL COWARD will have two new plays for the fall. One is "Conversation Piece," with Yvonne Printemps playing her first English-speaking role in this country, and the other is "Point Baline," which will bring Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne back from London . . . Paul Green's play about a steam shovel, "Potter's Field," is scheduled again, this being about the fourth straight year it has been listed.

Rowland Stebbins, who produced "The Green Pastures," will have as his initial entry a play about North Carolina mountaineers called "Tight Britches," with Jean Dixon in the leading role . . Thomas Mitchell, back from his Hollywood sojourn, resumes with a Ben Hecht-Charles McArthur manuscript, "The Moon Shooter." Its theme offers an American Indian, a sort of modern Don Quixote, who decides to reform the world.

ELMER RICE, the most successful of the playwright-producers, has three works due. They are "Judgment Day," a melodrama with a European setting; "Between Two Worlds," which has its setting on an ocean liner, and "Not For Children," a satiric comedy . . . Claire Spencer's well known novel, "Gallows Orchard," has been dramatized by Noel Pierce. This is a seasoned entry, as it was tried out three years ago by Pauline Lord at Magnolia, Mass.

George S. Kaufman (in collaboration with Moss Hart) at last has written a play which isn't a comedy. It is "Merrily We Roll Along," in nine scenes with a cast of 100 . . . Then there is that dramatization of the biography of Nijinsky, the famous dancer. Paul Muni likely will play the title part.

Dubose Heyward and the Gershwin brothers, Ira and George, are composing an opera of "Porgy," the Negro play which was an outstanding hit of 1927.

Romance Finds Fruition When Hart Pens Hit

Admiration of Dancer Is Beginning of Later Close Association.

When the blonde and lovely Marilyn Miller, then a slinder wisp of a girl of 19, was starring in "Sally" 15 years ago at the New Amsterdam Theater in New York and attracting enormous audiences, a love-struck youth of 16 who was employed as an $18-a-week stenographer in one of the theatrical offices in the building over that playhouse used to drop in on matinee days (he was friendly with the doorman) and watch her dance.

To him she was a fairy princess, an unattainable dream goddess. If someone dowered with the gift of prophecy had taken him aside and told him that it was written in the stars that 14 years later she would be starring in a show written by himself and that he would be calling her "Marilyn" and taking her out to dinner and chatting with her in her dressing room between scenes he would have said that such a consummation, though devoutly to be wished, could not possibly come to pass.

And yet it has, for the poor young stenographer was none other than Moss Hart, coauthor with Irving Berlin of "As Thousands Cheer," that amazingly successful revue in which Miss Miller has been costarring with Clifton Webb and Helen Broderick at the Music Box in New York since last September.

While the piece was being written last summer he found himself invited to dinner by a friend who did not know of his youthful love-from-afar of the blonde actress.

"There'll be a lot of interesting people there," explained his friend, "including Marilyn Miller."

Mr. Hart's heart began to pound and he gasped:

"Do me a favor, will you? Let me sit alongside of her. Of course, you haven't the faintest idea of what it will mean to me, but it will mean a lot, I assure you."

He literally walked on the circumambient air all day and found himself stumbling and stuttering when he was presented to her that night.

Before the dessert was reached he asked her if she would be interested in assuming the leading role in the projected revue and almost collapsed when she said that she was quite free and would be delighted if the part were worth while.

"I'll make it worth while," he gallantly responded.

And so it came to pass that she was engaged a week later.

Kiddies' Days Are Announced

Every Monday and Friday, until Labor Day, will be Kiddies' Day on the Wilson Line and at new Marshall Hall Park.

Round trip rates will be reduced to 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children on the boat leaving Washington at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. At Marshall Hall Park all rides will be half rate on these two days.

These kiddies' days have long been popular with thrifty mothers.

There will be three round trips every Monday and Friday, leaving Washington at 10 a. m., 2 p. m. and 5:30 p. m., and leaving Marshall Hall Park at 12 noon, 4 p. m. and 6:45 p. m.

JOE PENNER,
the lad who has become the favorite radio entertainer of the masses and who appears in person on the stage of Loew's Fox Theater this week as headliner of the vaudeville half of the bill. Mr. Penner is noted as duck salesman, cigar juggler and hat bouncer, as well as one of the most original singing comedians the stage has developed in years.

LUPE VELEZ,
the Mexican firecracker, recently in Washington on a week of personal appearances, who currently enlivens the screen at Loew's Fox Theater in "Hollywood Party," a lavish Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, with music, in which Jimmy Durante, Laurel and Hardy, Polly Moran and other stars of the M-G-M lot also cavort.

The Four Fords Offer Unique Spectacle of Celtic Harmony

When Engaged Jointly in Making Films They Become Smooth-Working Unit; Off the Set, However, They Are Four Scrappy Brothers.

WHILE the four Ford brothers of Hollywood, are no match at the moment for the Canadian quintuplets, as family appeal, they present a record intrinsically their own, as far as the film industry is concerned.

When John Ford completed the last scenes of the Fox Film "The World Moves On," which was in a few respects the largest in scope of his many directorial undertakings for the company, he and his brothers held one of their after-the-battle huddles.

They emerged with two clear concepts concerning the production and its broader ramifications. One was that "the family" as a focal point of human interest was again restored in films; the other that a new young player combination of importance had been discovered in the work of Madeleine Carroll and Franchot Tone. But the family idea appealed to them particularly, of course.

The brothers were not always named Ford. Their real family name is O'Fearne, and being Irish, originally, and brothers, they quarrel often.

"But it is not a real fight we do," explained Jack Ford. "It is more in the way of criticism over technical matters which come up while we are immersed in a production."

Phil and Ed, assistants to John, become strangers to their brother chief the moment work begins on the lot. They answer with a "yes, sir" and there is a ruthless hardness in their dealings which goes almost beyond actual necessity, as fellow craftsmen. Very often the actors new to the Fox lot do not know that the boys are brothers unless they are told.

Francis is the only actor among them and has "taken it" from his brothers under the lights, standing up valiantly through it all.

It has always been something of a miracle to Fox studio executives that so many brothers have not once had a serious quarrel which ended in estrangement. The bond of family seems stronger than any other influences. Perhaps it is films.

The Ford boys were all born in Portland, Me. John attended the University of Maine, at Orono, and planned to go into business, but the success of his brother Francis in directing and acting at Universal became a serious incentive for altered plans and John headed for the West Coast, where Francis took him on as an assistant, only after he had served in odd jobs around the studios.

He began working for Fox as a full-fledged director after he had done over 50 pictures elsewhere, being signed in 1919 by the Fox studio. He has worked for Fox almost exclusively since and has directed close to 40 productions.

His younger brothers came on West in their turn and were made assistants after they too were impressed with the fact that they must put in long periods of work, doing anyhing and everything on the lot. No one has ever been able to get a "still" of the Ford brothers in a group picture. They are too active, even for that. "And besides, we'd only fight over grouping," Jack explains.

In spite of the fact that John Ford has such productions as "The Iron Horse," "Cameo Kirby," "Arrowsmith," "Four Sons," "Up the River," "Pilgrimage" and "Lost Patrol" to his credit, he feels that there are certain universal notes rung in "The World Moves On" which have never given him a finer diversity of play in a single script.

"My actors felt this throughout the absorbing scenes and in many instances, particularly with such well-schooled people as Siegfried Rumann and Madeleine and Franchot, the scenes played themselves. This 'for the family' thing gets into your subconscious. Before long we were all one ourselves."

Nevertheless it is the Ford family which continues to hold precedent as a Hollywood industry exhibit. John is understood to be the leader of the bunch, in view of his veteran experience.

He always manages to gain the confidence of his players, no matter how externally severe his handling may appear to be, and his brothers concede that that is the real secret of his directorial prowess.

Facilities Are Diversified at Nearby Resort

The "leisure problem" is no problem at all to the thousands of Glen Echo Park fans, for an hour or a day can be profitably spent at the great resort in healthful outdoor recreation of all kinds and for every age.

The Crystal Pool offers peerless facilities for swimming, diving and splashing in its pure water. It's a hot weather tonic.

A turn or two on the thrilling coaster dip, the airplane swings, down in the old mill, or any of the 50 fun-making devices is certain to make one better fitted for the daily task, whatever its nature.

Every evening except Sunday the Spanish Garden Ballroom is the mecca for the dancers.

Country Dance A New Feature At Bay Resort

Dances that were popular when mother was a girl will be revived next Wednesday night at Seaside Park ballroom on the occasion of the inauguration of a weekly series of country dances.

The weekly country dances are designed to appeal particularly to the "Family Day" visitors to Seaside.

Frank Flanigan's snappy seven-piece orchestra will continue to play on week-ends the kind of music that the younger set prefers.

Next Thursday is Episcopal Day at Seaside.

Due to increased week-end patronage the Chesapeake Beach Railway has added additional trains on Saturdays.

Society Makes Offer to Find Film Remedies

In an effort to coordinate suggested changes in motion picture technic offered as the result of recent criticisms the American Society for Visual Education, through National headquarters in Washington, has issued an announcement of policy wherein the society volunteers to serve as a National clearing house for all such matters, favorable or unfavorable, from this time on. In this manner the society hopes to be able to assist in effecting any necessary reforms, or at least to aid in obtaining a compendium of thought on what changes or recommendations should be made, if any.

A general invitation has been issued through the executive secretary of the society, Mary Ann de Zevallos, and Maj. John Stewart Hunt, corresponding secretary, to organizations, groups or individuals, irrespective of race or creed, to communicate with the society's offices at 1622 H street northwest, Washington, D. C., or New York City, with the idea of opening a discussion and arriving at a possible conclusion.

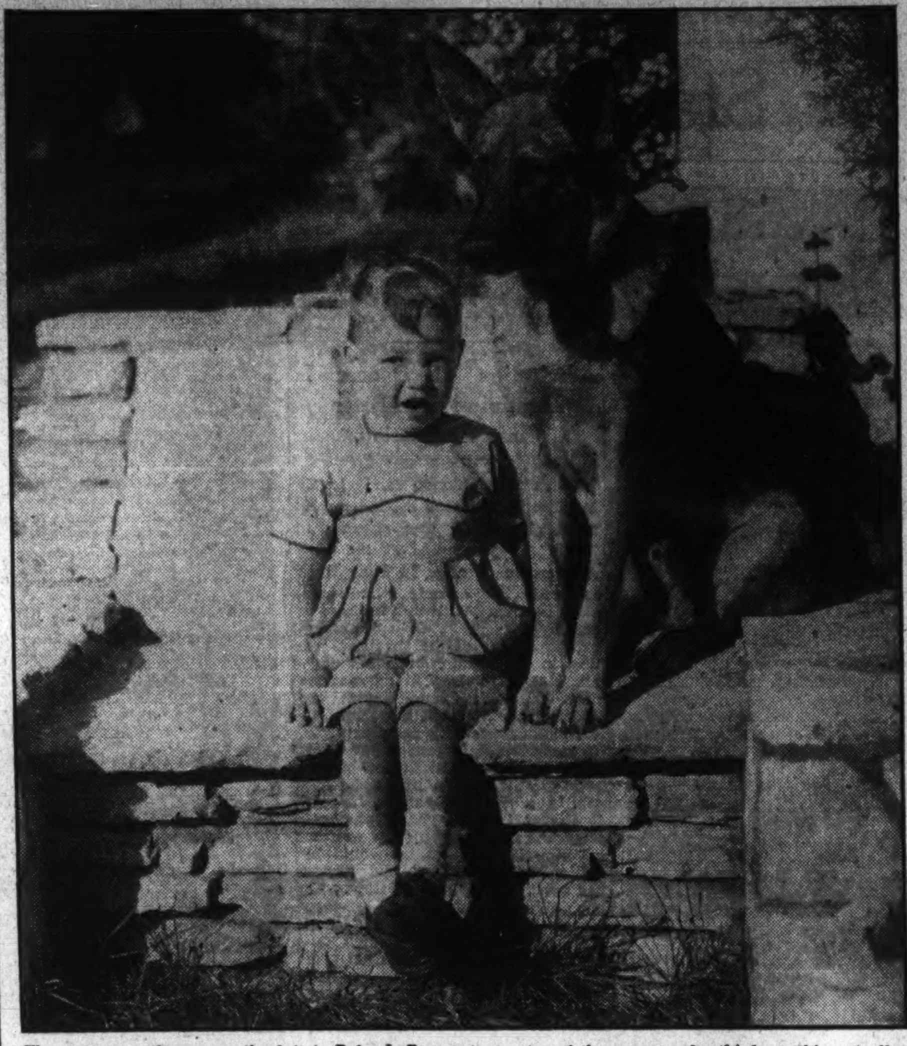
Communications may be in such form as best may suit those initiating their views, and it is hoped to be able to develop, from this mass of opinion, some concrete idea of just what are the main criticisms of the films today, and if possible, some comprehensive plan for future wholesome development, not necessarily of the film industry as a whole but mainly for those propositions identified as pertaining principally to the educational angle.

During the past four years the American Society for Visual Education has been engaged in a study and analysis of the educational importance of the films. It is this experience that now is offered, with the proffer of any possible service that may be available under the circumstances. The society already has fairly definite ideas upon which to base a possible course of action.

Tracy and Colbert To Costar in Film

"Are Men Worth It," film adaptation of Tiffany Thayer's novel, "One Woman," will costar Lee Tracy and Claudette Colbert.

A Young "Show-Stealer" and His Bodyguard



The young gentleman on the left is Baby LeRoy, veteran star of the screen, who thinks nothing at all of stealing scenes from such novices as W. C. Fields, with whom he appears next in "The Old-Fashioned Way." On the right is Pal, official bodyguard of Master LeRoy, without whom the baby star refuses to go to the studio or fulfill any other of his numerous professional engagements.

Team Popular.

Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland have been teamed for the fourth time in "Her Master's Voice," which will go into production shortly after their present picture, "Melody in Spring."

For Gertrude.

Gertrude Michael's work in "Cleopatra" being unfinished, Judith Allen fills the part first scheduled for Miss Michael in "She Loves Me Not," with Bing Crosby and Miriam Hopkins.

Maid Acts.

Libby Taylor, Mae West's comically talented colored maid, last week stepped before the camera on the "It Ain't No Sin" set to play in the picture the part she plays in life.

the same laws of supply and demand as govern the conduct of any other giant American industry. As was remarked last Sabbath in this space, a great deal that appears upon the screen, is enacted upon the stage and is printed in books appears in those places and is placed on the market because it has been satisfactorily demonstrated that that is what a vast number of American buyers wish to purchase and make profitable.

The human equation IS vital to this discussion and the successful outcome of the campaign now in progress.

In another paragraph of Headmaster Lloyd's interesting commentary this is said:

> You refer to the article by Mr. Edwin Schallert as "an exhaustive resume of the Hollywood viewpoint"—that is a little too strong for the simple reason that no one man can ever adequately "exhaust" the exposition of cinema degradation.
> You state: "What the patron wants is something to lift him into a state of mental exhilaration that he has always craved but can only achieve vicariously." By implicaion, you evidently hold that the average audience seeks vicarious mental exhilaration by witnessing the breakdown of law and order in the lives of others, especially racketeers and gangsters. If such is true you should not have limited yourself to the designation of racketeers and gangsters but you should have included the modern prostitute, pervert and purveyor of immoral filth.

The illustrative passages published last Sunday served only to point a state of mind in which a vast number of people approach any excursion into the theater. There are, however, names, descriptions and allusions that one customarily omits from the columns of the daily press, just as the Legion of Decency wishes them omitted from public entertainment, and for the same reason.

• • • •

A FURTHER consideration of our earlier remarks reveals the following:

> Both articles carry the phrases "wave of reform" and "wishes of reformers." This seems to imply that reformation is possible. It strikes me that the term "reform" in the present instance is inexact. We can not speak of "reforming" a disease . . . . One speaks of "charming" a snake, but never of reforming one.

This, I take it, is figurative hyperbole.

The concluding paragraph of Father Lloyd's letter is one to which I can wholeheartedly dedicate such cooperative efforts as I am able to exert:

> I do hope that you will have the goodness to cooperate with the League of Decency, the Federation of Women's Clubs and all the groups of Protestants, Catholics and Jews who are sincerely interested in preserving clean, healthy entertainment for the American people.

There can be no quibbling here. It brings up, nevertheless, the point that many have chided this department for having referred to the reform movement as "subterranean," "subtle" and "insidious."

It has seemed to me that it is all of these things by reason of a lack, as already stated, of particularization, the naming of names of those things which are to be condemned and boycotted and an equitable willingness to safeguard those things in the cinema which have been good.

There has been and will be no inclination on the part of this department to condone filth and demoralization on the screen, or elsewhere.

Neither will there ever be a willingness to encompass in any destructive gesture the forces that have brought to the silver sheet such distinguished and uplifting exhibits of the art of the cinema as "Cavalcade," "Little Women," "The House of Rothschild," "Maedchen in Uniform," "The White Sister," "Cradle Song," Catherine the Great," "The Private Life of Henry VIII," "Lady for a Day," "The Sign of the Cross," "The Ten Commandments," "Intolerance," "The Birth of a Nation," "The King of Kings" and innumerable others of comparable intelligence and worth.

Straight From the Studios

Latin Actress Risks Health for Sake of Her Career; Harold Lloyd to Begin New Film Soon, He Says; Hollywood Oddments and Such.

By Speed Kendall.

Hollywood, June 23.—Rosita Moreno, brunette Latin actress, virtually took her life in her own hands yesterday when she walked on the set at Paramount studio. She did it against the instructions of her doctor, who told her to go, instead, to the hospital for the removal of her appendix. An attack on Monday stopped production on "Ladies Should Listen" until her return yesterday. She stakes her health against a good break in this and two productions at other studios before she will submit to an operation.

Punished For Disobedience.

Orders are orders, Jean Parker discovered yesterday when her sail boat was ordered taken from her. Moguls at M. G. M. issued the ultimatum because she, against orders, ventured alone beyond the breakwater at Los Angeles harbor. A lot of picture work is scheduled for her, and executives are taking no chances.

Just Tired Out.

Maestro Ted Fio Rito was lulled to sleep today by his own music. He fell smack out of his chair, fast asleep, at the radio studio where he and his orchestra are rehearsing for a two-reel musical. Too much prosperity and not enough rest are blamed for his embarrassing moment. He has four jobs—making this film, playing at the Cocoanut Grove, preparing a vaudeville routine and broadcasting.

Good News For Lloyd Fans.

Harold Lloyd sent word to his studio yesterday from New York that he will start production almost immediately upon another picture. It will be almost two years between the exhibition of his recently completed "The Cat's Paw" and the last previous one, "Movie Crazy," and Lloyd doesn't intend permitting another lapse of time between pictures. He and his wife will first take a trip though the National parks or go to Honolulu for a month.

New and Novel Experience.

Three hundred beauties working in the chorus for "Dames," out at Warner Brothers, had an unusual experience today. They had to wear black cotton stockings! Busby Berkeley, the dance director, insisted on this innovation to get the proper black and white effects he desired.

Odd and Interesting People and Events.

Jack Oakie and Toby Wing comprise the latest surprise romance . . . Lorena Layson got back from a Florida vacation yesterday . . . Week-enders at Agua Caliente, Mexico, which, incidentally, is becoming more popular all of the time, included among others the Princes David and Serge Mdivani, Dorothy Dunbar, former wife of Max Baer; John Mack Brown, Col. Roscoe Turner, Ralph Graves, Enrico Caruso, jr., Pert Kelton, Sterling Holloway and Patricia Ellis.

Because of intimate love scenes between Kay Francis and Leslie Howard in "British Agent" yesterday, all visitors were barred from the set—but James Cagney got in . . . Director Tay Garnett is living on his new boat at the harbor while working on the script for "China Seas." . . . Jean Harlow leaves with her mother for Honolulu next week . . . One of Claudette Colbert's fans called her by long distance from St. Louis yesterday—just to hear her voice . . . Mr. and Mrs. John Lodge are back from a trip to Santa Barbara.

RUTH ABBOTT,

leading woman of the National Theater Players, who for the fourth consecutive week appears in the role of Miss Billie "Stonewall" Jackson in "Sailor, Beware," the ribald farce by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson, which is shattering all stock company records at the National. The Players and many local actors are well cast.

Mystery Drama Scheduled for National, July 2

Following the engagement of "Sailor, Beware," the National Players will present what Critic Percy Hammond calls "the best mystery melodrama of the 1933-1934 season," "Invitation to a Murder."

This new play is a real chiller, fashioned by Rufus King, who collaborated on "Murder at the Vanities." It is running on Broadway at present and there is feverish activity among the Hollywood producers to land the movie rights.

Playwright King has fashioned dialogue and incidents that are calculated to give the most blase a thrill. In one scene a rich and powerful California lady lies in a deathlike trance, shrouded, while the grisly organ music of her funeral fills her mansion. Lorina Channing feigns death with the aid of a struggling physician to trap a relative who has been trying to poison her.

"Invitation to a Murder" offers the National Players cast good roles. Roy Roberts and Ruth Abbott will play the leads, with Freddy Sherman, Mary Loane, Raymond Bramley, Mrs. Adelaide Hibbard and Romaine Callender.

Roadside Group To Give Extra 'Demand' Show

A special "demand" performance of "The Octoroon" tomorrow night, June 25, is announced by the management of the Roadside Theater, located just off the Rockville pike, 6 miles beyond Bethesda.

Enthusiastic response to the revival of Dion Boucicault's masterpiece of the 1850s, both in demand for tickets and in the participation of the audience in the performance by loud hisses, cheers, and even floor stamping, has made this additional performance feasible.

A Common-Sense Concert? 'Tis Only a Critic's Fond Dream of a World Without Vanity

Reviewer Gives Us Fairy Tale In Which Some Will Find Moral

Pianist Is Clothed for Comfort, His Name Unadvertised; Program Is Ad Libitum, There Is No Applause; Ah, He's Yearning for the Impossible.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Percival Pollard once remarked that "to dream of impossible things impossibly is the only dreaming that is worth while." I assume that he meant the kind of dreaming in which one indulges during waking hours, for it is only in consciously directed dreams that the impossible comes logically to pass.

When we dream with open eyes we do not have to clothe our wish-fulfillments in Freudian symbols, for the will is in harmony with the imagination. The tentative laws of science, the evolutionary hypothesis, the theory of relativity were all the outcome of day-dreaming under the guidance of the intelligent will to discover. Even music critics have their dreams of improbable things that may be true, and this is one of mine:

I found myself in a crowded concert hall waiting for the entrance of a young Patagonian pianist. (The vogue of the Russians had evidently declined). The name of the musician eluded my mental snatches at it, and I inquired of my neighbor, who informed me curtly that he did not know. In his facial expression pity mingled with a mild astonishment. I detained a passing usher and asked him for a program, only to be met with a puzzled stare and a shrug of the shoulders. Curious glances were cast at me by those who had overheard my request, and I began to feel the prickly uneasiness of the socially inept.

Clothed for Comfort.

This discomfort was forgotten when the pianist walked upon the stage, for I was surprised by the unconventionality of his costume. He was attired as for a tennis match—white flannel trousers and a soft silk shirt with short sleeves. The evening was warm, but he appeared cool and comfortable—a refreshing contrast to the dress-suited figures to which I was accustomed. I knew that my enjoyment would not be disturbed by vicarious worry about his wilted collar and his bedewed brow.

After preluding a few bars, the pianist turned to the audience and announced his first number—a work by a composer of whom I had never heard. When he had finished, there was no applause. The faces of the auditors expressed appreciation and delight, and I noticed that some whispered comments were exchanged here and there, but the clatter of percussive palms was absent. The spell of the music remained unbroken by any noisy demonstrations throughout the recital. It was the first time that I had been allowed to enjoy music in public without rude shatterings of my reveries, and I knew that I was dreaming.

As we arose to depart, I besought my neighbor for an explanation of a procedure so novel to me, an anachronistic being from the year 1934. Though seemingly doubting my sincerity or my sanity, he was patient enough to tell me all that I wished to know.

Now the Explanation.

"The practice of advertising individual artists was abandoned long ago," he said. "It is music that we are interested in, and not the performers. Of course, we recognize and appreciate the individual variations in interpretation, but we subordinate the personal element to the musical values. We take it for granted that any artist who ventures to perform in public has an adequate technique and an endowment of brains and temperament. We no longer waste time in disputes over the relative merits of executants. One of the results has been the disappearance of professional jealousy among musicians and their concentrated devotion to their art; another is that musical criticism is now confined, as it should be, to a discussion of music and not to the manner of its performance.

"When a concert is to be given, the principal work on the program is announced, and that is all. Aside from this one composition, the artist does not bind himself to a set schedule, but plays whatever his mood dictates. This permits complete freedom of emotional choice and removes the sense of restriction. No artist should be obliged to play Bach when he feels like playing Beethoven, and how can he tell weeks in advance how he is going to feel at a given hour?

"You say that you are surprised at the pianist's costume. What I can not understand is the reason why performers allowed themselves for so long a time to be hampered and pinioned by conventional evening dress. The amount of energy that a pianist expends is equivalent in foot-pounds to hard physical labor, and he should be comfortably clothed for the task. I am appalled when I think of the hours of distress that have been imposed upon performers in the past by a foolish formality.

Applause? That's Crude.

"As for applause—why, that crude method of showing appreciation is only a tradition for us—something that we know once existed as a curious nervous excitement which we have outgrown. The musicians were the first to protest against it, because it disturbed their poise more than it pleased their vanity. Any musician who is sensitive enough to be a creative interpreter is able to feel the emotional response of the audience. He does not need to be deafened by an uproar to know that he has succeeded in conveying his ideas and sentiments. Besides, it is a distinct shock, both for the performer and the listener, to be recalled from spiritual exaltation by a racket.

"Since you are going to wake up presently, I hope that you will not repeat what I am about to tell you. I have heard that the change from noise to quiet in the concert hall was strongly objected to by certain egotistic musicians like——"

Confidences, even those of the future, should be respected.

Vienna Boys' Choir Booked for Capital

Famous Group to Return in Coming January.

When the Wiener Saengerknaben (Vienna Boys' Choir) visits the United States next season for a concert tour, which will bring them to Washington in January as one of the attractions in Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey's first Sunday series in Constitution Hall, they will be augmented to 24 members. Moreover, they will have with them their distinguished director, Dr. Georg Gruber, who was unable to leave Vienna for the recent round of concerts in Europe and America.

Since returning to Austria last March the boys have been singing regularly in the former Imperial Chapel of the Hapsburgs. The important part which they play in the Holy Week observances each year requires their presence in Vienna at that time, and their tours always must be completed before Easter.

The choir boys have already departed from Vienna for their summer home in the Austrian Tyrol, where they will remain until September. They will take part in the Salzburg Festival, giving a concert in the Mozarteum on September 5, and will soon thereafter start on their long concert tour. During their sojourn in the mountains they will prepare a new opera and a number of new choral works for their season's programs.

The American tour, which will take them to the Pacific Coast, already is booked for some 90 concerts. So great was their popularity last season that the original booking of 80 concerts was increased to more than 100 before they left this country.

A performance of Balfe's tuneful opera, "The Bohemian Girl," will constitute the third summer festival entertainment at the Sylvan Theater next Wednesday night, under the auspices of the Community Center Department and the National Capital Parks Office.

The production will be in charge of Estelle Wentworth, who will direct her opera group in this musical drama, which has been a favorite stage work in many countries ever since its first performance in Drury Lane Theater, London, in 1843.

The principal roles will be sung by Alma Harris, Mildred Sherman, Ira P. Meyer, J. Raymond Baine, Harry Yeide, Eugene Stevens and Melville Veitch. The familiar choruses will be sung by more than 30 Washington vocalists who are members of the organization. Convention Here Emphasizes Club Women's Achievements in Educational Fields

D. A. R. President Will Speak At Session Opening June 30

Federation Among Pioneers in Field; Call to Denver Meeting Stresses Need of Training Nation's Daughters as Well as Sons.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

The acceptance of the educational element in all "forward-looking" activities of women will direct many women leaders to the seventy-second annual convention of the National Educational Association at the Washington Auditorium June 30 to July 6.

The broadened scope of the association is reflected in the presence on the program of many speakers of widely diverging ideas. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Russell William Magna, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and representatives of other women's organizations.

The Daughters of the American Revolution were among the first to recognize the importance of educational campaigns to instill in the minds of their members and the people of the United States the objects and ideals which inspired the organization of women descendants of Revolutionary patriots. The D. A. R. first sounded the note of patriotic education and they have carried on this project very effectively in every city and State in this country and throughout the world.

Aided Mountain Children.

The D. A. R. first recognized the need of the boys and girls of the Southern mountains and established classes and mountain schools which have become models for every organization undertaking this kind of work.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs also has contributed valuable assistance to the educational progress of this country. It was at the request of the U. S. Department of Education that a survey was conducted by the General Federation of the illiteracy population of the United States. The volunteer workers of the Federation not only found and listed the men and women who could not be listed as literate but also made careful tabulations of the circumstances contributing to their illiteracy.

An important topic of discussion in at least one of the sessions of the N. E. A. will be the educational opportunities being afforded unemployed women at the camps being established in key places of the country under the auspices of the Federal Emergency Relief. Mrs. Roosevelt is taking an active interest in these camps. Since only a limited number of the 2,000,000 women out of work in this country can be given the privileges of these camps, their selection is being based on their desire and adaptability to the educational and vocational advantages furnished.

Federation Meets in July.

Education and educational projects and opportunities also will be an outstanding theme of discussion at the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs at Colorado Springs, Colo., July 16-18.

The National Capital's delegates to all business and professional women's meeting is an evidence of the interest the women of this class here take in the welfare and standards to be maintained by women of their own groups. Washington's business and professional women have written their names high on the record of accomplishment in national and civic service.

The call to the meeting at Colorado Springs has been issued by Mrs. Geline MacDonald Bowman, National president. Mrs. Bowman is identified with the work of the Washington Business and Professional Women through her frequent visits here. In this call, Mrs. Bowman stresses the necessity of preparing daughters as well as sons to earn their own living.

"Everything happening in the rapidly changing economic and social order in our country today vitally affects the lives and future of business women," the call points out.

12 Million on Jobs.

"Women's active participation in the economic life of the country is probably her most dramatic development. Twelve million women in America today help earn the bread and butter for the Nation, an increase of 50 per cent in the last 10 or 12 years in spite of the economic situation. The concern of this organization is not only that women today shall have an equal opportunity and reward for the development of whatever capacities they may possess, but that all future generations of girls shall have an equal chance in life with their brothers. It is economically unsound to throttle enterprise and talent, because of the accident of sex. Practically every family today needs to prepare its daughters as well as its sons to earn their living."

Janet Montgomery Chapter.

The monthly meeting of the Janet Montgomery Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, was held Tuesday, June 19, at the home of Mrs. Lilly C. Stone, River road, the regent, Mrs. Harry K. Corrick, presiding.

Mrs. Hewitt Griggs Robertson, former regent, was presented with the former regent's pin with words of appreciation for her work in the chapter during the past year, by the regent. The regent reported the presentation of two Good Citizenship medals to students of the Rockville Junior High School, and two to the Bethesda Chevy Chase Junior High School, for outstanding citizenship. The chapter voted to present two medals to the schools next year. The chapter history was read by Mrs. Edgar W. Moore, in the absence of the historian, Mrs. J. Henry Brown.

Mrs. Lilly C. Stone, accepted the chairmanship of the committee, Sons and Daughters of the U. S. A., and will organize a club at once.

National Balloon Race of 1934 Will Start From Birmingham, Ala., July 28, at Nightfall

Three Winners to Constitute U. S. Team in Bennett Contest

Powerful Searchlights Will Illuminate Big Field for Take-off; Event to Climax Aero Club's Midsummer Celebration.

Birmingham, Ala., will be the scene of the National balloon race of 1934, it was announced here last week by officials of the National Aeronautic Association.

The race is scheduled to start Saturday, July 28. The winners of first, second and third places will constitute the American team which will compete in the Gordon Bennett International race, to start from Warsaw, Poland, September 20.

What is declared to be a decided innovation has been included in the event this year, in that the start of the contest will take place after dark, with the first contestant leaving the field at 9:30 p. m. The others will follow at intervals of five minutes.

Powerful searchlights will be employed to follow the balloons as they depart and similar high powered lights will be used to illuminate the field during the inflation period. The event will be held at Legion Field, the Birmingham Municipal Stadium.

The race is being sponsored by the Birmingham Post in conjunction with a number of civic organizations. The proceeds will go to the Crippled Children's Clinic. The start of the race will climax the annual mid-summer celebration of the Birmingham Aero Club. Efforts are being made to bring Army and Navy stunt flying teams to Birmingham for the race.

Entry blanks have been sent to prominent balloonists throughout the United States. This will be the fourth event of this character at Birmingham, the previous ones being the National Balloon Races of 1920 and 1921 and the Gordon Bennett Race of 1920.

Under normal conditions the course of the balloons will be northeast. In the past the gas bags have been seen over Columbus, Dayton, Akron, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Buffalo and cities in Canada. The winner of the 1920 International Race landed at the north end of Lake Champlain.

Reserves Wait Delayed Active Duty Orders

Treasury Fails to Issue Funds in Time for Early Notice.

Several hundred District Reserve officers assigned to regiments and other activities of the Organized Reserve of the Third Corps Area are anxiously awaiting orders for active duty training, scheduled to take place next month.

In addition there are approximately 200 C. M. T. C. trainees in the District of Columbia and immediate vicinity awaiting instructions for the July encampment. The officers particularly affected by the delay of orders are those assigned to units of the 428th and 429th Infantry regiments scheduled for 14 days of training beginning July 1. Other units designated for training in July are the 364th Medical Regiment, beginning July 8, Quartermasters, Chemical Warfare and Ordnance Groups, and the 913th Antiaircraft Coast Artillery regiment July 22.

It is the policy of the Third Corps Area to issue orders 30 days in advance of the opening of camp. It was learned last week that funds for Reserve training have not been released to the War Department by the Treasury, and that until the money is made available to the Corps Area, orders will not be issued. It is contemplated that if the Corps Area portion of the War Department training allotment is not received in time to issue orders, postponement of the training period for the first two regiments will be necessary.

C. M. T. Camps.

Citizens Military Training Camps will open July 8 for 30 days. Washington trainees will be sent to Fort Myer and Fort Monroe, Va., and Fort Washington, Fort George G. Meade and Fort Hoyle, Md. The War Department appropriation bill, recently passed by Congress, provides funds for the training of 1,650 C. M. T. C. applicants in the Third Corps Area.

Disappointment is in store for many of the young men of Washington who have been accepted for training but will not be ordered because of reduced funds. These candidates will be reconsidered if vacancies occur prior to the opening of camp due to withdrawal of applicants now accepted and slated to go.

As the War Department is desirous of ascertaining the number of officers affected by this legal prohibition, instructions have been issued to corps area commanders as to the number of officers of the Organized Reserve under their assignment jurisdiction who come under this restriction. The War Department has stated that in the event this prohibition becomes the permanent policy of Congress, officers affected would cease to receive practical military training and that it would be expected, in most cases, that they would cease to take any active interest in the units to which they may be assigned.

Civilian Conservation Camps.

The assignment of Capt. Harry Henry, of the Thirty-fourth Infantry, Fort Meade, Md., as subdistrict supervisor of the Civilian Conservation Corps, with headquarters in the Munitions Building, has been announced. Capt. Henry replaces Capt. Thomas E. May, who has been detailed by the War Department as instructor for the Oregon National Guard.

Officers who have been ordered to active duty with the Civilian Conservation Corps for six months are First Lieuts. Joseph Anthony Ronan, Medical Corps, of Alexandria, Va.; Howard Katzman, of 1600 Sixteenth street northwest, and Joseph B. Stanley, Air Corps, of 1712 New Hampshire avenue northwest. Lieut. Col. Ralph C. Bishop, Field Artillery, of 3701 S street northwest, is ordered to active duty for 14 days at Fort Hoyle, Md.

Reappoinments.

The following reappointments in the Officers Reserve Corps were made last week by the War Department: Lieut. Col. John J. Butler, of Alexandria, Va., specialist; Maj. Willis R. Lansford, of Bethesda, Md., Signal Corps; Capt. Joseph A. Llompart, of 119 Rittenhouse street northwest, Ordnance Department; Capt. Richard S. Paulett, of 3830 Harrison street northwest, specialist; First Lieut. Arthur Current of the Chastleton Hotel, Quartermaster Corps; First Lieut. Alexander L. Craighill, of 3064 Q street northwest, Field Artillery; First Lieut. Ernest R. Welch, of 1262 Columbia road northwest, Infantry; Second Lieut. Lloyd B. Kidwell, of Lyon Park, Va., Coast Artillery Corps; second Lieut. James M. Henderson, of 2519 Twelfth street northwest, Finance Department, and Edgar E. Hon, of 314 East Capitol street, Auxiliary Reserves.

Conner Ends Four Decades In U. S. Army

Chief of First Corps Area Is Praised Highly by Pershing.

Forty years ago a young Mississippian in his teens, born and reared in Slate Springs in Calhoun County, reported at the United States Military Academy on the Hudson for admission as a cadet.

This young Mississippian of the early '90s, then Cadet Fox Conner, now Maj. Gen. Fox Conner, has just completed four decades of service in the Army. He is commanding general of the First Corps Area with headquarters in Boston, a post he has held since 1930.

During the World War Gen. Conner was in charge of the operations section at Gen. Pershing's headquarters. On the anniversary of the completion of 40 years of active service, the war-time commander in chief issued a statement concerning Gen. Conner.

Praised by Pershing.

Gen. Pershing said: "I consider him one of the outstanding officers of the World War, and I speak from an intimate knowledge of his services in France. As chief of operations of the American Expeditionary Forces he brought to this important task a keen mind, sound judgment, devotion to duty and rare professional ability which contributed in no small measure to the success of American arms.

"While a cadet at West Point Gen. Conner gave promise of a briilliant future, and displayed the same qualities of leadership that have marked his long and distinguished career. He is one of the ablest men in our Army today and a credit to the Military Academy and his profession."

Received Shell Wound.

During the visit of the French Mission to the United States in 1917 Gen. Conner served as liaison officer to Gen. Joffre. He was one of the first American officers to reach France, arriving June 13, 1917. In October of that year he was appointed assistant chief of staff in charge of the operations sections of the general staff.

Always a believer that the commanding generals should be close to the scene of action, Gen. Conner was wounded by fragments of a bursting shell at Seicheprey, France.

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal. He also has been decorated by France, Great Britain, Belgium and Italy.

He served in Cuba with the Army of Occupation in 1899 and commanded the Hawaiian Department at one time. Recently he has devoted a considerable portion of his time to the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Masons Played Major Role in Colonies — District Philatelists Argue First-Day Sales

Historic Gunston Hall Was Ancestral Home of Noted Line

Founder Represented Landed Gentry in a Vicinity Famed for Its Contribution of Men Who Led Fight for Independence.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

Neighbor to the distinguished Colonial worthies who lived in Georgetown, and what is now the City of Washington, was George Mason, of Gunston Hall. Because he gained wide fame as the author of the Bill of Rights by no means detracts from his placid life as a citizen of the Old Dominion in the days before the American Revolution.

George Mason represented the landed gentry of this immediate vicinity. In this historic countryside, called the Athens of Virginia, these country gentlemen who became Colonial celebrities lived a delightful life of mingled sport and cultural pursuits. Their hunters and their stables were the pride of their hearts, but so were their substantial libraries, their stately portraits of Sully, Peale, Stuart and other artists of the time and their heritage of gentle birth.

Out of such soil came the early rulers of this country. Some one has remarked on the great men who sprang up in the restricted area of northern Virginia, say within a hundred miles or so of Washington. Westmoreland County, Fairfax and Alexandria all contributed their quota. Many present-day residents of the District of Columbia and nearby Virginia and Maryland cherish the fact of their direct or collateral descent from these men and women.

That is what makes genealogical pursuits in Washington of such a fascinating nature. Treasure trove upturned in this field means not only the linking together of lost lines of individual families, but new facts about historic personages as well. This unwritten history is of vast value in preserving the record of these days in our National life which are no more.

Out of the quiet of George Mason's study at Gunston Hall came the Bill of Rights which preceded the Declaration of Independence; the constitution of the State of Virginia, and the almost equally famous Fairfax Resolves—all signal guns of American freedom. George Mason has been called "a statesman of the closet" and the term is not amiss. Every great movement needs the thinker and the scholar, as well as the doers.

The roots of George Mason's family tree reached back to Staffordshire, in old England. His colonial ancestors held official positions in the civil and military service of Virginia. Born in 1725, in Fairfax County, Va., he grew up in the fateful years which preceded the American Revolution, when the advance thoughts of freedom from the Mother Country began to stir in the minds of his countrymen.

Helped Found Alexandria.

George Mason was one of the founders of Alexandria in 1749 and he played a leading part, too, in the organization of the Ohio Company.

Something of the notable history of Gunston Hall, the ancestral home of the Masons, is epitomized in a paragraph once written by Charles Moorse, chairman of the National Commission of Fine Arts. He declared: "If Gunston walls had tongues as well as ears, what conversations around open fires they might report: Washington and Mason discussing the Fairfax Resolves that threw down the gauntlet of independence; Patrick Henry getting from the cool and philosophical Mason the fuel for the fires of his eloquence; Richard Henry and Arthur Lee talking of the French Alliance; Rochambeau and Lafayette journeying north after the victory at Yorktown; Jefferson and Madison coming straight from Mount Vernon to get Mason's views as to the location of the Nation's capital. These early exchanges of opinion were paralleled during the World War by the long discussions between Arthur J. Balfour and Secretary Lansing which took place under Gunston trees."

In 1792 George Mason died and the Gunston Hall estate passed to his eldest son, George Mason, of Lexington; thence to the third George Mason. The three by that name sleep tranquilly now in the graveyard adjacent to Gunston Hall, and the Bill of Rights dreamed by the first George Mason of Gunston Hall, now has become an actuality.

Through the generations the Masons of Gunston Hall have served their country well. Gunston Hall has now passed out of the hands of the family, but the Mason tradition is continued by its present owner, and the historic home has been restored to much its original stateliness.

Family Trees

William Alexander Rind.

My attention has recently been drawn to the genealogical article in The Post, April 29, relating to the Rind family. As the gentleman mentioned was my great-grandfather I was naturally very much interested.

Before bringing the line down to the present, as I knew it, I would like to go back to Great-Great-Grandfather Rind and the wife, who had the brains and the courage to carry on the paper after his death. She was born Clementine Grierson, of Dumfries, Scotland. "The Laird of Lag" of the "Border Tales" was probably her grandfather, perhaps her father. Her name has been perpetuated to the present generation.

I have heard that William Alexander Rind had eight or nine children. The only two I am certain of was my grandfather, Samuel Seabrooke, and his sister, Charlotte, who remained unmarried and always lived with him.

Samuel Seabrooke, son of William Alexander, married Maria Kankey, of Prince William County, Va. They had nine children, six boys and three girls. I have been told he published the Washington Intelligencer, then became chief clerk of the Treasury, which position he held till the Civil War, when he resigned to accept the same position with the Confederacy. It was in this move to Richmond from Georgetown and the attendant vicissitudes of war that much of the family furniture and portraits were lost, including two large oil paintings of the first William Alexander and wife.

To return to the nine children of this couple, Samuel and Maria, they were:

William Alexander, unmarried.

James Montgomery, unmarried.

Zebulen Kankey, went in the Confederate navy and was lost at sea.

Samuel Seabrooke, married Miss Virginia Brooke, seven children, large number of descendants living in Martinsburg, W. Va.

Charles Grierson, married twice, first to a cousin, Miss Kankey, of Virginia, by whom there were four children; Robert Grierson, deceased, married Miss Stonnel, two children; Charles Grierson and Annetta. Annie, married R. L. Giss, two children; Virginia and Richard Grierson, Araminta and Daisy, both unmarried. All living in District of Columbia. Second marriage to Miss Berger, one child, Mary Howard, myself.

Robert Grierson, married Miss Lida Conrad, one son, Robert, whereabouts unknown.

Rebecca Elizabeth, married Thomas Mullikin, three children, Brooke, Daisy, and Rebecca.

Virginia Montgomery, married Dr. Julius Conrad, two children, Clementine and Elsie, living in St. Louis.

Clementine, died unmarried at about 18.

I neglected to state in the proper place that I married Robert Balderston Ellershaw and have three daughters, Eugenie Kirkpatrick, Mary Grierson and Robin Balderston.

In closing I would like to say that these two editor grandfathers are the ones I have always intensely admired and longed to know more of. I feel sure there must be much of great interest historically connected with their writings and in their correspondence if it could only be ferreted out.

MRS. R. B. ELLERSHAW, Jr.,

Elbridge Gerry.

Elbridge Gerry married Ann Thompson (1763-1849), a New Yorker whom he met while a member of the Continental Congress. Three sons and six daughters survived him: Catherine, who married Hon. James T. Austin; Eliza, who married Maj. David Townsend; Ann; Elbridge; Thomas Russell (1794-1845), who married Hannah Goelet; Helen Maria; James Thompson; Eleanor Stanford; and Emily Louise, who died in New Haven, December 28, 1894, and was the last surviving daughter of a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Thomas Stone of Maryland.

Thomas Stone (1743-1787), was one of many men of the times, whose "heart wishes for peace upon terms of security and justice to America," but felt that "war, anything, is preferable to a surrender of our rights." From his election in 1775 until his last term in 1783, when he witnessed the resignation by Gen. Washington of his commission to Congress, he worked long and faithfully in committees, especially that for framing articles of confederation. He married about 1764, Margaret, daughter of Dr. Gustavus Brown, of Charles County, Md., and, with her dower, built a house at Havre de Venture, two miles from Port Tobacco, which was still standing in 1891. Margaret was inoculated for smallpox in 1787, but died from the effects of unskillful treatment. This so distressed her husband that a trip to Europe was prescribed; but he died at Alexandria, Va., in October, 1787, as he was about to embark. Three children survived him: Frederick, who graduated at the "College of New Jersey," and was in Philadelphia, studying law, when he died, unmarried, in 1793, of yellow fever; Mildred, who married Travers Daniel, and had five children, and Margaret Eleanor, who married John Moncure Daniel, and had seven children.

Tucker.

The Tuckers claim descent from Teucer, first King of Troy, whom the Trojans called Teukroy (Tuckers).

One of the same name was the best archer among the Greeks, supposed to be the brother of Ajax.

The most skillful gem engraver the world has ever known was a Teucer (Tucker), who lived in Rome in the time of Augustus.

John Tucker, first of the name in England, was at the Battle of Hastings, October 14, 1066, under William the Conqueror and was granted by him the coat of arms in 1079 and also the estate of Tavistock, County Devon.

A direct descendant, Wilhelmus Tucker, married Josea Ashe, and their son, George, married Maria, daughter of John Hunter of Gaunt. Queen Elizabeth conveyed the manor at Milton-next-Gravesend to this George Tucker in 1572. The Tuckers also went into Wales, where they held, for over 400 years, the Sedlyham property and used the same coat-of-arms.

George, John and Robert Tucker, grandsons of the George previously mentioned, left England in 1636 and went to Bermuda, where a relative of theirs, Capt. Daniel Tucker, had been commissioned governor February 15, 1615. George, being heir to his father's estate of Tavistock, County Devon, returned to England after the troubles there had been settled. John and Robert came to Massachusetts, Robert settling in Weymouth and John in Hingham. John's son, Jabez, settled in Westerly, R. I.

Frances Dandridge Lear.

There is a tradition that Frances Dandridge Lear, wife of Tobias Lear, secretary to George Washington, was a greatniece of Martha Washington. I would like to know her exact relationship to Martha Washington and if any of Tobias Lear's and Frances Dandridge Lear's direct descendants are alive today. MRS. E. D. C.

Lawrence Sanford.

In reply to K. S. C. in The Washington Post of May 27, 1934, I wish to say that Lawrence Sanford married Catherine Porter. Their daughter Sarah married Capt. Ebenezer Eveleth and died in 1862.

Lawrence Sanford was a member of the Lodge of Washington in 1804 and his brothers Robert and William Sanford in 1790 and 1804 respectively. William Sanford died in 1813.

Thomas Sanford, son of Catherine Porter and Lawrence Sanford, was born in Alexandria May 2, 1780. He married Esther Leavens at Marietta, Ohio, November 27, 1803. He was one of a committee appointed to make arrangements for the proper reception of Gen. Lafayette, and was present at the Grand Masonic banquet given in his honor at Clagett's Hotel, February 21, 1825. Thomas Sanford had nine children. He served as worshipful master of the lodge from December 27, 1812, to December 27, 1813. He was the ninth master.

I have obtained this information from an old Masonic book. Thomas Sanford was my great-great-grandfather.

Certain members of the Israel family advise me that the wife of Robert Israel, "who died in Anne Arundel County, Md., in 1795," was Priscilla Baker.

Their nine children were Mary, Sarah, John, Ruth, Elizabeth, Bazil (Basel), Beall, Amelia and Robert.

If interested further in the dates of their births and who they married, will be glad to furnish the information by phone any evening.

Can you tell me the name of the woman Toby Leeck, who came from England and settled in Philadelphia in 1682, married? This was the same Toby Leeck who became a member of the Provincial Assembly. Her grandson, Thomas Leeck, married Mrs. Hannah Tyson in 1774. Among the Leecks serving in the American Revolution were Andrew, Archibald. George, Henry, Isaac, Jacob, James, John, Joseph, Nicholas, Samuel, Thomas and William Leeck. Any information regarding the wife of Toby Leeck will be greatly appreciated.

Micajah Clark.

Can any one give me the parentage of Micajah Clark, of Powhatan County, Va., who served three years as corporal in Capt. Samuel Woodson's company, 9th Virginia Regiment, in the American Revolution? He died in Amherst County, Va., and his wife was Keziah Harris. This information is needed to complete an ancestral line.

46 Commissioned By Medical Corps

All But Four to Receive Assignments July 1

Forty-six young doctors will be commissioned to fill vacancies in the Medical Corps, it was announced last week at the War Department.

The men completed premedical training and then took medical degrees at various universities throughout the country. Forty-two of them will be commissioned July 1, while the others will receive their commissions as soon as vacancies exist.

Nelson T. Murray, of 700 Chaney terrace, Takoma Park, Md., and James L. Snyder, of 3320 Sixteenth street northwest, are included in the group.

Woman Appointed Aviation Physician

Los Angeles Doctor Will Test Aviatrices.

Dr. Emma McNair Kittredge, of Los Angeles, through her appointment as an aeronautics branch medical examiner, announced this week by Eugene L. Vidal, director of the branch for commerce, becomes the only woman physician in the United States so authorized.

She will conduct the entire physical examination for the department pilot licenses and renewals, while the only other woman physician medical examiner, Dr. L. Rosa Gantt, of Spartanburg, S. C., conducts the eye, ear, nose and throat part of the tests.

Holding appointments since organization of the aeronautics branch nearly eight years ago, Dr. Kittredge will examine woman pilots only and will work closely with Dr. R. E. Whitehead, chief of the medical section in Washington, on problems pertaining to women pilots.

Dr. Kittredge is flight surgeon for the Woman's Air Reserve in Los Angeles. She recently received a student pilot's license and is now taking flight instruction.

Commandery Auxiliary Recesses for Summer

The last meeting of the Ladies Auxiliary, De Molay Commandery No. 4, was held at the home of the president, Mrs. E. F. Gude, Mount Olivet and Bladensburg roads. Vacation time being in order, meetings have been dispensed with.

A picnic was held at the summer cottage of Mr. and Mrs. James Haliday as a surprise to Mr. Haliday on his ninety-first birthday.

Air Post Issue Of Greece Has Great Beauty

Unwatermarked Group in Seven Values; New Stamp for Peru.

Many countries of the world issue handsome postage stamps. From time to time these columns will record the history of some of these issues and illustrate the various stamps.

The recent issue by Greece of the air post stamps for the Italy, Greece, Turkey, Rhodes service is exceptionally beautiful and comprises seven values. This issue, with values and designs, follows: 50L, green and orange, airplane propellor and head of aviator; 1d, blue and brown, the temple of Neptune at Corinth; 3d, dark violet, airplane over Hermoupolis; 5d, brown orange and dark blue, allegory of flight; 10d, deep red and black, map of the route; 20d, black and green, head of Hermes and airplane; 50d, dark brown and deep blue, allegory of flight. The stamps are unwatermarked and perforated 12.

Peru issues two new air-mail stamps of the same general design—2s, bright blue, and 5s, dark brown—showing an airplane in flight over land and sea. The stamps were engraved and printed by Waterlow & Sons, Ltd., London.

Norway has issued a 35-ore, mauve, to its current series and design.

Portugal honors the eighth anniversary of the dictatorship of Gen. Carmona by issuing a 40c, violet commemorative, with a portrait of the general in full uniform. A change in color of the 25c, "Lusiad" type, from blue to light green, is announced.

Stamp Issue Debated By Philatelic Society

The Washington Philatelic Society met Wednesday evening at Hotel Carlton, Vice President Bond presiding. J. W. Fawcett, by request, repeated a part of an address made at the Collectors Club. Then an informal discussion of the first-day sale question was held. From the views expressed it was indicated that Washington would not lose its identity as a philatelic center.

On motion of Dr. Haworth the board of directors was instructed to present the views of the society to the Federation of Stamp Clubs.

The club will meet Wednesday at the Carlton but the meeting scheduled for Wednesday, July 4, will be omitted.

Philatelic Notes

At the meeting of the Washington Stamp Club of the Air Tuesday President Kunze talked on first-day matters and this week on Tuesday at 8:15 p. m. he will discuss the Newburg stamp.

Rear Admiral Byrd Chapter, U. S. C. S., met last night at the home of its skipper, J. B. Merritt, 111 C street southeast. The chapter will sponsor a cachet July 4 on the U. S. S. Ranger.

San Marino issues two values of the 1932 postoffice series surcharged in black with a new value: 3.70L on 1.25L dark blue and 3.70L on 2.75L dark violet. Four values of this issue have also been surcharged with new values and inscribed "12-27 Apeile 1934" and "Mostra Filatelica" for the Philatelic Exposition at the Milan Fair: 25c on 1.25L dark blue, 50c on 1.75L dark brown, 75c on 50c dark red, and 1.25L on 20c blue green.

The Postoffice Department has announced another new stamp. A three-cent commemorative of the 300th anniversary of the founding of State of Wisconsin by Jean Nicolet, an explorer who landed in 1634 near the present city of Green Bay, will be issued but to date no facts regarding size, color, design and date of first-day sale have been announced.

2 Cachets Tell Story Of New Postal Edifice

J. H. Jenkins has a cachet which might be called a "three-in-one" cachet issued on September 26, 1932, at the laying of the cornerstone of the new Postoffice Department Building by President Hoover on the 143d anniversary of the establishment of the United States Postoffice by President Washington. It was also a first-day cancellation for the "Benjamin Franklin Station" in the old Postoffice Department building. And it was the first-day sale in Washington of the 8-cent air-mail stamp. The cancellation "Washington, D. C., Sept. 26, 5 p m. 1932, Benjamin Franklin Station" is excellent.

This cachet together with the one issued on Monday at the dedication of the new building make a unique pair of historical cachets.

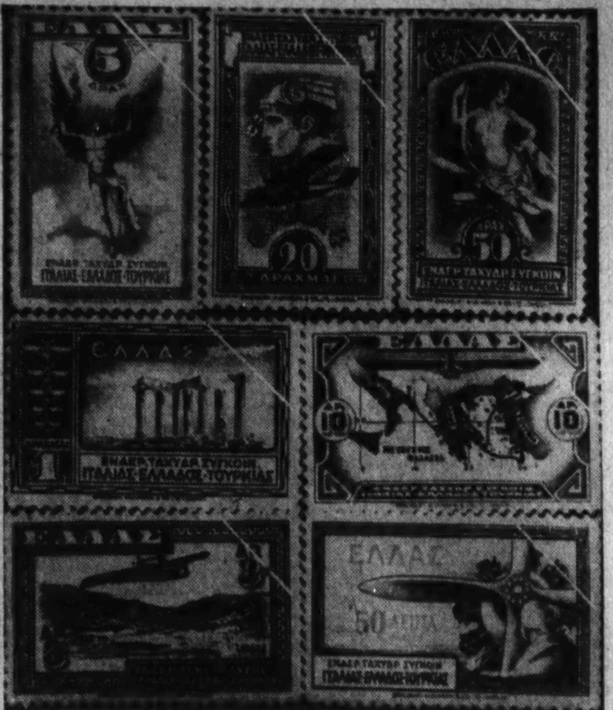
Rare Bermuda Stamp Sold in London for $825

The 1849 1-penny, black, Bermuda stamp in the collection of the late Arthur Hind was sold in London for $825. This stamp is listed by Scott at $1,750.

This rare stamp was a circular die stamped on the envelope. In the upper half of the circle the word "Hamilton" appears and "Bermuda" in the lower. The year was stamped in the center. The signature of the Hamilton postmaster, W. B. Perot, had to be written in to be valid.

Regular adhesive stamps were not used in the islands until 1856, when a stamp with the profile of Queen Victoria was issued. The Hind collection also contained a Bermuda 1 penny, red, of 1854, as well as the rare 1-penny black.

A Handsome Set of Grecian Stamps



This beautiful set of air mail stamps has been received by Harry B. Mason from Greece. The stamps are used in the air service between Greece, Italy, Turkey and Rhodes.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

The price of United States stamps as well as foreign issues is steadily increasing. In the past few months there has been a marked advance in all issues and Washington dealers say that by fall the increase will be from 35 to 50 per cent over quotations of today. The catalogues for 1935 are all to quote price increases and even now the collector is paying a few cents more apiece for almost any stamp he purchases Of course there are stamps to be purchased at a good rate when the collector bargains for the issues most needed, but as a general proposition the advance is well under way.

A perusal of the advertisements of many of the leading stamp dealers of the country, as well as many foreign houses, show marked advances in many issues. The "buy now" sign is out on almost every page of advertisements in the philatelic press as well as in the daily papers. Foreign exchange is of course an excuse for many advances and for some time some of the largest houses have been selling foreign issues at 25 per cent advance. When the Philatelic Agency removes a United States stamp from its list it is the signal for an advance in price and so it is that the advance is on in all quarters.

It is even noted that in many of the auction sales held of late, some unusually high prices have been reported. At auction market sales some real bargains are obtained, yet on the other hand high prices often result when an especially fine copy of a stamp is desired by several collectors. A check on the catalogues at a number of recent auctions shows this steady increase.

The National Parks stamps will be placed on first-day sale at the parks as well as at the Philatelic Agency in Washington.

The first stamp on sale of this series will be the one cent denomination, the Yosemite National Park design, the date being July 16. Other issues will follow.

More Cities Given Air Mail Service

Pendleton, Oreg., Dispatches First Plane Loads.

Air mail service has been authorized by the Postoffice Department for the following cities, which have had no prior service:

Sheridan, Wyo.; Casper, Wyo.; Augusta, Me.; Concord, N. H.; Montpelier, Vt.; Burlington, Vt.; Charlottesville, Va.; Lynchburg, Va.; Roanoke, Va.; Bristol, Va.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Lake Charles, La.; Huron, S. Dak.; Aberdeen, S. Dak.; Charleston, W. Va.; Huntington, W. Va.; Missoula, Mont.; Wenatchee, Wash.; Pendleton, Oreg., and Lakeland, Fla.

Each postmaster has been furnished with a special cachet and the usual treatment of philatelic mail has been authorized.

Yesterday Pendleton, Oreg., dispatched air mail for the first time on route A M-12 between Salt Lake City, Utah, and Portland, Oreg., just inaugurated. Three trips were made as follows: Trip 2 eastbound to Salt Lake City, leaving 8:43 a. m.; trip 5 westbound to Seattle, leaving 3:52 p. m.; and trip 3 eastbound to Spokane, leaving 6 p. m.

Other cities named above will dispatch first mail on later dates, but no advance notice will be given out.

Those interested in air mail covers for cachets should forward them to the postmaster of the city concerned in advance of the opening of the route. It is essential that a letter of authorization to hold for first flight be furnished each postmaster, so that they may be able to discriminate between business and philatellic mail.

Unique Block of 100 Used Stamps Received

A most unusual block is being shown by Charles Kohen. It is a sheet of 100 Nicaragua stamps, used entire on a parcel of registered mail. Seldom is an entire sheet of 100 stamps used on a single piece of mail.

The stamp is the 15 - centavos, brown, 1914-1922 issue, surcharged in violet "Correos 1928." The cancellations are very good, but there are several errors in the surcharge, "1028" and "1128" and also "Correos" appearing several times on the sheet instead of the correct "Correos 1928."

This stamp alone is catalogued at 50 cents unused and 15 cents cancelled, but an entire sheet of 100 places quite a premium on the block.

Collectors Club Stand Challenged by Speaker

The Collectors Club met Tuesday at the Thompson School with a large attendance. F. L. Rice presided. Several applications of membership were received. An auction sale was held.

J. W. Fawcett read an address on first-day sales in Washington and took issue with the club for going on record as favoring first-day sales at the place of commemoration. He asked the club to rescind its action. A. E. Gorham objected and the matter was passed over for another meeting.

Permission has been granted to the club to hold outdoor meetings for the exchange of stamps in the park at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Nineteenth street Saturday afternoons, the first meeting being held yesterday.

The club will meet as usual Tuesday evening at the Thompson school at 8 o'clock.

F. B. Leech Writes On Fake '94 2-Cent

Detailed Information on Counterfeit Given.

Francis B. Leech, president of the Washington Air Mail Society, has an article in "Stamps" entitled "The 1894 Two-Cent Counterfeit." The article shows unusual care in preparation and Mr. Leech spent many hours examining the official records of the Chicago counterfeit, as the stamp is known.

A block of four of this counterfeit stamp is now in the philatelic collection at the National Museum, having been donated by P. M. Wolsieffer, of Philadelphia. The stamps were first advertised for sale in a Chicago paper in March, 1895, "115 worth for $100, and through this lead postoffice and secret service operators captured the counterfeiters, who were convicted and sent to prison. Nearly 70,000 stamps were confiscated.

These two-cent stamps, carmine, were printed on a thin coarse woven paper from copper electrotype plates in panes 5x5, 5x3 and in strips of five. They measured 19½x22½ mm., perforated 12, and nearly perfect rose-carmine color. Even the gum was smooth, evenly spread and light yellow.

Postage Stamp Stories Are Told in New Book

"The Great Cat of the Jungle," "The Prison Island," "The Spark That Set the World Afire," "General Gallieni," "The White Man's Grave" and "The Founding of Libreville" are all correct titles of stamps. In "Adventures With Postage Stamps," as prepared by H. E. Harris, of Boston, each of these captions tells the story of a stamp, the illustration being the stamp itself.

The beginner in philately is greatly aided by a knowledge of the history of each postage stamp, as it tells of some historical incident of its country. The reader who can tell something about "The Great Cat of the Jungle," as well as "General Gallieni" can locate the stories in his stamp collection.

Study of U. S. Stamps Is Purpose of Society

The Bureau Issues Association is a philatelic society with a mission. It is composed of a group of outstanding students who have organized for the systematic and intensive study of the United States stamps made by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Its officers and commitee chairmen hold their positions through research and study. The society publishes articles on features of stamp manufacture and development, color analysis and research, varieties, guide lines, methods of production, plate markings, &c. Its committees report on booklets and booklet panes, precancels, bureau revenues, colonial issues, plate numbers and plate varieties. H. M. Southgate is president and Ara Marcus Daniels, of Washington, is secretary-treasurer.

Fear That City Will Lose Place Is Discounted

Dealers Desire D. C. to Retain Position as Stamp Center.

Washington philatelists have been interested the past week in the question of first-day sales of postage stamps. This matter has been discussed rather heatedly at times at club meetings, as well as in private circles and at the stamp shops.

It seems that the question of Washington being in any danger of losing its place as a first-day city has been overemphasized. This city evidently will continue to hold its own as a philatelic center.

Dealers desire Washington to continue as a first-day city and it will be, of course, yet there can be no question that the first-day sale of stamps in the respective localities commemorated still will be the order of the Postoffice Department.

Library Lends Valuable Help To Philatelists

E. W. Beitzell Builds Up Fine Resources for D. C. Society.

In every well-organized philatelic society the librarian is one of the really important officers. Stamp literature is as essential to the stamp collector as the album itself. The collector, whether a beginner or a specialist of years of experience, needs assistance in many ways. By reading and the perusal of catalogues he acquires knowledge. The daily newspaper, the radio, the public library all recognize that philately is more than a diversion and an occupation of merit. Philately, of course, is the systematic collection of postage stamps and has become a science.

The library of the Washington Philatelic Society is one of the best in the city. E. W. Beitzell, the librarian, devotes much time to the library work and desires to make the library a real source of philatelic reference for all stamp collectors in Washington. Mr. Beitzell says the catalogues, books on stamps and philately, pamphlets and magazines represent more than 20 years of effort on the part of the society to build up its library.

In Mr. Beitzell's care are 110 stamp catalogues covering a period of many years, 20 books on philately and stamp collecting in general, 85 pamphlets and 1,050 philatelic magazines. Current philatelic weekly and monthly publications and catalogues are being added to the library each week. Two large scrap books are available for reference and new books are in process of making at all times. The daily press supplies this material.

Mr. Beitzell has upward of 2,000 index cards that are constantly in use and kept up to date. This material is proving valuable to the members of the society as it is so indexed that the matter sought can be located in the library's collection without delay. More of the members of the society are constantly searching the material for all sorts of philatelic information and the library has proved its worth many times over.

J. S. Bogris, of Salt Lake City, Utah, has a large and valuable stamp collection. "Stamps" has told of its many rare varieties. Washington philatelists are interested in this collection because H. A. Robinette procured for Mr. Bogris two of his rarest stamps, the 2-pence violet and dull violet, and the 4-pence black and gray-green of British Central Africa. Both of these stamps are of multiple watermark. Each is catalogued at $1,250.

Wisconsin Tercentenary Stamp Scheduled July 7

The 3-cent Wisconsin tercentenary postage stamp will be placed on first-day sale at Green Bay, a first-class postoffice in Brown County, Wis., Saturday, July 7. Sale in Washington will be on July 9.

The stamp will commemorate the 300th anniversary of the founding of the State of Wisconsin and the early explorations in that region by Jean Nicolet. Details as to size, color and design of the new stamp will be announced later. The theme of the stamp is Deming's painting, "The Landing of Jean Nicolet, at Green Bay, 1634."

To Join Federation.

The Washington Air Mail Society, at its meeting Monday, voted to become a member of the National Federation of Stamp Clubs. E. W. Beitzell presided, in the absence of both President Leech and Vice President Heath.

The society voted to sponsor cachets June 30 and July 1, the dates of the change in air mail rates from 8 to 6 cents.

Rules for Aircraft Repairs Simplified

Vidal Seeks to Reduce Aviation Costs.

New and more direct methods of approving alterations and repairs to licensed aircraft have just been placed into effect by the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce, Eugene L. Vidal, director, announced last week.

Heretofore it has been necessary for manufacturers to submit detailed drawings and technical data to Washington before repairs or changes could be approved and the aircraft returned to service.

A repair agency now will need only to send to the aeronautics branch, for record purposes, information to show that proper repair specifications were followed.

"The new methods," explained Mr. Vidal, "have been adopted to eliminate involved procedure and consequent inconvenience and expense to manufacturers and repair agencies. They are in direct line with our desire to remove, where possible, and without affecting safety, any regulations or policies which may stand in the way of reducing aviation costs, or which may otherwise unnecessarily hamper the industry."

The new methods, worked out by Col. J. Carroll Cone, assistant director of aeronautics in charge of air regulation, and his staff, also provide that specifications that do not affect the primary structure may be approved at the factory by a Department of Commerce inspector.

H. M. S. Cairo Gets British Crew Cup

The Hugh Rodman Cup, competed for annually by rowing crews from the British Fleet, was won this year by H. M. S. Cairo, according to word received at the Navy Department last week from Sir William Henry Dudley Doyle, K. C. B., of the British Home Fleet.

This trophy was presented to Earl Beatty, Admiral of the British Fleet from 1916 to 1919, by Admiral Hugh Rodman, U. S. N., in the name of the officers and men of the Sixth Battle Squadron, which operated with and formed a part of, the Grand Fleet during the World War.

Navy Receives First Destroyer Since 1922

The U. S. S. Farragut, destroyer of 1,500 tons, was accepted from the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation and placed in full commission by the Navy last week.

The commandant of the First Naval District, Rear Admiral H. H. Hough, took over the vessel for the Navy. Commander Elliott Buckmaster, U. S. N., is in command. The first destroyer to be placed in commission since August, 1922, the Farragut was sponsored by Mrs. James Roosevelt.

Where Covered Wagon Blazed a Trail, the

TREK TO GREEN PASTURES

Has Begun Over Again

Brave Thousands the Drought Has Stricken Are Migrating to Fertile Regions

By Kendall Foss.

WHITE dust roads and sere brown fields crumble under a relentless western sun. Plodding farmers, raggedly clad, with dulled eyes puckered against the glare, urge on their suffering cattle. Countless shuffling feet and hooves swirl up low-hanging clouds to make breathing harder and the search for water more frantic.

The dust clouds partially obscure the restless movement beneath.

Since time immemorial peoples and their herds have wandered when water became scarce or conditions otherwise intolerable. As Moses led his people and Attila his Huns, so did the Slavs roll westward across the steppes into Europe, and later, the crowded Europeans to a new land of promise still farther to the west. Water and oppression and stunted opportunity lay behind these vast inchoate hegiras. Necessity drove and those who could not stand the pace fell behind.

Modern Treks Frequent, Too.

A planned migration, carried out before the alternative has so far vanished that only the strongest can win through, is new. Soviet Russia has conducted migrations on a bold scale, moving whole villages, even provinces, to new and more promising locations. The Greeks and the Turks engineered an ambitious exchange of population right after the war and a little later the Zionists set about repopulating Palestine. Now the United States lays plans to the same end.

In the Plains States today they are repeating the age-old trek, going wherever report says a drink and a pasture may be found. In many cases the sorely pressed cattle are not the hardy steers of cowboy fame, well able to stand forced marches. They are dairy cattle—once-fat Guernseys, Holsteins that used to be sleek, Durhams that never trudged farther than from field to barn before. Sore hooves leave bloodstains in the dust to mark the passage of a desperate herder and his means of livelihood.

Ewing Galloway Photos.

Suffering but unbeaten, today the great-great-grandchildren of the pioneers who colonized the Great Plains, are leaving the lands where the ancient caravans rested and moving on to stake some distant claim.

Farther west, beyond the dairy country, the sky is still more brassy and the water holes even lower. In the Dakotas there is not so much migration—yet. But there is an even more hopeless apathy. In the Dakotas there is not much of anywhere to go.

From a broad point of view, these involuntary wanderings are just starting. Left to themselves, it would probably be some time before stricken populations developed a mass movement of historic proportions. But by that time, if the past is a criterion, only the fortunate would live to see the outcome.

Believing a steadily rising tide of flight from certain hopeless lands is inevitable, the Federal Government is laying plans to carry out these transfers in an orderly manner. Relief funds are being pumped into the arid lands of the West through a nozzle of unprecedented dimensions. To combat the ravages of the drought, Congress has authorized the expenditure of $525,000,000 over and above that portion of the $3,700,000,000 already allocated to the hard-hit States. In the Dakotas last week 150,000 former farmers were at work building roads, drilling wells, erecting dams (just in the case water should come,) and setting up low-cost houses. More are expected. Ten million people live in the drought area, and 300,000 families are already on the relief rolls. No one imagines the top has been reached.

Plan Is Under Way.

But relief is not all. Alive to the latent possibilities, the Administration is pushing its long cherished resettlement plan hard. Under the hand of the tireless Harry Hopkins, reliever in chief of the Roosevelt Administration, plans are taking shape to utilize whatever of opportunity the calamity offers.

Submarginal land is the disarming term applied to much of the worst drought area. It is particularly well represented in South Dakota, but it is found here and there throughout the country. Canvassing the Nation's agricultural set-up, the officials intrusted with relief and rehabilitation have located great tracts which can never support the population now engaged in wresting a bare existence from the grudging soil.

No trees shade these landscapes. No homes worthy of the name dot

Love and Art Make a Queer Mixture in the Lives of Great Stars SEE STORY ON PAGES 10 and 11

This Wisconsin family, whose farm the drought has reduced to chalk-like bareness, kneel on the parched earth outside their little home, in prayer, before taking to the long road, in search of more smiling fields.

the exposed plains. Rough board shacks surrounded by rusting implements and an aimlessly rooting pig or two are often all there is to show for years of breaking toil. Wizened and shuffling men and women, old at 35 and 40, have forgotten the hopes they cherished when first they were homesteaders. They challenged the endless sweep of America's central plain, determined to fashion a home and build a civilization where only prairie grass grew before. But the fight to exist never left them time to improve their surroundings, never gave them money to import things which could have changed an existence into a life.

Otherwheres the scene is different. Rocky hillsides with as little top soil left after endless rains as remains when the wind has died down on the Western plains. Ancient little houses that have no reason to know the twentieth century is well begun cling to the slopes. People in such districts had no hopes to lose; they were born to a grim existence, which has made them grim in turn.

Schools are scarce where the land is poor and education stops early. Amusements are few, and then of the kind which do not cost money.

Soil Has Lost Original Fertility.

"Sometimes," said a weather-beaten old lady in the back part of Maine, "I sets and thinks. Then again, sometimes I jes' sets." Why not? Thinking about the things in a restricted little world, unaware of much of anything beyond the hill, soon gets tiresome.

In parts of the West, where the land never was really good and the water supply always a little precarious, a too heavy influx of settlers has exhausted the feeble original fertility. Exasperated officials sometimes assert the land never should have been opened up to unrestricted settlement.

The water table has fallen sharply, making deeper and deeper borings necessary, and the resulting aridity has let the wind blast away the thin layer of useful top soil. In southern South Dakota the outlook is hopeless; it is little better in other large sections of the West.

Yet people cling to their homes, however bleak the prospects. Government planned migrations evoke a tenacious resistance. The little shacks and the burned and windswept acres are familiar; the end of the proposed journey reaches into the new and unfamiliar. Fear of the unknown is aroused.

For months men in the AAA, the Interior Department, and the various Federal Relief Administrations have wondered how to get the ball rolling. The drought is bringing the answer.

In the better sections of South Dakota the Government owns huge tracts, acquired through tax delinquency sales. The farms average 200 acres and are tenanted, for the most part, by the former owners. In the southern and southwestern parts of the State 5,000 families ought to be moved. The bleak outlook warrants the step. And the conditions are so bad that the normal unwillingness to migrate is at a low ebb. It only remains to fit the pieces into the puzzle.

Dividing the 200-acre farms in half, leaving the present tenants 100 acres and placing the newcomers on the remainder, beckons as the answer. Relief money would thus be transformed into rehabilitation investment, spent on homes, wells, farm equipment and seed. It would be paid back some day, at least in part.

What makes this particular project so attractive is the fact that all would remain in commercial farming. Estimators believe 100 acres, where the soil is fair, is enough to give a family a living.

But the plan does not stop there. The vacated land has some use. Prairie grazing land, game preserves, new forests, and, in certain limited areas, recreational facilities can be created where nothing useful exists today. The choice depends upon the area. In each case, some employment can be offered to a population thinned to fit.

Many New Homestead Sites.

Nature decreed the Dakota project should be the first to leave the blueprints. But there are 50 other sites where the Government can start new homesteading and at least that many areas where there is no further use in battling with a stern climate. Details and locations are closely guarded secrets, for fear land prices will jump if it is known the Federal eye is on some particular morsel. The projects are distributed from Maine to Californa and Minnesota to Texas. They fall into two distinct categories.

One is the retirement from production of outright submarginal land; the other is the so-called rural rehabilitation plan. With $25,000,000 in hand and a further $50,000,000 expected, the officials in charge of the submarginal work are preparing to buy up land unfit for cultivation wherever found. Those whose feeble farms the Government buys can take the proceeds and go where they will or they can migrate to a prepared area where, with Government help, they have a chance to start again. The Government help is to consist of setting up low-cost housing, purchasing necessary equipment, and establishing community centers where wanted.

All these things are to be sold to the homesteaders on long credits at low interest rates. The new farms will be small, between five and ten acres, but they are designed to provide sustenance. A cash income is something else again. Sometimes through handicraft activities in the community centers, sometimes through seasonal employment in nearby mines and factories, sommetimes as Government employes on road building and reclamation projects, the subsistence homesteaders are to have a chance to earn the cash to exchange for clothes, fuel and certai staples they can not raise.

The goal is a balance between the seasonally unemployed worked and the farmer unable to derive a cash crop from his land. The one is helpless during idle months, the other unable to do more than eat. The subsistence homesteaders ought to avoid both pitfalls in the view of sponsors.

As in the Dakota project, the land brought up and retired from farming is to be re-used, not left idle. The reclamation projects undertaken are calculated to provide those who do not migrate in the thinning out of population with a source of cash. Two-birds, one-stone stuff.

Shacks Recall Slums of Cities.

Concurrently rural rehabilitation goes forward in areas where towns do not exceed 5,000. Rural slums, in Maine, in the Kentucky mountains, in southern Illinois and elsewhere throughout a Nation which is inclined to think of itself as uniformly developed, arouse the passion for improvement inherent in the planners. The tumbled-down shacks with leaky roofs and no thought of even the most elementary plumbing cry out every bit as piteously as the squalid overcrowded parts of big cities. For God's green grass and free air is not enough to support decent life.

Rural rehabilitation envisages either the setting up of local industries capable of employing the neighborhood seasonally or moving the stranded ones to new locations where such industries already exist. Business of Mahomet going to the mountain when the mountain fails to come to Mahomet.

Latent in these projects is a social change in the American scene of incalculable significance. For, except where it is possible to move distressed rural populations from one commercial farm to another better able to support life, the process involves the withdrawal of the rescued ones from any likelihood of future production on a commercial scale. So eliminated from the production side of the Natioal economy, they automatically cease to represent a market for the productions of others.

Migration Does Not Affect Trade.

To those who fear a shrinkage of the total market is entailed in the migration program, some comfort is available in the recollection that the candidates for transplanting have long been absent from the centers of trade. Whether they scratch along on farmed-out land or balance their personal economies that they may both eat and keep warm, the effect on sales charts is negligible, possibly even mildly favorable, the technicians say.

Planned for, the migrants acquire a capacity to fit into a general picture and survive more surely than if left to extricate themselves as best they may. For vast as the migration to come looms, it is but a phase of a general scheme to stabilize a careening economy beset with an apparent surplus of willing hands and a consequent deficit in rounded pocketbooks.

At Eau Claire, Wis., a temporary board appointed by the Governor, is taking applications of farmers for relief for themselves and their starving cattle. They may lead them soon to regions where Uncle Sam will provide new homes.

All the Way From the Capital to the Klondike

Uncle Sam's Sleuths Pursue Lawbreakers

Mysteries That Would Defy Detective Story Writers Are Solved Daily by These Crime Experts.

By Robert Talley.

NOT all the gripping "mystery thrillers" are to be found between the covers of the novels listed among the best sellers.

True detective tales—stories of actual crimes solved in a manner that outrivals the most fanciful dreams of fiction writers—abound in the tall file cases of a little-known Government agency here. It is the criminal identification unit of Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice, which will be 10 years old July 1.

Clearing house in the Nation's war on crime, this unit receives daily from police departments throughout the United States fingerprints and other records of arrested persons. Today it has nearly 4,500,000 sets of fingerprints on file—the largest collection of its kind in the world.

Keen-eyed checkers, who know their "loops" and "whirls" check the prints received with those on file, trapping fugitives from justice arrested under assumed names and frequently identifying men wanted for half-forgotten crimes.

Just the other day the long arm of Uncle Sam reached out to cause the arrest in New York of a man accused of a triple murder in the Klondyke gold fields 18 years ago, amid circumstances as bizarre and as colorful as could have been imagined by Rex Beach or Jack London.

Back in 1916, three prospectors and a dance-hall girl set out from Fort Yukon to wrest from the sands at the price of hardship the precious yellow grains that would spell riches. They were "Blueberry Tom" Jensen, "Fiddler John" Holdenberg, Frank Adams and "Sweet Marie" Schmidt, who gave up her job as an entertainer to join the men in the search for gold.

Months rolled by and the quartet failed to return. Then the skeletons of two of the men and the girl were found in a mud sluice. "Blueberry Tom" Jensen was missing—and with him, according to rumors afloat in the Klondike at that time, had gone $9,000 worth of gold dust that the four had found.

But Was This One Blueberry Tom?

A few days ago Thomas P. Jensen, a bronzed and weatherbeaten little man of 51, was jailed by New York police on charges of intoxication. As a matter of routine, the police sent Jensen's fingerprints, description and photo to Washington for a check-up that might reveal a criminal record.

Back came a tentative identification of the prisoner as "Blueberry Tom" Jensen, long sought for the gold field murders. The Government's identification could not be positive, as there were no fingerprints of "Blueberry Tom" on file, but the prisoner closely resembled an old photograph and description received from Alaska years ago.

A dramatic moment came when Frank E. Allen, a former Klondike prospector now living in New York, read of Jensen's arrest in the newspapers and came forward voluntarily to identify him. Allen, who sought gold in the Far North from 1901 to 1920, made his pile and is now retired.

"I knew 'Blueberry Tom' and I believe I could recognize him today," Allen told police.

The old prospector was ushered into a courtroom where the prisoner had been seated inconspicuously among the crowd of spectators. He was asked to point out "Blueberry Tom" if he could. The veteran sourdough's roving gaze crossed the courtroom and finally came to rest on Jensen.

"There's only one man here who resembles 'Blueberry Tom' and this is him," he said as he indicated the prisoner.

Protesting his innocence and insisting he had never been north of Vancouver, Jensen, a former sailor, was led away to a cell. Department of Justice officials here say there is now en route from Alaska to New York an officer who can say positively if the prisoner is the long-sought fugitive.

Fingerprint Sends Two to Prison.

And another case that outrivals the fiction writers—

A fingerprint on a revolver, found near the scene of a double murder in St. Paul and identified by Government experts here, sent two men to the penitentiary for life.

On the night of July 25, 1932, two underworld characters were shot and killed at the door of a St. Paul speakeasy. Nearby was found a gun which bore the faint impression of a finger tip on the nickled surface just above the trigger.

Two suspects, who gave their names as Joe Schaefer and George Young, were arrested. St. Paul police sent their fingerprints to Washington, where a checkup with the files showed that the men were really John Newman and Albert Silverberg, two gangsters who were being sought for the murder of a prohibition agent in Elizabeth, N. J., two years before.

Chemicals Reveal Telltale Mark.

The fingerprint found on the murder gun was developed by means of chemicals and photographed and a copy sent here. Government experts, after a thorough microscopical examination, reported that the fingerprint appearing on the gun was identical with the right index finger impression of Silverberg. Taking with him enlarged photographs of the two prints to show their similarity, a fingerprint expert went to St. Paul to testify at their trial and upon his evidence Newman and Silverberg were convicted by a jury and sentenced to life.

And further proof that truth is stranger than fiction——

The most dramatic of all fingerprint identifications made by the Government's agency here solved a $200,000 bank robbery in which three men were slain by bandits and resulted in three of the robbers being hanged and a fourth being killed while resisting capture. And the bloody imprint of a bandit's finger, accidentally left on the window of an auto, led to the solution of it all.

In May, 1928, four men descended on the First National Bank of Lamar, Colo., killed the president and cashier and escaped with $200,000 in cash. In fleeing to a hideout in the hills they kidnaped a country doctor and forced him to dress the wounds of one of the bandits who had been shot in the battle at the bank. Then, on the theory that dead men tell no tales, they murdered the physician, tossed his body into a nearby canyon and pushed his auto in after him.

The only clew was a bloody fingerprint found on a window of the doctor's wrecked car. This print was photographed and sent to Washington. Millions of prints in the files were checked, but no duplicate found.

Coincidence Gives Clew to Killers.

A year later a keen-eyed checker in the fingerprint bureau here, while checking some prints just received from the police department at Stockton, Calif., got the thrill of his life when he discovered a replica of this bloody impression. A hurried telegram to Stockton brought the reply that the prisoner had been released, but the man was identified—despite an alias—as one Jake Fleagle, of Garden City, Kans.

Broadcasting the identification, the Government took the lead in a Nation-wide search for Jake Fleagle. This led to the arrest of his brother, Ralph. Under rigorous questioning Ralph weakened and confessed participation in the crime, naming as his accomplices Jake Fleagle, Howard L. Royston and George J. Abshler. Jake Fleagle was hunted

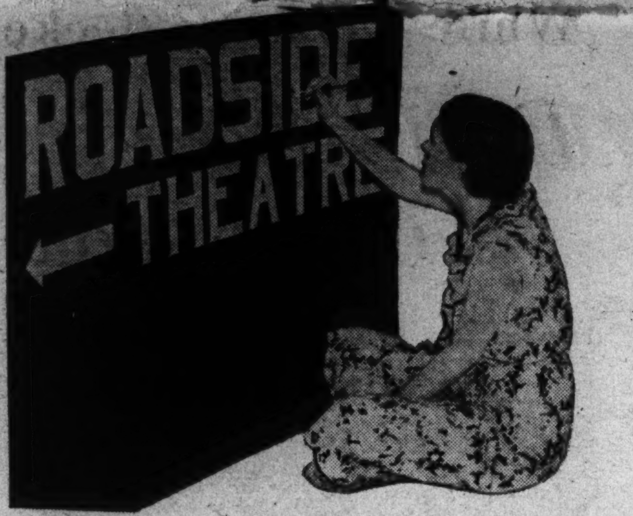
Everybody's Happy When

The Theater Moves Down on the Farm

Roadside Barns Bloom This Month With Rustic Stages, Footlights, Spotlights, Indoor Scenic Grandeur and Rows of Seats.



Close to the Nation's Capital this theater occupies a barn, made magnificent by amateur scenic artists.

By Catherine Prichard.

THE "back to the farm" movement has struck the theater in a big way. "Barn" playhouses have been playing to audiences in various parts of the country since the turn of the century, but recently the idea has become an American institution, or close to it at least.

While the al fresco theatricals have been taking hold, Washingtonians these days are motoring to nearby Maryland, where such a rural theater has been established.

Elsewhere tobacco barns, wharfhouses, abandoned city halls, schoolhouses, old mills, deserted churches and even ordinary hay barns have been taken over during the last seven or eight years by these enterprises. Almost overnight they have acquired stages, footlights, spotlights and rows of seats.

Barn Theater Takes On New Dignity.

So enthusiastic has been the participation of Broadway's best actors, directors and playwrights, as well as local talent, and so quickly have vacationists taken up this phase of entertainment that it has achieved a dignity all its own.

Summer Theaters Are Popular.

Several summer theaters have been established for a number of years. The best known one is the Lakewood Theater, at Skowhegan, Me., which began 44 years ago as an amusement park. After 1901, the variety shows ceased, and in their place real plays were given. The inspiration was supplied and the basic work done by a Bowdoin College graduate, Herbert Swift. From the modest beginnings of a small theater and a few lodges has grown the Lakewood Theater of today, an enterprise which engages the talents of more than 100 people. The present theater seats over 1,000. Comfortable cabins have been built for the actors. Among the "first families" of Lakewood are the Arthur Byrons, Owen Davis and his family and Mr. and Mrs. Brandon Peters.

Another theater that grew from an amusement park is Elitch's Gardens, in Denver. Just about the same time Lakewood was presenting ten-cent stock, "A Midsummer Night's Dream" with Jessie Bartlett Davis was opening the season at Elitch's. Prominent actors had been appearing there for ten years, since George Edeson was made manager in 1892. "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "Trilby" were produced during the 1899 season. Such prominent stars as James Niell, Henrietta Crosman, Hobart Bosworth, George Arliss and even Sarah Bernhardt played at Elitch's during the early 1900's.

And. of course, there is the Wharf Theater where the original Provincetown Players first produced Eugene O'Neill's early plays. There is a new theater on the end of that wharf at the tip of Cape Cod, now, replacing the old fish house which burned down several years ago.

During the summers of 1927 and 1928, the "barn" theater movement was definitely "born." At various points in New England and New York, modest theaters opened. In Maine, Leighton Rollins started the Surry Playhouse. Farther south the theater at Stockbridge, Mass., was founded by a young Wesleyan graduate, F. Cowles Strickland; Alexander Dean, of Yale, and Alexander Kirkland. Out on Cape Cod. Raymond Moore moved an old church building which has served in its time as a carriage house, a slaughter house and a garage—to Dennis, and the Cape Playhouse opened. At the southeastern tip of the cape a group of students from New England colleges under the leadership of Bretaigne Windust and Charles Leatherbee, started the Theater Unit of West Falmouth, in a movie house. In Rhode Island, the Newport Casino Theater Co. took over the building designed by Stanford White for James Gordon Bennett.

Country Theaters Multiply Rapidly.

The Hampton Players of Southampton, Long Island, spread their sails as the University Players, with Henry Potter and George Haight of Yale at the helm. And every summer since then, more theaters have been opening, and building up reputations for good warm weather entertainment. Last summer, there were about seventy-five such theaters operating. The majority are in New England states, around New York City, and along the Jersey coast.

Prominent producers, playwrights, and actors have founded "barn" theaters, also. Lawrence Langner tries out his own plays in his Westport, Conn., barn, known as the Country Playhouse. Just last summer, Vergil Geddes renovated an old tobacco barn at Brookfield, Mass., And Greek Evans' open air presentation of operettas takes place on his spacious lawn. The Huntington High School auditorium serves as Charles Hopkins' summer theater where he tries out plays for Broadway.

People seem to think nothing of driving 25 miles on a warm summer evening to sit on wooden benches for two hours to see a revival of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "The Late Christopher Bean" or "There's Always Juliet." In fact, barn-theater going has become as essential to New England as the ocean-bathing and mountain-climbing. The reasons for the popularity of this diversion are not difficult to find.

Most obvious is the appeal of a good play, well acted and adequately staged, but more important is the informality of the "barn" theater. The facilities are limited, the buildings are usually much smaller than the average urban theater, the

Diving Bell Gropes for Lost Gold

Other Hopeful Salvage Parties Prepare to Rifle Neptune's Glittering Troves.

Seamen and divers gloat over the wealth of gold they have just salvaged from the lost steamer Egypt.

By Robert Talley.

WITH millions in sunken treasure as the prize, four salvage expeditions are getting ready to descend into Father Neptune's graveyard of drowned ships this summer in an effort to wrest from the sea part of the fabulous riches that lie buried in Davy Jones' Locker.

Off the coast of Holland, a Dutch concern equipped with a huge new-type diving bell will attempt to recover $6,500,000 in gold from the rotting hulk of the British frigate Lutine, which sank in 1799.

In the North Sea, an Italian salvage firm will endeavor to retrieve $1,500,000 in gold bullion from the wreck of the Dutch liner Tubantia, torpedoed by a German submarine in 1916.

In the Bay of Biscay, the same firm will renew its efforts to salvage $4,000,000 in gold that remains aboard the sunken liner Egypt, approximately $1,000,000 having been brought to the surface in 1932 and 1933.

Alaskan Waters Hold Treasure.

In far-off Alaskan waters, American divers will seek to recover $1,000,000 in gold dust and nuggets from the wreck of the S. S. Islander, which hit an iceberg and sank in 1901 while returning prospectors from the Klondike with their newly won riches.

In these four wrecks there is a possible recovery of $13,000,000 in gold, all of which may be achieved this summer. That was the value of this gold when it went down; it is greater now because of the increased price.

Most dramatic of all is the new quest for the lost riches of the Lutine. This British man-of-war sank 135 years ago while carrying gold coin to pay English soldiers who fought against Napoleon in Holland and gold bullion destined to avert a threatened financial panic in Hamburg which might have proved fatal to the allies' cause.

Some of Gold Has Been Salvaged.

There was $7,000,000 aboard the Lutine. Salvage efforts in 1800, 1821, 1859, 1886 and 1911 succeeded in bringing up only about $500,000. With the new-type diving bell, which will enable treasure seekers to descend to the ocean's floor and explore the ancient wreck, the Dutch salvors hope the remaining $6,500,000 can be brought up this summer. The Dutch concern is working under a contract granted by Lloyds, which owns the salvage rights.

The Lutine disaster is one of England's historic tragedies of the sea. Struck by a sudden storm, the vessel sank off the Dutch island of Terschelling a few hours after she sailed from Yarmouth on the afternoon of October 8, 1799. Of the 289 men aboard her, all were drowned except one sailor, who reached land by clinging to a spar, and he died a short time later.

The bell of the Lutine, recovered in the salvage operations of 1859, is a lasting memorial of this grim story of the sea. For 75 years it has hung in the offices of Lloyds in London, where it is still rung to give news of overdue ships. In deep-throated tones, it peals out the joyous announcement of a missing vessel's safe arrival at some port or the melancholy tidings that all hope has been abandoned.

Two strokes mean that the missing ship is safe; three strokes, the doleful news that all hope is gone.

The Lutine's bell is the last word in marine disasters. When three strokes are sounded it means the underwriters must settle with the ship's owners, the wages due the crew must be paid to their heirs, and the men are henceforth considered dead.

Wreck of Holland Mail Steamer.

One of the most intriguing treasure hunts of modern times revolves around the Royal Holland mail liner Tubantia, torpedoed 100 miles off the English coast on March 16, 1916, soon after leaving Amsterdam.

Various stories have been told of this wreck. One is that the Tubantia was carrying, hidden in Dutch cheeses, $5,000,000 in gold consigned by the German government to secret agents in South America, and that the commander of the German submarine that sunk her was unaware of this cargo. A second fantastic tale is that the ship's treasure was secretly raised by a French trawler in 1919. A third version is that the alleged treasure never existed, but was the invention of a smart confidence man who persuaded a wealthy German to put up $65,000 for a salvage attempt and then skipped with the money.

However, the true story—as shown recently by official records and shipping documents never before made public—is that the Tubantia carried a bullion cargo of approximately $1,500,000. The gold is still there, as all salvage attempts to date have been thwarted by the strong undersea currents that sweep the North Sea in that area.

Divers Expect To Get Treasure.

With its vastly improved equipment for rifling Davy Jones' Locker, the Sorima Salvage Co., the Italian outfit that retrieved $1,000,000 in gold from the wreck of the S. S. Egypt, plans to tackle the Tubantia within a few weeks. They believe they can overcome the conditions that have baffled others.

And then back to the Egypt! As soon as the Tubantia job is completed, the Sorima's divers plan to return to this treasure trove where $4,000,000 in gold still lies beneath the waves of the Bay of Biscay 30 miles off the French coast.

The Egypt is one of the richest of modern treasure wrecks. En route from London to Bombay, this big passenger liner was sunk in a collision with a French ship off Pointe du Raz in May, 1922. Ninety-six lives were lost when the vessel went down—with $5,000,000 in gold bars and coin, being sent by British bankers to India, in her strong room.

Man's effort to recover this fortune from the ocean's floor has been a long struggle with Father Neptune. The ships of the Sorima Co. spent two whole summers dragging the ocean wastes in search of the sunken hulk. It was located just before bad weather forced abandonment of operations late in 1931, and during the summers of 1932 and 1933 approximately $1,000,000 in gold was brought up.

The raising of this gold from the Egypt stands out as the greatest achievement in the record of man's battle with the deep, since divers were forced to work approximately 400 feet below the surface—twice the depth at which human beings

The new diving bell designed for exploration under water leaves Terschelling, Holland, on a fresh attempt to recover the gold that was lost on the famous Lutine, which foundered off the coast in the eighteenth century. The treasure is valued at over six million dollars.

New Copybook Maxims Teach

How to Be Happy in the Machine Age

Modern Schools Prepare for World Where Drudgery Is Not Necessary.

By Lester Dix, Ph. D.,
Lincoln School of Teachers College,
Columbia University.

A FORMER article discussed changes in social ideas that are required by our present realization that controlling factors of economic life have made a sudden about-face. To the practicing educator the question is immediately raised of what the schools are doing to help or hinder the evolution of necessary new ideas, and how school practices must be affected if these ideas are to become common property.

Machines Are Taking Place of Men.

Examining with the engineer and the economist the growing tendency of power everywhere to take the place not only of human strength, but of human skill and control of industrial processes, and knowing that every such development releases men and women from work deadly in its drudgery and routine, the educator must accept the fact of the gradual displacement of human beings by automatic machinery in all types of work short of actual creative origination of new forms. The direction of human progress is not to fight the machine, but to help along the expansion, the dissemination, the control and the full utilization of nonhuman power throughout the process which produces our material goods. Moreover, the educator knows that power adaptations will increasingly bring marvelous aids to many of those services which must remain under particular control of human intelligence. The electrical knife and the X-ray bring power to the surgeon's aid as truly as the electric eye brings it to the control of processes which supply us with clothing. It is unthinkable that teachers can allow children to grow up without understanding the nature and the effects of such mechanisms. But the required understandings go further than merely knowing how these improvements operate in their immediate setting.

Young people growing up under present conditions will soon discover, with or without the schoolmaster, that all the old copybook maxims glorifying drudgery for its own sake have been repealed. These young people can readily see that neither the Kingdom of Heaven nor a decent living on earth is to be won by back-breaking labor that ages men and women in middle life and consumes all the energy they might give to making life more acceptable for themselves and others.

Hardship Has Place In Sport Only.

Undoubtedly, children as well as men will continue to seek hardships for sporting purposes. But it will not be long before they will completely "debunk" the negative idea of discipline of the take-it-and-like-it variety for the sake of gaining some mysterious characteristic assumed to make them more acceptable personalities to those who have them under control. Schools which face life frankly will teach them that plenty of difficulties will remain if all unnecessary hardships are removed, and that self-discipline and other fine traits of character will best grow out of the loyal pursuit of positive long-time purposes related to admirable social and human ideals. With this change of front we shall lose a considerable amount of the justification for exaggerated programs of athletics designed to produce generations of hardy and hearty "good sports." The remainder of the athletic halo, beyond the expression of a normally free and happy play spirit, will disappear if it becomes evident that we can do with less militarism in our outlook. Of that more later.

Age of Plenty Is at Hand.

When we fully accept the idea that out of a power industry will come a plenty of goods and services to supply a relatively high living standard for all, we shall have less trouble with the more wolfish attitudes remaining from the old battle with scarcity. When it is everywhere evident that it is as easy to supply sufficient bread, sufficient milk, and sufficient medicine for every living soul as it is to manage an ample supply of pure water, we shall become more willing to make a decent living standard the common possession and right of everyone, wiping out the degradation of poverty and economic insecurity as drastically as we have wiped out smallpox.

In the schools this point of view will mean a new attitude toward material possessions and new social attitudes between persons to replace those based upon differences in possessions. We shall want children to learn that mere ownership as a road to social prestige is obsolescent. Ownership and possessiveness as the direct result of fine accomplishment will immediately come into a larger place in the scheme of things. A lovely song, a clever mathematical solution, an intelligent book review will rate higher than the most expensive briefcase or the most attractive dress, except as these become a direct expression of the owner's exercise of taste. In this atmosphere it will be possible to get rid of some of our habits of mean-spirited emulation in terms of possession, of false values in what we are willing to spend our energies for, and of such phenomena as the petty thievery which never ceases in our schools and never ceases to shock the conscientious teacher.

That poverty and deprivation are directly related to delinquency is clearly evident as the result of excellent studies. It was found in Chicago that the conditions of the Loop district were associated with the highest delinquency rates, which persisted during succeeding waves of populations varying in all other characteristics but the poverty which condemned them to live in this district. A direct relationship was even found between delinquency rates and distance from this notorious social pest spot.

At this point we face one of our worst difficulties—the ability to see money in its true relationship to wealth in general and to a plenty economy in particular. In a scarcity economy, that which is most scarce is most desired. Any form of money, to circulate freely, must maintain confidence in its continued acceptability. In order to provide a natural acceptability man has instinctively searched for the scarcest of commodities to form the basis of his money system. It is not for nothing that materialism is pictured in the Bible as worship of a golden calf. A plenty economy will force us to put money in its proper place—that of a mechanism for distributing wealth. In a scarcity economy it has always been used by those able to do so as a mechanism for gaining control of as much wealth as possible for themselves. When this process of hoarding and segregation by a few reaches the point where it prevents the widespread distribution of our plenty-production, we must reduce money to its economically justified function of means, not end.

King Midas Not a Good Example.

A step in this process is to teach children that the hoarding of pennies is not always a virtue; that like King Midas, a nation can save too much, and that by doing so it will just as surely destroy its ability to feed itself. In this respect, we adults have more to learn than children because there is so much for us to unlearn. To a child, a coin is the means to an end—ice cream, a movie show, or whatnot. It is only by some years of effort on the part of adults that he succeeds finally in viewing money as an end in itself. We have perverted the child's naive wisdom by associating fear with the absence of money and by praising and rewarding him for hoarding it. Teaching thus, it is not appropriate for us to be shocked when we find our children growing up to an adulthood which worships money barons without pausing to inquire into the processes by which high financial nobility is set up.

Power Industry Demands Cooperation.

If we are to control a power-industry and distribute its product in a way to keep it functioning healthfully we shall have to learn to live and work together cooperatively. This means that children must have the opportunity to grow up in an atmosphere in which personal competition will be far less the dominant factor. For those who regard competition as necessary to the human spirit, we may say that were it posible to remove competition entirely from economic activities we would still have to compete for social respect, for artistic distinction, for love; and it is likely that we shall never cease to compete with nature or with ourselves for the sheer joy of accomplishment. We tell young people that the educational process is the sure path to the defeat of their fellows in the race for material wealth. This is rank misinformation, but they accept it. Then in order to train them for competition, we set up school practices as a competitive race for marks and deliberately see to it that the marks are so arranged that only a few can feel fully successful in their accomplishment. It is hard to conceive a better way to promote divisive and antisocial attitudes and to leave children with the feeling that the highest form of cooperative activity is engaging together in partisanship to insure that "our gang" beat "their gang." Is it too far-fetched to say that here we sow some of the tiny seeds that eventually mature in war?

Individual Must Succeed With Group.

The cure for this state of things is to organize our children in more whole-hearted group activities in which the individual rises or falls with the entire group and is respected most when he is able to bring the greatest contribution to the group success. That this has far-reaching implications might be indicated by comparing the common practice with that of the best schools in so simple a matter as seating arrangements. In the competitive regime everyone faced the teacher in individual clamorings for her attention. It was a minor crime even to talk to anyone but her. In the social-group school, children are likely to sit in circles facing one another in normal social relationship, and interchange of ideas is as free and as natural as the carrying on of the group purpose will allow. Thus in schools experience immediately shows the need of free and sincere communication if cooperation is to be established. It also throws into relief the importance of learning language and other forms of communication as effective arts. The whole social group will have to know this relationship if we are to have a fine social cooperation. Even in competitive activities it is necessary to understand one's adversary. It is vital in cooperative activities.

Children in the modern school learn by doing, and have a high respect for fine accomplishment. They often conduct their own classes, know how to get together and talk matters over. Gone are the disciplinary ideals of the old classroom.

Ellis, Post Staff.

Coercion Is Not Cooperation.

If the other fellow is to be won to cooperate we must persuade him, for cooperation does not come out of coercion. If we are to persuade him, we must respect his personality and we must display good manners. With the prospect of a relief from the most grinding conditions of scarcity and poverty, it becomes not only possible to supply our needs, but also relieve ourselves of the compulsions which prevent urbanity and good manners in our relationships. But good manners take time and we have all been taught that time is money. Worshiping money, how could we take its precious equivalent and spend it simply to make living pleasanter for the person with whom we are dealing? The new era will provide not only the necessity but the opportunity for a widespread respect for personality, for gentility, and true cooperative attitudes in social relationship. When by some dramatic feats of imaginative and courageous social understanding we learn to extend these attitudes to foreigners, we shall be on our way toward the abolition of war.

Respect for Facts Of Prime Importance.

There is no phase of the changing conditions that lays a more compelling necessity upon us than that of having to deal with novel facts. The only weapon against fixed ideas, which now operate like sand in the social gears, is a rigorous respect for facts. In this direction the social scientist may learn from the physical scientist and the engineer. If we are actually to know the conditions we face and not blunder blindly into them, we must become as realistic in social realms as we have been in the building of our factories. And this realism must pervade the work of the schools. Superstition, cant, hypocrisy must be dealt with as ruthlessly in the school as long ago the scientist learned to deal with them. The freedom to look critically at the facts must be granted children. This means that we shall have to cease shutting off the inquiries of children at the moment they begin to interfere with our comfortable compromises, our fixed attitudes, or our adult prerogatives. Thus will come a respect for real learning, which no amount of pious exhortation can engender. Children must be free to criticize and must be helped to appreciate what is actual and what is possible to the human spirit. Only thus can they prepare for life, which, because of fundamental changes, displays at one and the same time an increasing number of indefensible social ills and a rich variety of exciting possibilities of human progress.

Possibilities of Progress Are Vast.

It is these vast possibilities of social progress, to be worked out on American ground by American methods to fulfill American ideals, that offer the profoundest challenge and interest to the American educator who respects his calling, his tradition and his people. The finest school can exist only in the finest social environment.

The third and last of these articles will deal with the educator's interest in these larger possibilities.

Future Social Upheaval in England

From a painting by A. N. Kozloff.

The violence and chaos of revolution are dramatically portrayed in this painting by A. N. Kozloff.

"Black August" Fanciful Tale of 194—

By Theodore Hall.

WHAT will be the state of the world in the year 194—? With the aid of a crystal globe set up by Dennis Wheatley, British novelist, let us look for a moment into that not too distant future.

America, by every means possible, has isolated herself from the other nations. Internal crises and the power of the less educated masses forced her hand, but the tendency had been growing since 1930. A wholesale embargo has been set up. No further exports are made to Europe, for Europe is crumbling, bankrupt in promises as well as cash. No one is allowed to enter America but bona-fide Americans. All news from the outside world is rigidly censored. A hundred and fifty million people, whatever their troubles, are at least living to themselves.

France Puts Down Puppet King.

Turn to Europe. France has turned Communist, and put down a Fascist puppet-king, Charles XI, after nine months of rule by means of a bloody revolution. Germany's commerce is at a standstill, and her situation is desperate. For she keeps her people from open Bolshevism only by martial law. If she has had the strength to conquer Poland in a classic campaign of ten weeks, yet she has not force enough to hold it. The Poles have driven the Germans into the larger towns, and are laying siege to them there.

Italy seems strong, for Mussolini laid sure foundations before he died. But the state ration is so slim that the Italians can scarcely live on it.

Russia? Five-year-plan upon five-year-plan could not save the tottering structure. Now it is in a state of absolute chaos, reverting rapidly to barbarian. Let the token be sufficient that the wireless stations have been silent for six months.

Hunger Stalks Over Europe.

The horseman of hunger rides over the whole of Europe. People are dying by thousands every day in the central countries. The great cities keep but one step ahead of actual starvation. Every country has its millions upon millions of unemployed, who eke out a bare hand-to-mouth existence. Food products from the nations still comparatively stable — Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, the Scandinavian countries—mean not a drop in the bucket. There might be help from Africa, from South America, but monetary standards have dissolved and the patience of creditor nations is exhausted.

And what of the 60,000,000 people in the crowded 121,000 square miles of Great Britain and Ireland? Let us take more time with them, for England in 194— is the scene of Dennis Wheatley's astonishing but credible novel, "Black August" (Dutton, $2.50).

England stands on the brink of a terrific revolution. One out of every three workers is unemployed. The dole has swallowed up all the income of industry, and gapes for more. With America no longer importer or exporter, with the colonies and Dominions isolating themselves or lost already, with no dependable market elsewhere in the world, English industry is ready to crack up.' And with it the government.

For there is no strong man among the people's elected representatives. Prime Minister, Cabinet and Parliament find themselves helpless as the country sinks into the quicksand. No industry—no taxes. No taxes—no money. No money—no power. And the sickle moon of "Black August," 194—, rises on the terrible red revolution.

Communists Riot In Glasgow.

It strikes first, as Mr. Wheatley tells us, sporadically here and there over the country. There is a Communist riot in Glasgow. Mobs destroy shops and factories; bridges are burned; train service is cut off. Troops gather and fire on the mob, and martial law is declared. An old tiger of a brigadier goes north, and like Gen. Dyer at Amritsar in 1919, he makes a harsh example by stringing up 20 Communist leaders. But if Glasgow is temporarily quieted, trouble breaks out at Hull.

There, in the early hours one morning, an organized raid is made on the largest banks. The safes are dynamited and the contents carried off. Several policemen are severely injured.

In a small town in the Merthyr Valley an income tax collector is pulled out of bed, saturated with petrol, and set on fire. Crowds cheered as if it had been Guy Fawkes night.

Uprising looms bigger and bigger in the East End of London. Troops are moved into the dock areas. A general riot is expected hourly.

But no modern revolution, as you know, is quite sanctioned until the sailors mutiny. The army, always in practice closer to and more sympathetic with the people, may in crises like this not unexpectedly dissolve piecemeal. The more isolated and compact body of the navy usually stands as the last bulwark of authority. Now, as August advances, the British fleet is mobilized. But wholesale desertions occur. When the fleet takes up a station off the Isle of Wight, it has to return for sheer lack of men, impotent and ineffectual. And with that, down comes England to all intents and purposes.

Machine Guns in Trafalgar Square.

For the bulk of the power is no longer with the government. The police might obey orders, troops might remain largely loyal and Windsor Castle, the Houses of Parliament and Scotland Yard might remain as asylums of security for the old regime. But what are these and their machine guns in Trafalgar Square and their armed lorries patrolling Piccadilly and their few thousands of Grayshirts, a private patriotic organization, against the dead weight of millions of idle and hungry Londoners?

It is easy to overestimate the importance of the fall of a government, and Mr. Wheatley's imaginative story avoids that mistake. For he realizes the power of a correlative factor, a factor dependent on government, yet a thousandfold more crucial—the sheer technical vulnerability of a modern city.

Surely it takes no reading of Stuart Chase, though he has summarized this matter excellently, to conceive what would happen to the inhabitant of any city of a million or over upon the failure of any one of several utilitarian and accustomed services. Let me note a few, not all of which are developed in "Black August."

Failure of water-supply. Let alone thirst, that means stoppage of sewage disposal. The Black Death has waited 600 years, but it is just around the corner from any metropolis.

Failure of the gas supply. That means everything from inconsequential raw food to extremely consequential lack of sterilization for surgical instruments—after the alcohol supply gives out.

Electricity Fails, Stops Transit.

Failure of electricity. This is perhaps the most far-reaching of all failures. Consider the consequences of a stoppage of light, of telephones, of subways and elevators, of electric trans—of oil furnaces (which are ignited by electricity), of the myriad important electrical mechanisms in use.

Failure of gasoline supply. No trucking of fresh vegetables and milk, for example. And a population fleeing from a dead city on foot.

With London a chaos, with a starving and desperate population swarming over the countryside, Mr. Wheatley foresees a Communist coup d'etat. Five days from the fall of the old regime, a Soviet sets itself up in London and the principal cities and towns of England are taken over simultaneously. Punitive execution of "conservatives" is the first step in an attempt at order. But, as a countryman says: "England won't never go Bolshie; happen us'll be all dead afore then!"

But Britain Finds Her Way Out.

So, leaning heavily on the famous British character, Mr. Wheatley draws his book to a triumphant conclusion. For a sharp counter-revolution takes place before the month is out. The thin but tightly organized constabulary, the Grayshirts, and the revertingly loyal army and navy stand squarely behind the always popular but suddenly iron-purposed figure of—whom do you guess?—the Prince of Wales. Two or three days of fighting occur, and the prince, now prince regent, establishes his dictatorship.

In the midst of the cataclysm, Mr. Wheatley set the young Marquis of Fane, ambitious civil servant; a lovely young typist as heroine; a clever, cynical and a plotting journalist who dresses up as a brigadier general and steals a destroyer. The things that happen to them should keep you reading this novel till dawn.

Norway's New Envoy Here Is An Old Friend of America

Wilhelm Munthe De Morgenstierne Came to the Capital First When He Was 22 Years Old.

In mountainous Norway Dr. Morgenstierne is regarded as one of the nation's leading ski jumpers, winning many contests in that thrilling sport.
Wide World.

A SHIMMERING half-light casts its amber glow over the northern sky. It is neither night nor day, but what is known in the magic land of the midnight sun as summer. From far Spitzbergen to Oslo all Norway is bathed in the rays of the sun. This began late in April and will continue until the middle of August.

It was from this far northland, where the tall dark firs sway beneath the imperious wand of the Arctic winds, that a brave company of adventurers led by the intrepid Leif Errickson set forth centuries ago on a journey of exploration that led to discovery of a new world. To the writers of the saga of the Norsemen that land was known as Vineland.

New Envoy Is a Son of the Vikings.

Sons of the Vikings since that memorable day have ploughed through many a mile of restless sea while the land they found has been claimed and colonized by others. No longer a wilderness breaking the wastes of the surging Atlantic, this land is now a place alive with the commerce and life of a great people.

But the United States of America has not forgotten those courageous voyagers whose venture into unknown seas brought them to the rugged shores of this new continent. Something of their hardy spirit has gone into the making of this Nation.

There came to Washington the other day a true offspring of this race which dared to sail into an uncharted ocean.

Unlike his forbears, however, Wilhelm Munthe De Morgenstierne, the new Minister of Norway, did not arrive in a strange land where there was none to bid him welcome. On the contrary, coming to Washington was to this envoy of the Northland like a homecoming.

Came Here First As an Attache.

For Mr. Morgenstierne is no newcomer to the Capital. It was 24 years ago that he first came here as an attache of the Norwegian Legation. And, although but 22, it then became his duty to assume the responsibilities of a charge d'affaires upon the sudden death of his superior. In this important post he acquitted himself in such a manner that his government honored him by new and even more important duties. From Washington Mr. Morgenstierne went to Antwerp and then to serve in the Foreign Office at Oslo, where he carved out a distinguished career.

Soon, however, the love of America which this son of the Northland had found in his heart after his brief sojourn here, brought him back to these shores. Eager to see and know all of this land, the story of which was woven into the warp and woof of Norwegian legendry, he went from coast to coast talking to all manner of Americans and absorbing the spirit of the American people. It was not a lonely trek, because almost everywhere he went he found sons and daughters of that Norway from which he came. They, too, had come to know and love this Nation.

It was after that trip that Mr. Morgenstierne penned "A Tribute to America," in which he paid homage to the proud pageant of American life. To him America meant a land of opportunity and a symbol of freedom and opportunity. Of it he said:

"What is the essence of the American spirit?

"We feel the presence of this spirit everywhere we go in the States—even we who are perhaps only visitors for a short time.

"Is it not so that we all have a feeling of the promise of American life? Is not this American spirit a spirit of optimism, of confident faith in the ultimate destinies of the human race—and of the American people in particular?"

Writes of World's Social Changes.

Extracts from Mr. Morgenstierne's essay, written soon after the World War, in 1919, have a startling significance to present-day America. Continuing, he said:

"We have gone through a terrible experience. The foundations of civilization have been chattered and we are groping in the dark. It seems hard to find our bearings. But we all feel this, that if the nations of the world are to endure the near future must see a radical and far-reaching extension of the principles of equality and liberty. The social organization of the world as it was five years ago will no longer do.

"For some time there has been a whisper down the lands of the world—and it is now rising to an irresistible storm—that the equality and liberty of the new day must rest on solid economic and social foundations. The way in which this world problem is met—and solved—will be the acid test of the reality and sincerity of all pronouncements of freedom and equality."

If these sentiments seem to have a familiar ring to the newspaper reader of today it may be because of their similarity to those we hear so often nowadays.

In his knowledge of the United States the new Norwegian Minister is in the tradition of James Bryce and Jules Jusserand. That Mr. Morgenstierne's acquaintance with America is not based on superficial observation is attested by the fact that he has spent 12 years of his diplomatic career in this country. After his early days in Washington, Mr. Morgenstierne returned in war days with Frithiof Nansen, the famed Norwegian explorer, and since 1929 he has been Consul General in New York.

Austere Setting Reminder of North.

What manner of man is this who comes once more to the Diplomatic Corps of Washington?

A visitor to the Norwegian Legation out on Massachusetts avenue is impressed first of all by its austerity. On the floor an immense bear rug is a vivid reminder of that northland.

In the office of the minister paneled oak walls further accentuate the severity, and only a cluttered desk bears evidence that this is, after all, a man's workshop.

Then, there lightly steps into all this formality a tall man bringing with him a breath of the outdoors and an indefinable air of one who does things. His manner is crisp and businesslike, but retains the charm of a man of the world. The brown hair is close-cropped and the blue eyes are friendly. There are a few brief courteous words of apology for a slight delay in keeping the appointment and then the new representative of the King of Norway chats with the interviewer.

Immediately there is manifest his deep interest in things American and his knowledge of American culture and institutions. The Civil War is a favorite subject of Mr. Morgenstierne's reading in his leisure moments, which just now are few and far between. For the past several days, since presenting his letters of credence at the White House last week, Mr. Morgenstierne has been busy calling on and renewing friendships among the Capital's Diplomatic Corps.

Friendships with distinguished men have played a large role in the life of this alert-minded diplomat of Norway. Roald Amunsden, world-famous explorer who lost his life in efforts to save the crew of the ill-fated Italian polar expedition led by Nobile, was well known by Mr. Morgenstierne. And in 1925 Mr. Morgenstierne accompanied to the United States another of his famed compatriots, Frithioff Nansen, who came here to arrange a shipment of foodstuffs to Norway during a time of shortage.

An Island Was Named for Him.

In far away Antarctica an island discovered by another noted Norwegian, Lars Christenson, remains as a permanent memorial of still another lasting friendship formed by the new Minister of Norway. It is known as "Morgenstierne Coast" and was so named to perpetuate the memory of the man who now occupies the Norwegian Legation.

Like most others of his countrymen, Mr. Morgenstierne is a lover of life out-of-doors. In mountainous Norway he found pleasure in

THE S. S. Cap Arcona, pride of the Hamburg-Sud Amerika Line, slid silently up the River Plate the other day headed for Buenos Aires. On board a diminutive French soprano had made up her mind. Wreathed in smiles, she was waiting in her stateroom to receive reporters, eager to fling her challenge to fate.

An hour later the cables were humming with the news that beautiful, 29-year-old Lily Pons, the Metropolitan Opera Co.'s greatest find in years, was about to seek happiness in matrimony again. This time it was to be the Cap Arcona's aristocratic German physician, whom she had met two years before en route for a season at the colorful Argentine capital.

Her first attempt, with a prominent Dutch attorney, August Mesritz, was ended by a divorce in Paris last summer. He was the man who had found her ten years ago, long before she knew she had a voice, in the garden of her father's house at Cannes, in the south of France. Captivated by her beauty, he immediately fell in love and soon persuaded her to give up a second-rate career on the stage for matrimony.

She Sang the Bell Song for Him One Night.

One evening, several months later, she told him, a bit timidly, the story of her enthusiastic reception when, at the age of 13, she had entertained the wounded soldiers in a war hospital, by singing the Bell Song from Lakme. Would she sing it for him? Why, yes, if he insisted. His insistence was to cost him his happiness, for while he listened, he realized that he was hearing the voice of a great artist. In Paris, Gorastiaga, the man who had trained some of the world's greatest singers, soon confirmed his judgment.

One evening, late in January, 1931, Lily Pons made her debut in New York. Mesritz was there to see the Metropolitan Opera House go wild with applause as men stamped their feet and women threw flowers on the stage in a frenzied demonstration of approval. As the huge curtain fell for the twentieth time, he relaxed in his seat with a smile both of happiness and of resignation. For he was witnessing, as justification for eight years of unremitting and patient nursing, the triumph of his wife's genius. But he was also witnessing, in this very triumph, the end of a beautiful marriage, for history told him that love must play second fiddle to great art.

Genius Lifts Artist Above Common Mortals.

Genius has always played havoc with the lives of the individuals who possessed it. The creation of great art is such a tremendous emotional strain that it often throws them completely off balance. An all-impelling force lifts them far above common mortals into an entirely different world. Any attempt to lead a normal life in this world usually leads to tragic consequences. Ellen Terry, Eleonora Duse, and Isadora Duncan, three of the greatest artists the world has ever seen, tried and failed.

"Dame" Ellen Terry was perhaps the greatest actress who ever walked the English stage. Her life was a tragic attempt to compromise with art. Born in 1848, the daughter of two well-known provincial actors, she was wedded to the theater from the cradle. But she yearned for a happy marriage, with a home and children. However, genius could not be denied. Destiny was at work against her, pulling her always back to the stage and destroying her four attempts to break away.

She tried at the tender age of 16 to leave the theater as the child wife of the painter Watts whose artistic eye had been fascinated by her ethereal beauty. But it soon called her back and her first marriage ended abruptly with a separation.

The taste she got of private life left her no peace of mind. Soon she was off again, this time for six long years of peace and beauty in the country. A brilliant and charming architect named Edward Godwin was the cause. She always looked back with longing, on that peaceful period of her life when she was living with Godwin on almost nothing, keeping house for him, and bringing up the two children she bore him. One of them, Gordon Craig, now England's foremost stage director, has since said that his mother should never have gone back to the theater, for she was much happier as a mother than as an actress.

A Producer Appears On Horseback.

But fate intervened once more. One sunny afternoon a man in a pink riding jacket came over a hedge on a horse. He was Charles Reade, the London producer, and he offered her a leading role at a good salary if she would abandon happiness for the stage. The temptation was too great and she went back.

She tried marriage a second time, in 1878, this time with Charles Wardell, a large, brawny soldier, who had turned actor, using the stage name of Charles Kelley. He was an insanely jealous man and it was not long before this union became intolerable and Ellen Terry was forced to break it off.

Then followed the great love of her life, that for the incomparable actor, Henry Irving, whose leading lady, both on the stage and in life, she was for over 20 years. It was a strange and unhappy affair. Irving seemed never to have been tormented by any desire to live the life of a human being. His only life was the theater, and it made him rather cold and inhuman at times. She loved him completely as an actor, but off the stage his egotism cost her much misery, despair and tragedy.

This terrible struggle, which went on all through her life, between the woman and the actress, was decided for her. Her genius could not be suppressed, though when she died in 1928, mourned by all the world, at the age of 80, she did not know herself whether she would rather have been a just a happy, peaceful wife. If she had, the world would have been deprived of a great artist.

Great though Ellen Terry undoubtedly was, the Italian actress Eleonora Duse, "of the beautiful hands," belonged to the immortals. Her beauty, both of soul and of body, surpassed all description. She was not of this earth.

Associated Press.

Eleonora Duse, the great Italian actress, loved Italy's poet, D'Annunzio. But her audiences did not care for their favorite in the roles he wrote for her.

heart to Ellen Terry's son. But their work called each of them away from love.

When Lily Pons' first husband heard her golden voice, he guessed the truth, that the world would claim her away from his side. Yet he bravely helped her up the path to fame.

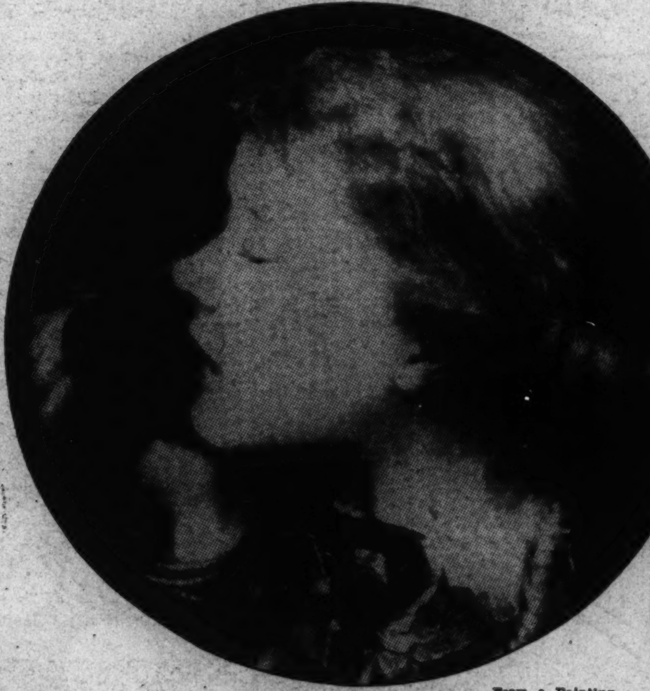
Preceded by two generations of actors, she was carried to her christening in a theatrical property box. In 1873, at the age of 14, she was playing Juliet in Verona. This was her first great emotional experience. She was so excited that she could not sleep, but walked the streets all night as if in a dream.

Six years later she fell in love. This was the first of a series of tragedies, which did not embitter, but saddened and deepened her whole life. He was a dashing young actor, who gave her a fleeting glimpse of happiness and then left her to bring a little boy into a sad world. In a few days it died and, almost penniless, she was forced to go back to the stage, carrying with her a few leaves from a tree which grew beside the grave. She carried them about until they became dust, like her child.

Just as her despair seemed to become too unbearable, a young actor, named Tebaldo Checchi, a very kind and honest fellow, rescued her. She needed the tenderness of his love and they soon married.

For several years he gave her peace and understanding. But that was not enough. Something far greater was needed to nourish the flame of genius. She thought she could find it in Flavio Ando, her leading man. But even his passionate love was insufficient. Then one evening in Rome as she was returning to her dressing room, exhausted after a magnificent performance, a young man stepped out, gazed at her with clear, glowing eyes, and with fascinating simplicity, exclaimed: "Oh, great lover!"

The young man was Gabriele d'Annunzio, the greatest Italian poet since Dante. The flame that was within him had caught up and consumed most of the beautiful women of his day. They had all given him inspiration for a moment, but his soul was too tremendous for them and he soon left them dried and parched. Not so with Duse. She was to give him, in their five years together, that which the world could not give. She penetrated the depths of his genius and brought out the greatest poetry he ever wrote.



From a Painting.

The famous Ellen Terry, whose nature was never able to choose finally between romance and the stage, was in her youth a person of ethereal loveliness.

After the first period of ecstatic love, they looked upon their union as one of the arts. He wrote plays for her and she, in turn, dedicated her life to the task of interpreting them to the world. She had tired of the conventional drama of the day and had been looking for something greater. She found it in D'Annunzio. But his drama was over the heads of her audiences. They did not seem to find their beloved Duse in his heroines and everywhere she got nothing but a cold reception.

She Had Faith In His Genius.

But she believed in him, just as she believed in her art, and, although she was even hissed during a performance in Naples in 1898, she kept on, sinking most of her hard-earned fortune into the lavish productions which his plays demanded. With an almost fanatical faith she hoped against hope, but the conflict of the two geniuses was too great. She was used to a free hand in the creation of her own interpretations and he hemmed her in with all sorts of minute stage directions. As a result her audience was left bewildered and she grew sadder and sadder as they rejected her most magnificent efforts.

She had known from the very beginning that they would find little peace, for on that first night he had sent her red roses. And her roses were white. Then, too, she soon realized that in his lust for creation he was hungering after the vigor and beauty which could be found only in a younger woman. As Fate closed in upon her, she refused to recognize it. The intense suffering of her tortured soul became too terrible for human to bear. The end had to come.

Whimsy a la Croesus.

Recently there pulled into the harbor of New York a boat, loaded with passengers. When they had landed, their passage money was refunded. None knew why.

The story came out later.

As the boat was being nosed into her pier, there might have been seen on the upper deck, smoking a large cigar, an extremely wealthy gentleman. The cigar is the nub of the story.

As the vessel pulled out of its European dock, this same gentleman pulled out a similar cigar and began to smoke. The captain approached him politely: there was a ruling about smoking on the deck . . . The gentleman went on smoking, and inquired how much it would cost him to charter the boat for the trip. A price was gotten from the astounded captain, agreed to without argument—and the gentleman went on smoking.

Which reminds one of the famous "Bet-a-Million" Gates. Entering an Eastern hotel back in the '90s, Gates asked for accommodations. He did not get exactly what he wanted. He remonstrated, mildly. The clerk grew insolent. Gates said not a word, but walked into the office of the manager. In 15 minutes he came out. A minute latter the manager came out. To the clerk he said, "Here is a month's salary. You are to leave at once." Gates had bought the hotel. His first request after signing the papers had been that the clerk find himself another job.

There is a similar story told about "Death Valley" Scotty. Once, on one of his myterious, periodic trips on a specially chartered train from the West to East, he had stopped in an Eastern hotel at the end of his journey. He was tired and, being an unconventional fellow, sat down on the first resting place that he found. A solicitous manager informed him that that bench was reserved for the bell-hops. Scotty declined to move, merely unlaced his shoes, and asked how much the hotel was worth. Without arising, lawyers were called in, papers were drown up, Scotty purchased the hotel, and went on with his nap.

The most recent tale of this sort concerns a young chap near Washington who was left a rather good-sized fortune. He was of a family of sport-minded people, and had a great yen to play baseball. He heard of a baseball team that was being organized nearby, funds for the support of the players being gotten together through shares in a corporation. He approached the manager of the team. "I want to play first base," he suggested. "You can play right field," returned the manager. "We've got a first-baseman."

The gentleman of money went out and found where he could buy shares that would give him a controlling interest in the club. He returned to the manager. "I'm going to play first base," he said quietly.

The man who had been hired for that job is now catcher on the team.

Keep Off the Lamp Post!

It is barely possible that the mood having fallen upon you, nothing would satisfy your craving but a good, old-fashioned climb up the lampost in front of your house. But, take care, sir! There is a law about it.

The Commissioner's Notice applying here states definitely: "No person, not an employe of the District of Columbia . . . or of a contractor for the lighting or painting of public lamps shall climb any lamppost."

These notices are made public annually. Some are worthy of particular attention. These are presented here verbatim.

"Scissors grinders may, for the purpose of attracting attention to their business, ring a bell not to exceed 2⅜ inches in diameter at the bottom and 1⅜ inches in height perpendicular from the level to the crown of the bell in such manner as will not disturb the comfort or quiet of any neighborhood.

"Horned cattle may be led singly by a rope or halter through any of the streets in the District of Columbia. A cow and calf may be led together, if the cow be so secured. No loose herd or flock may be driven or conducted in the D. C. except on permit . . . which permit will designate the route and time such herd or flock may be driven or conducted. No person shall wash or clean any vehicle, or water, feed or clean any horse, mule cow or other animal with 15 feet of any public hydrant or pump within the D. of C. No person under 16 years of age shall drive or conduct any animals.

"It shall be the duty of the owner, proprietor, or person in charge of any store or shop where bicycles, motor bicycles, tricycles or similar vehicles are left for repair, to keep a written record of the number and make of each vehicle so left, together with the name and residence of the owner of such vehicle and the name and residence of the person leaving such vehicle at said store or shop.

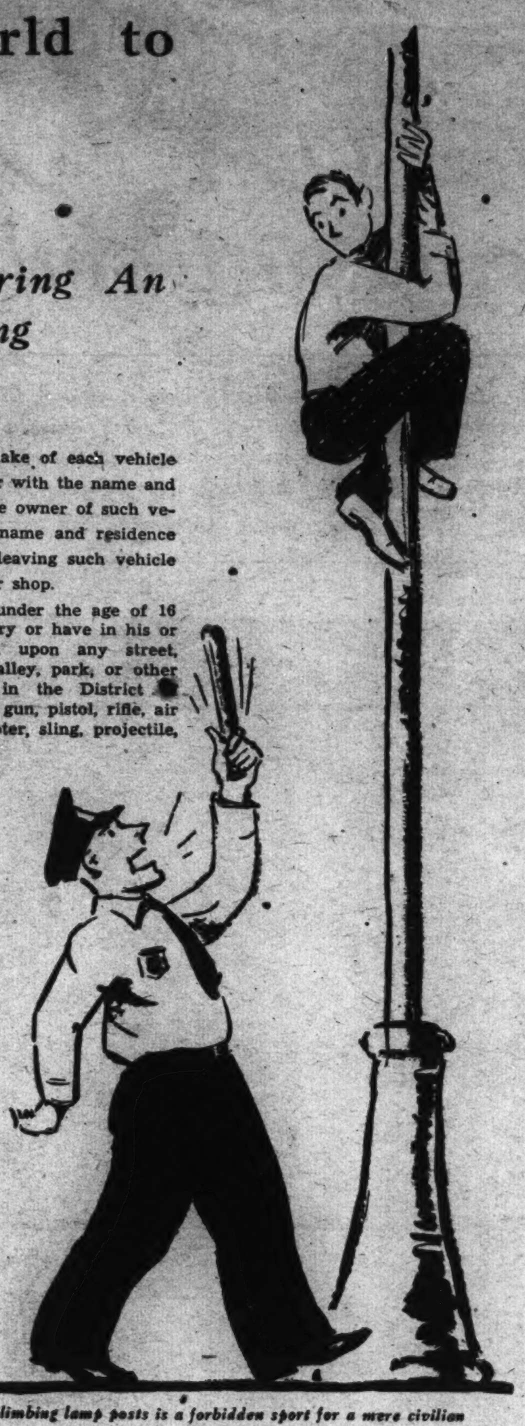
"No person under the age of 16 years shall carry or have in his or her possession upon any street, avenue, road, alley, park, or other public space in the District [illegible] Columbia, any gun, pistol, rifle, air gun, bean shooter, sling, projectile, dart, or other dangerous weapon of any character.

"No person shall thaw or attempt to thaw frozen dynamite except by means of a thawing kettle or other device approved by the engineer commissioner.

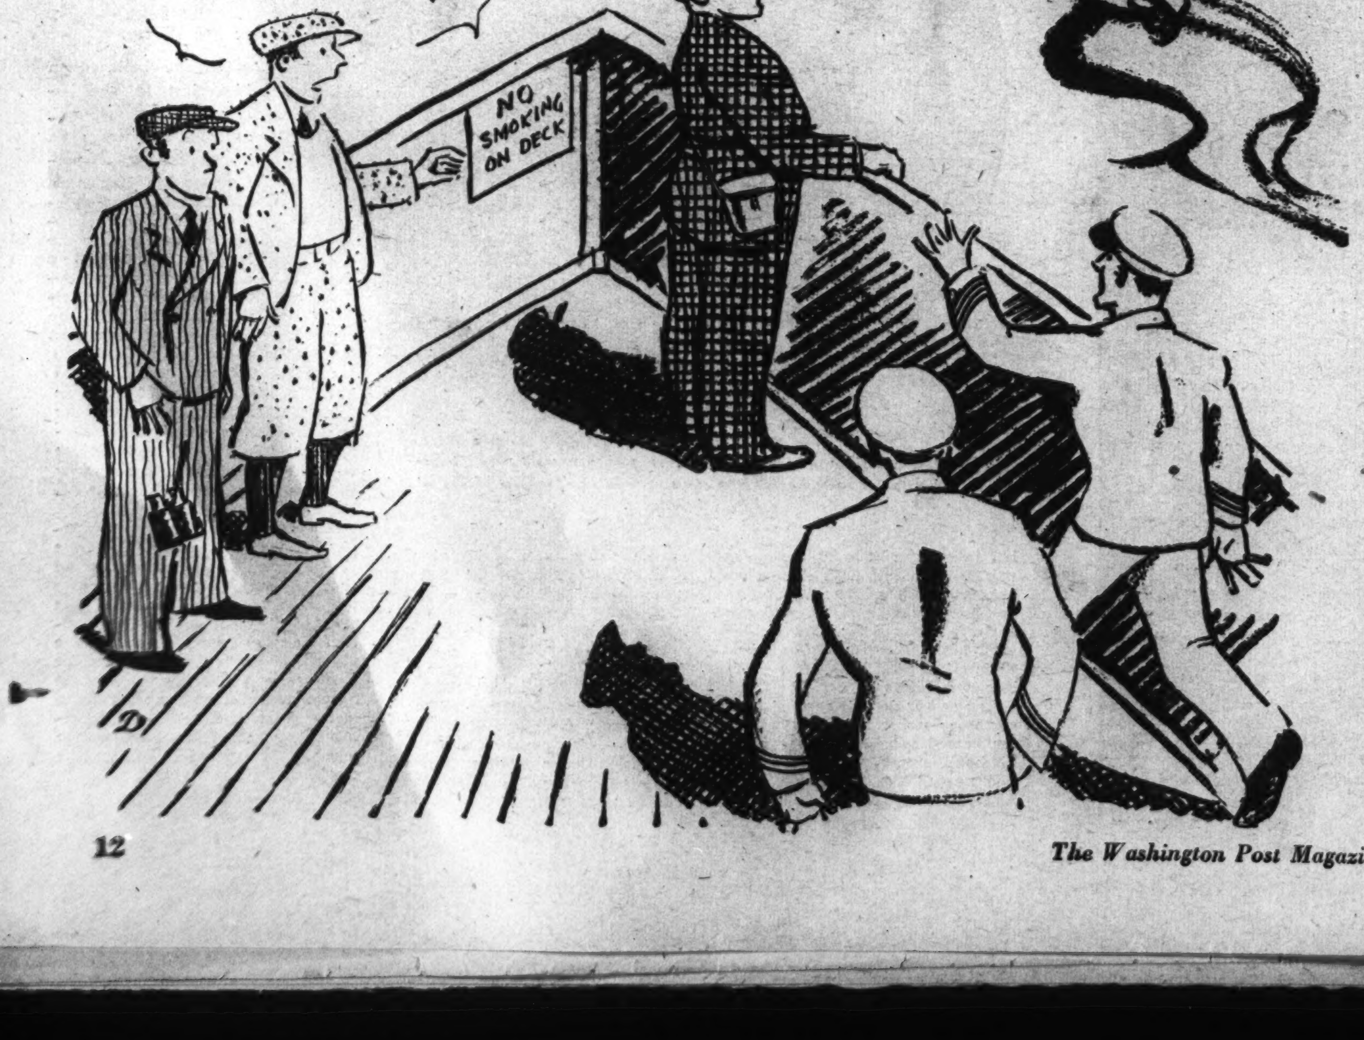
"No auctioneer shall employ puffers or encouragers, whose intention shall be to raise the price upon bona fide bidders, or endeavor to induce bona fide bidders to purchase any of the property so offered at auction.

"No person shall fasten, tie, or hitch any horse, mule, or other animal to any fire-alarm or patrol box.

"No mechanical device or machine or apparatus or instrument for intensification of the human voice or of any sound or noise, nor any bell, horn, gong, whistle, drum, or other noise-making article, instrument or device, shall be struck, sounded, used, operated, or caused to be used or operated on or in any street, avenue, alley, highway, footway, sidewalk, parking, or other public space, nor shall loud noises be made by any such article, instrument, or device in or about barrooms, hotels, or other public places for any purpose whatsoever. Only on the occasion of conventions, inaugurations, reunions, and encampments, shall be the Major and Superintendent of Police issue blanket permits for the playing of music by bands, or mechanical devices, machines, apparatus, instruments for the intensification of music, sound, or noise however transported, being or accompanying processions or parades."



Climbing lamp posts is a forbidden sport for a mere civilian in the District of Columbia.



He preferred to charter the ship and pay the fare of the other passengers, rather than throw a good cigar in the sea.

Martha Resorted to Arson to Hide Evidence That Would Discredit Her

Slander

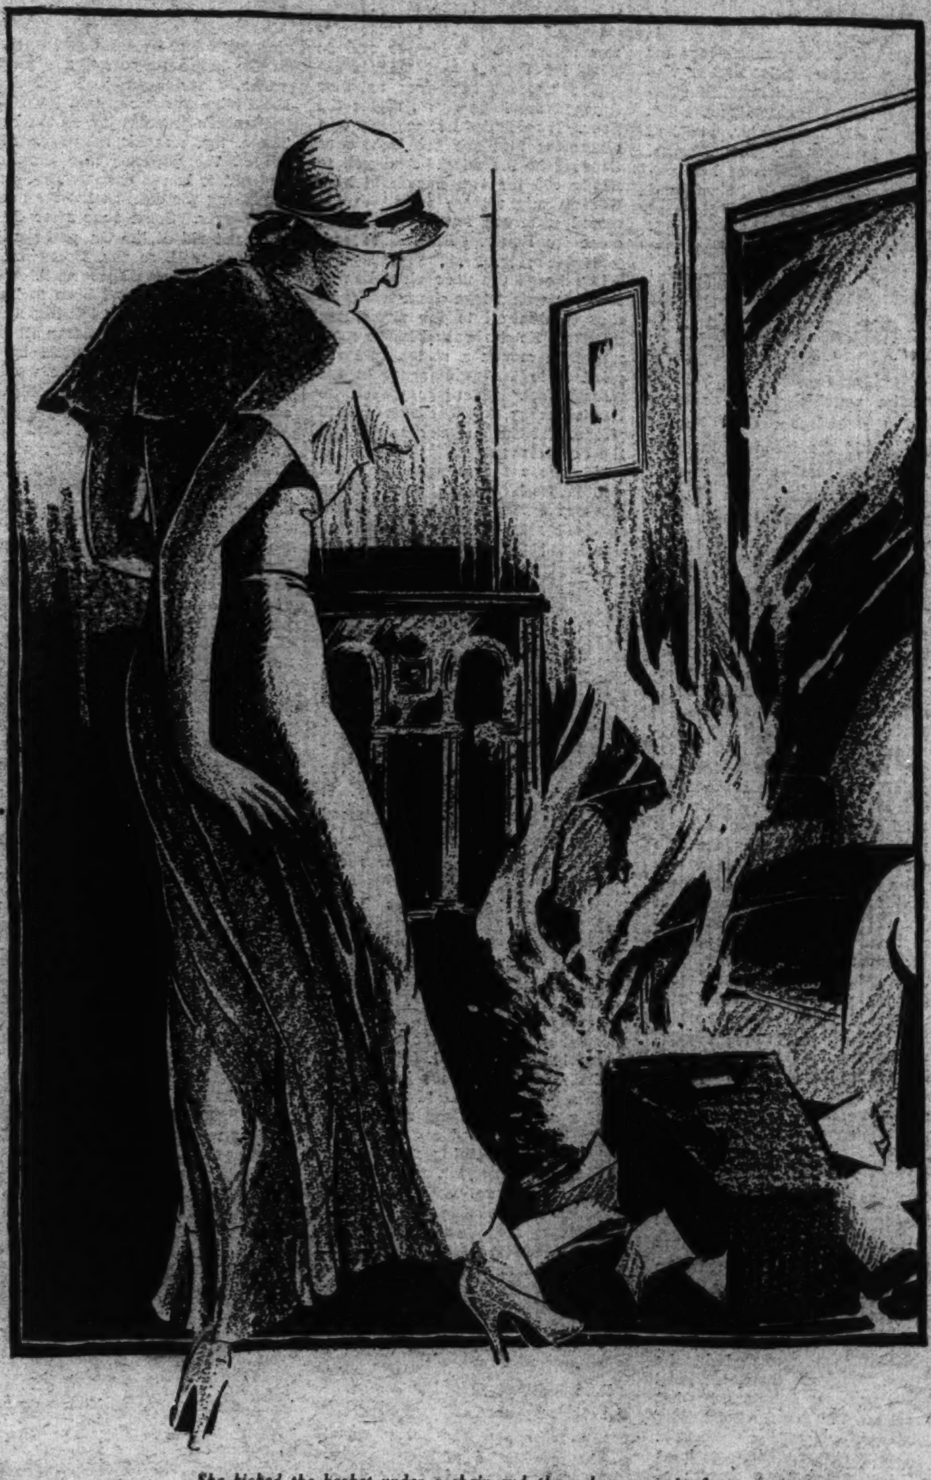
By ARTHUR SOMERS ROCHE

Gerald Gerrish has advanced money to Martha Blaisdell on her own securities and spread rumors that he is supporting her. When she remonstrates, he brings suit against her, charging the money was advanced on her promise to marry him. She breaks her engagement to Herbert Cranston, because of the scandal; he goes to her home and finds Gerrish dead there. He has attempted to create further scandal by his presence, and has died from an apoplectic stroke. Cranston telephones for Dr. Baxter, who is also in love with Martha, to help her out of this situation.

A NEWSPAPERMAN had once told Cranston of the horror of awaiting an execution. He said that the 15 minutes before the criminal was led to the death chamber seemed, paradoxically, to last 15 years and also to have terminated in 15 seconds. And the spectators, he said, were more nervous than the condemned man. Fright had stupefied him.

Cranston felt the same sensation now. Later on he realized that Baxter had telephoned in less than 20 minutes, but while he waited they seemed as many years. Yet, extraordinarily, he could almost see the minutes racing by. He could never explain this oddity, any more than the newspaper reporter could explain the swift and slow passage of time before the execution.

Martha said nothing during the wait. Cranston, watching her closely, yet trying to be casual about it, uttered no word. He was afraid that further conversation would rob her of the self-control for which she fought so bravely. They might have been, he mused bitterly, two grief-stricken mourners watching over the dead, instead of being two people who hated the man in the next room. For it was hate that Cranston felt. Death is supposed to remove from generous hearts all bitterness toward the one who has passed away, but Gerrish's evil was Shakespearean in that it certainly lived after him.



She kicked the basket under a chair and the valance caught fire.

Telephone Rang.

He did not realize how nervous he was until the telephone rang. But he stumbled as he crossed the room to the instrument and for a moment he could not phrase the simple syllables, "Hello."

"Dr. Baxter speaking."

"This is Cranston. I'm at Martha Blaisdell's apartment. Don't tell even your nurse that you're talking to me. Get over here just as soon as you possibly can."

"I'll be there instantly," said Baxter.

Cranston looked at the girl; she was in an apathy now; although she knew to whom Cranston had been speaking there was not the faintest sign of interest on her features. Once again he sat down before her.

"Peter will be here in a minute," he said.

She looked at him through eyes over which a glaze seemed to have been spread, and her shoulders shrugged faintly. She was very like, Cranston thought, that criminal whom the reporter had described to him. For dread can bring on a dullness of emotion that resembles indifference.

He lighted a cigarette and had smoked it almost to the end when the apartment bell rang. He crushed out the cigarette and admitted Baxter.

News Is Broken.

"Didn't announce myself; came right up. Martha ill?"

There was something about the crispness of his speech that gave Cranston confidence; even into Martha's eyes came a glimmer of hope.

"She's all right," said Cranston quickly. "But Gerrish is in the next room—dead."

Baxter's eyebrows, as red as his hair, lifted. But without a word to Martha he walked to the bedroom, opened the door and entered. Cranston followed him and noted the swift competence of the examination. He saw Baxter examine the dead man's eyes. Then he straightened up.

"Cerebral hemorrhage, I should say," he announced. He sniffed the air. "Been drinking heavily, which didn't help. Now let me hear about it."

Cranston led him into the living room, and Martha looked up.

"Now, Martha," said Cranston, "Pete is here. Just tell him everything and don't be frightened."

More briefly that she had recounted the tale to Cranston, she repeated it now to Baxter, who listened in utter silence. As she finished, Cranston took up the story.

"You can see, Pete, that it's impossible that Gerrish should be found here."

Baxter nodded.

"But it's equally impossible that he should be found anywhere else," he said. "Unless—if no one knew he were here?" He looked questioningly at Martha.

She shook her head slowly.

"Unless he told some one he was coming here, I don't think any one knows. You see, he boasted that every one would think he spent the night here, although he only came in about 6 o'clock, he told me. He said that he guessed that after last night at the Hyslops' I wouldn't want to stay at Trudie's. Oh, he was shrewd, cunning. He said that he slipped up the stairs and that the hallman and the elevator boy hadn't seen him. He told me that they couldn't testify that he came in this morning."

"But he knew you could prove you weren't here last night," said Baxter.

"He didn't care what I could prove. All he cared about was making things look dreadful. Scandal doesn't have to be proved; it only has to be mentioned."

Baxter Offers Aid.

Baxter hardly heard her. His forehead was furrowed now, and Cranston, who had concentrated until his brain was dizzy, wondered if the doctor could see any way out of the difficulty. The problem had baffled Cranston and he prayed now that it would not be as unsolvable to Baxter.

"If we could get him out of here—if we could get him to my office——" Baxter's voice died away, although his lips kept on moving. His voice became audible again. "He could have come to me as a patient."

"After what you said to those subpena servers last night?" objected Cranston.

"No, not as a patient," Baxter corrected himself. "But as a drunken man, enraged—that would be plausible enough."

"But wouldn't it be known that he died a long time before?"

Baxter waved aside this objection of Cranston's.

"It's getting him there—in broad daylight. There's no one at the clinic. I saw my patient and the nurse has gone. Not a soul there. If we could get him there—the time of his death wouldn't matter. There'd be nothing suspicious about it. And it would be better to say that the man regretted last night and that he'd come to me to apologize."

Plan Holds Water.

"And involve you in a scandal that might ruin you!" cried Martha.

"Now that is too silly to debate," said Baxter. "There's no scandal in a man dying in a doctor's office. And for that matter, I'd stick to my first story. A drunken man does all sorts of unreasonable things. He was close to delirium tremens and came to me because my name was in his mind. He just came, that's all. Let it go at that. And died there before I could treat him. Let's reach the bridge that leads to my office before we try crossing later bridges. How can we get him there?"

"We can dress him and carry him downstairs to your car," said Cranston.

Baxter's head shook impatiently.

"With an elevator man and a hallboy downstairs? Impossible. It will be in the papers—it has to get in the papers. They'd read about it; they'd remember that I helped carry a man out of here. If it waren't for that, we could pretend he was drunk——"

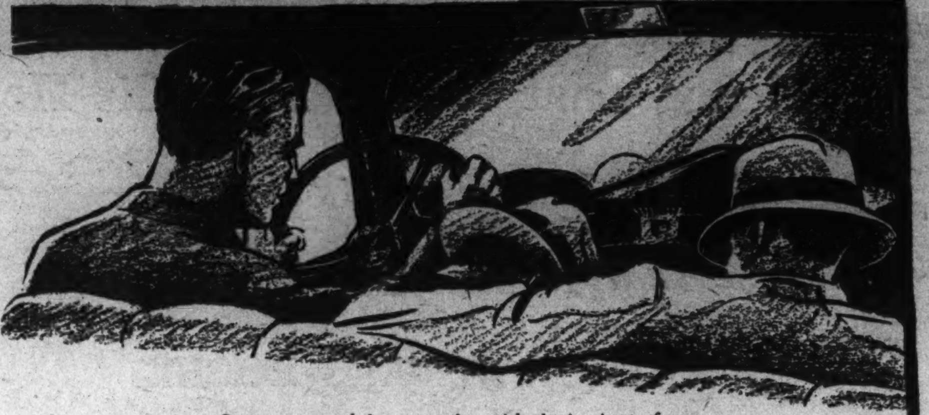
Into his voice, into his eyes, came the same hopelessness that had been in the voices and eyes of Martha and Cranston.

A great sob came chokingly from Martha's throat.

Details Plotted.

"You're sweet, both of you," Martha said, "but nothing can be done. You'd better phone the police, Pete."

"Wait a bit," said Cranston. He



Cranston pretended conversation with the inanimate figure.

stared at Martha. "Do the stairs go around the elevator?"

She looked at him uncomprehendingly, but shook her head.

"No; they're separate from the elevator."

Cranston turned to the doctor.

"Listen," he whispered excitedly. "We'll dress him and take him down one flight of stairs. Then Martha can drop a lighted match in a waste basket. Stuff it full of newspapers. Wait until it's blazing and then telephone downstairs. Tell the hallman to come right up. Tell him to bring the elevator man with him. Tell him not to telephone the fire department because the two of them can put it out easily. We'll go down to the last landing; one of us can see if the coast is clear; if it is, we'll carry Gerrish to your car."

"But people on the street may see you do it," objected Martha.

"What of it? He'll be just a drunken man, or a sick man, to them. They'll never connect this incident with what they may happen to read in tomorrow's papers."

No Risk at All.

"But some one may see you carrying him into the clinic," protested Martha.

Cranston frowned impatiently.

"If it were as simple as A B C, Martha; if there were no risks at all, we wouldn't have to do any figuring."

"Of course, there are a thousand chances of discovery, but there's one of success. And I'll take that chance if Pete will."

"Of course," asserted Baxter.

"But discovery would mean ruin for you both," cried Martha. "There must be a law against doing a thing like that. And breaking the law would ruin you as a doctor, Pete. And you might even go to jail, Bert. Why should I let you men take risks like that?"

Cranston smiled at her.

"If a man loves a girl he has a right to take risks for her," he said.

She looked at Baxter and the freckles on his face were obscured by the crimson tide that flooded over them.

"I can't let you do it, Pete. Or you, Bert. Why, you two men can dress him now and you can pretend that he—died—sitting here in the living room."

First Plan Better.

Baxter shook his head.

"I don't like it," he said. "In the first place it's going to come out that he brought suit against you. There will be speculation as to what he was doing here, as to how Bert and I happened to be here. It will look as though he were holding some sort of a conference, trying to come to some agreement with him. If there had been no trouble between you and him——"

"And between Bert and him," interjected Martha. "And last night you denounced those two men. But just the same," she added hastily, "you can't take the risks."

"I suppose, having thought the matter over carefully, the thing for Bert and myself to do is to walk out of here," said Baxter dryly. "But we're not going; we're going to see you through this. If some friend had happened to die in your apartment it would be entirely different. But you can be sure that Gerrish's office staff knows all about his actions. Gerrish was prominent in a left-handed sort of way. The gossip columns mention him occasionally. You can be sure that some of the newspapers know today about the summons served last night. One thing piles on top of another in a case like this. Don't you agree with me, Bert?

Both Loved Her.

"He can't be found here," said Cranston flatly. "I won't permit it. Martha has endured enough from that swine living; she's got to be spared from him dead. But the more we discuss it the less I like to drag you into it, Pete. I'm engaged to Martha; I love her. But there's no reason why you——"

Again Baxter's face flamed.

"I've just as much reason to want to help her as you have, Cranston," he said.

Cranston stared at him; he looked at Martha. Probably never in the world had an accepted lover been informed of another man's love for the girl under such bizarre circumstances. For a moment he meditated, utterly refusing Baxter's aid. It wasn't fair that Baxter, who had nothing to hope for from Martha, should take the chance of blackening his career. Then he realized that he himself, had he no hope of winning Martha, would nevertheless feel it a privilege to serve her. Why should he deny Baxter a similar privilege?

Torn by Indecision.

"Let's go in and dress him," he said.

Martha watched them as they closed the bedroom door behind them. Could she accept from these two men the possible sacrifice that their aid involved? After all she had been willfully blind; she should never have accepted Gerrish's easy assurance that all was well with her financially. She had laid herself open to censure. True, her carelessness had never deserved such punishment, but what right had she to evade even an undeserved punishment if evasion compromised others?

She thought for a moment of going to the telephone and calling the police. But the impulse died in her. After all, Bert and Pete might be able to save her. If they were discovered she would then confess everything, and certainly the two men could not be punished by the law for doing a chivalrous thing. Nevertheless, her conscience told her that she was accepting too much from them. She had accepted too much from Gerrish, and that had led to all these later dreadful happenings. If she loved Cranston truly, it would be different. A woman had a right to accept sacrifices from the man who loved her if she also loved him. But did she have such right when her love was only a pretense, only a way of escape?

Two Men Appeared.

Then, as she thought of the screaming newspaper headlines, of the cynical amusement in the eyes of strangers and the contempt in the eyes of acquaintances and the pity in the eyes of friends, she hardened herself.

The two men appeared in the doorway. Between them, his head dangling from his soulders, his hat crushed down on his forehead, they supported the figure of Gerrish. Her fingers touched her mouth as though to hold back a scream of horror.

"You be brave, Martha," said Cranston sternly. "Paper in the basket? Touch a match to it; wait till it blazes; phone downstairs and tell both men to come up. Insist they come instantly. Let a few things burn; it doesn't matter. I'll be back in 20 minutes."

An afterthought came to her.

"But the hall man—the elevator man—they must have seen you come here. They'll wonder that you aren't here now."

They'll Never Guess.

"Let them wonder," said Cranston. "If they ask any questions just tell them that we left together and must have walked downstairs. But they won't think of that. At least we've got to take the chance. Don't argue any more. Just be brave and do what I told you."

She averted her eyes as they dragged the loose figure across the floor. It reminded her vaguely of a scarecrow that she had once seen flapping in the wind. And yet, so firmly did the two men hold him, Gerrish might have passed to the casual observer for a man overcome by liquor. But if anyone looked closely. . . .

She heard the door close behind them; it would take them two minutes to descend to the street, she guessed. So she waited half a minute, then struck a match and applied it to the newspapers in the wastebasket. Then she walked to the telephone, not her own private phone, but the one connected with the desk downstairs.

"There's a fire in my room," she said to the hallman. "You and the elevator man can easily put it out, so don't ring the fire department, but bring the elevator man right up with you, please."

Fire Blazed.

The hallman didn't even answer, but the bang of the receiver told her he would not delay. She ran to the middle of the floor and kicked over the blazing basket. She thrust one of the flaming papers beneath an overstuffed chair and the valance caught fire immediately. It was blazing fiercely as she opened the door to admit the two employes.

In a minute the blaze was extinguished.

"How'd it happen, Miss Blaisdell?" asked the panting elevator man.

"I was careless," she replied. "I lighted a cigarette and tossed the match into the basket. Which was a very foolish thing to do, but I thought the match was out."

The hallboy grinned.

"I'm going to burn my joint down some night," he said. "I fell asleep with a cigarette in my mouth last week, but it burned my hand and woke me up. Nothing else we can do? You ain't scared, are you?"

She shook her head and pressed into his hand a sizable bill; she gave its mate to the other amateur fireman. Beaming, assuring her that it had been no trouble at all and a real pleasure, they departed. She sank upon the couch and stared at the damaged chair.

Must Not Think.

Bert and Pete should be almost at the clinic by now. She glanced out the window and her heart leaped as she saw that a sudden thunderstorm had arisen. That would drive people off the streets. The pleasant park by the clinic would be deserted. No one—with luck—would see Peter and Bert carry their burden into the doctor's office. Of course, people might be watching from windows, but she mustn't think of that. Fate had not been very kind to her recently; perhaps fate would make amends this morning for its recent cruelties.

She looked at the clock on a table. They had been gone ten minutes now. Perhaps they'd telephone her if and when all was well. But probably they wouldn't. Even the most guarded utterance might later on arouse a reminiscent suspicion in the mind of an operator who might have handled the call and overheard a sentence.

She felt a sudden faintness, reaction from near-hysteria, and walked to the bathroom to get a glass of water. Her head was splitting; she'd take an aspirin first.

Gerrish's pajamas lay on the bed. There, too, was his handbag. She stuffed the pajamas into the bag and put it in the closet. That was something she didn't want the maid to discover. Some time after dark she'd get rid of it. Or, perhaps, if all went well, so far, Bert would take it away and dispose of it.

How good Bert had been to her! Now, she could never tell him that she didn't love him. After all he had done today, that would be a cruelty too great. And she would never let him guess that she didn't care.

And how good Pete had been! He had no false pride; frankly, when Cranston had balked at letting Pete help, the doctor had admitted that he, too, cared for her. She didn't deserve the love of two such men. No girl could be worthy of such love. And it was a love not based on long acquaintance, on knowledge of any merit she might have. They just loved her. And her eyes flooded with tears of gratitude and weakness.

Gerrish Wanted.

The clang of a telephone brought her from her reverie. It was Cranston or Pete, she was sure, to tell her that all was well, or—she refused to face the alternative.

"Hello," she said into the mouthpiece.

"Mr. Gerrish's man speaking," said a strange voice. "May I speak to Mr. Gerrish?"

She felt an actual pain in the pit of her stomach; her heart skipped a beat. Then, trying to make her voice steady, she answered.

"Mr. Gerrish isn't here," she said.

"When did he leave?" asked the man.

"He hasn't been here," she replied.

"Very well, ma'am," said the man.

But as she hung up she knew that it wasn't very well; it wasn't well at all. Gerrish's man knew, or at least suspected, that his master had been here. That complicated matters. Terror came racing back to her.

Cranston Ordered Out.

"And now," said Peter Baxter, "you hustle out of here."

Cranston stared at the doctor. He felt that reluctance which a man of courage feels at letting another shoulder all of the burden that rightfully should be shared. More than that! By rights Cranston should carry all of the load. He was the man whom Martha Blaisdell loved and the gift of her love entailed obligations that ought not be paid by another.

He ran a finger inside his soft collar. Had the collar been laundered stiff it would have been limp now. And not merely the mugginess of the morning nor the exertion of his recent task had brought the moisture to his throat; sheer, stark terror, the kind of panicky fight that once or twice had attacked him in the loneliness of the jungle, had opened now the pores of his skin.

He was and always had been a law-abiding man. There had been times, in his absences from civilization, when he had been compelled to make and enforce his own laws, but there had always been, on those occasions, the soul-supporting knowledge that unless he became the law-giver and law-enforcer, destruction would overwhelm his expedition. But, save in those exigencies when he must rely upon his own sense of what was right, he respected the law.

Death Inspires Awe.

Now he feared it. It was all very well to assure himself that he and Baxter were doing nothing wrong, were, in fact, doing something decent. But death is awe-inspiring always, and when death is accompanied by secrecies and evasions it becomes terrifying.

There was no question but that the law objected to furtive transference of a body. The law provided ways and means for such transference, and there must be heavy penalties for the act that he and Baxter had just now committed. Not only must there exist those penalties, but the very fact that he and Baxter had risked them would in itself arouse suspicion. All the circumstances—and these must inevitably come to light—would add to the suspicion. He, Cranston, had quarreled with and threatened Gerrish; only last night Baxter had defied Gerrish's process servers. That Gerrish's death had not been due solely to natural causes might even occur to the police.

Blocked by Traffic.

He had been calm enough as he and Baxter carried the limp body down the stairs of Martha's apartment house. As they passed through the fortunately deserted lobby to the sidewalk, Cranston's grip of Gerrish's waist had been firm. There had been no trembling of his hands as he assisted Baxter in placing Gerrish in the coupe. He had even been careful enough to pull Gerrish's hat down over his face as the car started off. There had been people across the street, but they had been occupied with their own conversation, with their own concerns. Cranston doubted if any of them had even noticed the apparently drunken man who was assisted into the little car.

As a traffic block held them up at Broadway, Cranston had been quick-witted enough to pretend a conversation with the inanimate figure so tightly wedged between himself and Baxter. And his mind had been clear enough, as they neared St. John's Square, to appreciate the happy chance of the sudden thunderstorm that sent pedestrians scurrying for shelter. He had been cool enough to appreciate why Peter Baxter drove completely around the square before stopping in front of his clinic. He realized that Baxter was making certain that there would be no observers. And there had been no failing of Cranston's nerves as he and the doctor carried Gerrish into the clinic.

But now, with Gerrish sprawled upon a couch, Cranston's overtaut nerves asserted themselves.

Laugh Helped Nerves.

"I can't leave you alone here with him," Cranston protested. "Suppose some one saw us carry him in here! You've got to have some one to back up your story."

"I can't have any one to back it up," said Baxter. "If any one can corroborate it then my story isn't true. And there's a paradox for you," he laughed.

If he hadn't laughed Cranston would have given way to his nerves. Vaguely he realized that even as he had slapped Martha's face to stop hysteria, so Peter Baxter was exaggerating his own coolness to calm Cranston. His face, that had been deadly white, flushed now.

"I know you're right, but it seems so damn yellow to leave you here—suppose somebody saw us carry him in here?"

"We've been all over that," said Baxter. "I don't think any one did. And as a matter of fact, who's going to connect one thing with another? You'd better let me prescribe a stiff drink for you."

Cranston shook his head.

"Well, if you won't, then you'd better get out of here," said Baxter.

"But isn't there anything I can do?" demanded Cranston.

"Not a thing in the world," replied the other.

Still Cranston hesitated.

"I think you're one swell person, Pete," he said.

"You're all right yourself," grinned Baxter. "Now get out of here," he went on brusquely. "Remember you've never been here."

"I'll never forget it," said Cranston. "I don't know what Martha and I would have done without you. We owe you more——"

"You owe me nothing," interrupted Baxter. "Does a man think of payment when he's able to serve a girl—will you get out?"

Cranston wheeled; the interchange of speech had completely restored his coolness. He was even thoughtful enough to pull his light felt hat brim down over his eyes. He turned up his coat collar and hunched his shoulders as he stepped into the driving rain. The downpour made it seem natural that he should hide his face, and never had he been more grateful for a thunderstorm.

At Third avenue he picked up a taxi and alighted before a drug store on Eighth street. From the clerk at the prescription counter he procured an asperin tablet which, though not needing it, he swallowed. But if questions were asked he would not only have an answer but corroboration of that answer. Then, collar still up and brim still down, he ran through the rain to Martha's apartment.

Excuses Made.

The elevator man eyed him in surprise.

"Say, weren't you calling on Miss Blaisdell a while ago?"

Cranston nodded.

"Frightful headache; went to the drug store for an asperin; raining so hard I didn't come back sooner."

"You missed some excitement that almost made me need an asperin," grinned the man. "Miss Blaisdell tossed a match in a waste basket and started a sweet little blaze. No real damage, though. You must have walked down," he added idly.

"I ran down," said Cranston. "One of those headaches that drive you almost crazy for a minute or two."

"Don't I know!" exclaimed the elevator operator. "Me, I think I'll stick to beer. That bath tub gin about splits my knob open. Well, hope you're okay now."

He threw open the elevator door and Cranston pressed the bell of Martha's apartment. As the man descended Martha opened the door.

No Cause for Fear.

He took her hands swiftly in his own.

"Everything's all right. Not a thing on earth to worry about. Pete will take care of everything from now on."

He released one hand while he shut the door, then led her to the couch.

"You're not to think of anything that's happened, Martha," he told her.

She smiled wanly; he felt the faintest pressure of her fingers.

"You're sweet, Bert," she said, "but Gerry's man phoned."

He dropped her hand.

"What do you mean?" he asked harshly.

"He telephoned—soon after you went out. He said he was Mr. Gerrish's man and asked if he could speak to Gerry. I told him he wasn't here, and he asked when he left, and I replied that he hadn't been here."

"What did he say then?" demanded Cranston.

"I don't know. 'Very well' or something like that."

"Well, there's nothing to be frightened about."

She sighed hopelessly.

Still Entirely Safe.

"But don't you see, Bert? He must have told his man that he was coming here! When he's found dead——"

He heard the rising note in her voice that had been there earlier.

"He won't be found dead," he said. "In the office of the doctor to whom he went for treatment, he died. His death will be reported through the usual channels. There's nothing extraordinary about it. That he told his man he could be found at your apartment means nothing."

"Unless some one knows he came here," she said. Her voice was definitely shrill again.

"Martha, you mustn't give way to fear. I'll slap your face," he threatened.

The unexpectedness of his words, and the threatening gesture with which he accompanied them, were enough to restore her to a quasi-coolness.

"I won't break down, Bert," she promised, "but I'm frightened."

"Of course you are. Who wouldn't be? I'm scared myself. But that doesn't mean that we have anything really of which to be afraid. Why not wait until something happens? The chances are in our favor that nothing will happen."

Not Placated.

But her mind, terror inspired, was too active, refused to be placid at his suggestion.

"I know—Pete's a doctor, but still—he can't simply say that a man died in his office and get away with it."

"He seems to think he can and he ought to know," Cranston assured her. "Martha, talk doesn't get us anywhere. Thinking gets us nowhere. You'll only get yourself in a terrible state if you worry any longer. I tell you again there's nothing unusual in what happened. You've got to be brave, Martha. You've got to act as though nothing in the world has gone wrong. And nothing will be wrong. The apartment employes suspect nothing. I told one of them, when I came in just now, that I'd gone out to the drug store. I even went to a drug store and even took an aspirin, just in case I had to prove it later. I didn't take my car because I thought I'd find a drug store around the corner. I was gone some time because I stepped in a doorway to avoid the sudden rain. I didn't take the elevator downstairs because my headache was so frightful that I couldn't even wait the few seconds the elevator might take to get upstairs. Does all that sound logical and convincing?"

She nodded dumbly.

Alibis Prepared.

"Now just suppose you're questioned. I can't see why you will be, but just suppose. You and I quarreled last night. We'd just become engaged but we quarreled. It was a trivial quarrel. Now let's think of something trivial. I wanted to visit Orken in Denmark on our honeymoon. You wanted to go to Honolulu. We fought over that."

"But that's too ridiculous," she protested.

"All lovers' quarrels are ridiculous," he smiled. "The more absurd the occasion for the quarrel the more convincing it seems. So, in a tee-wee, you got up early in the morning and came in to New York."

"But I left a note for Trudie, telling her the real reason," she objected.

"Trudie isn't going to tell any one what was in that note," he assured her. "She'll say what we tell her to say, like the good sport she is. You wrote her that we'd had a quarrel and that I was obstinate and pigheaded and you didn't want to see me again. I think Trudie will tell a white lie for us."

"But what's the object?"

Can't Think Clearly.

"The object is to minimize as much as possible the fact that Gerrish ever lived. That's all," he said. "Just to make it certain—if suspicion should be aroused—that you couldn't have had a rendezvous with Gerrish. Oh, I know that your friends wouldn't think such a thing, but if this valet talks—but that's absurd. Gerrish knew that you were in Long Island last night, knew it well enough to send those process-servers out there, so it's obvious he didn't expect to find you in your apartment last night."

He passed his hand wearily across his forehead.

"I'm so mixed up that I'm not thinking clearly. What I'm driving at is that we don't want it to seem that Gerrish's suit affected you, in your relations with me, in the slightest. And the best thing to do is to go back to Trudie's now."

"Why?" she asked.

"Suppose reporters find out about Gerrish's suit? His sudden death will make them want to interview you. God knows why their minds would act that way but they would. But if you're out of town the whole thing will blow over in a day or so. Cold news is no news. Besides, you can't stay here; you'll brood and worry. Your bag is still packed, isn't it?"

"Yes."

Friends Are Loyal.

"Then we'll just take it down to my car and go out to Green Point."

"Then, if the newspapers do want to question me, they'll send reporters out to Trudie's and drag her name into the affair," she objected.

"And what makes you think that Trudie would mind that?" he encountered. "Good lord, Martha, what do you think friends are for? If you hadn't been a stupid little girl you'd never have left Green Point."

"And then my maid or cook would have found him here," she shuddered.

"Of course," he admitted. "I told you I wasn't thinking clearly. But who could? Gerrish was so bizarre that his actions set one's mind off at a crazy angle. But forget him. Are you ready?"

She looked at him and something of the gayety that had entranced him when first he met her shone in her violet eyes.

"As soon as I've fixed my lips and powdered my nose I will be," she replied.

She opened a tiny compact and scrutinized herself carefully in the mirror. She applied lipstick to her mouth and dabbed her nose with a miniature puff. Cranston, even in his tense moment, found himself smiling.

Women are marvelous. No matter what the situation they could think of appearance. Still, conscious of looking one's best frequently enabled one to do one's best. And a person who could spend thought on her appearance was not in imminent danger of breaking down.

As she looked up at him he quelled an impulse to transfer some of that freshly applied lipstick to his own mouth. Tenderness was not in order at the moment; matter-of-factness was. So long as he could keep her mind fixed on the things that must be done she would be safe from reaction. Not for some time must there be any gentle interlude.

He noticed, with approval, that without any artificial aid the stringy quality had gone from her hair; there was life to her movements as she arose from the couch. All in all, she was a thoroughbred.

Bag Was Evidence.

They had reached the apartment door when she paused.

"He brought a handbag; I stuffed his pajamas in it. It's in my closet. I was afraid my maid would find it. We must get rid of it."

He looked at her with approval. His own mind had not been functioning too clearly, yet hers had not overlooked a detail that might prove important. Perhaps, he told himself, she had not been as close to breakdown as he thought. She had the kind of courage that enabled her to think coolly under stress. What a swine Gerrish had been to create stress for such a girl.

He went into the bedroom and from the closet floor picked up a handbag.

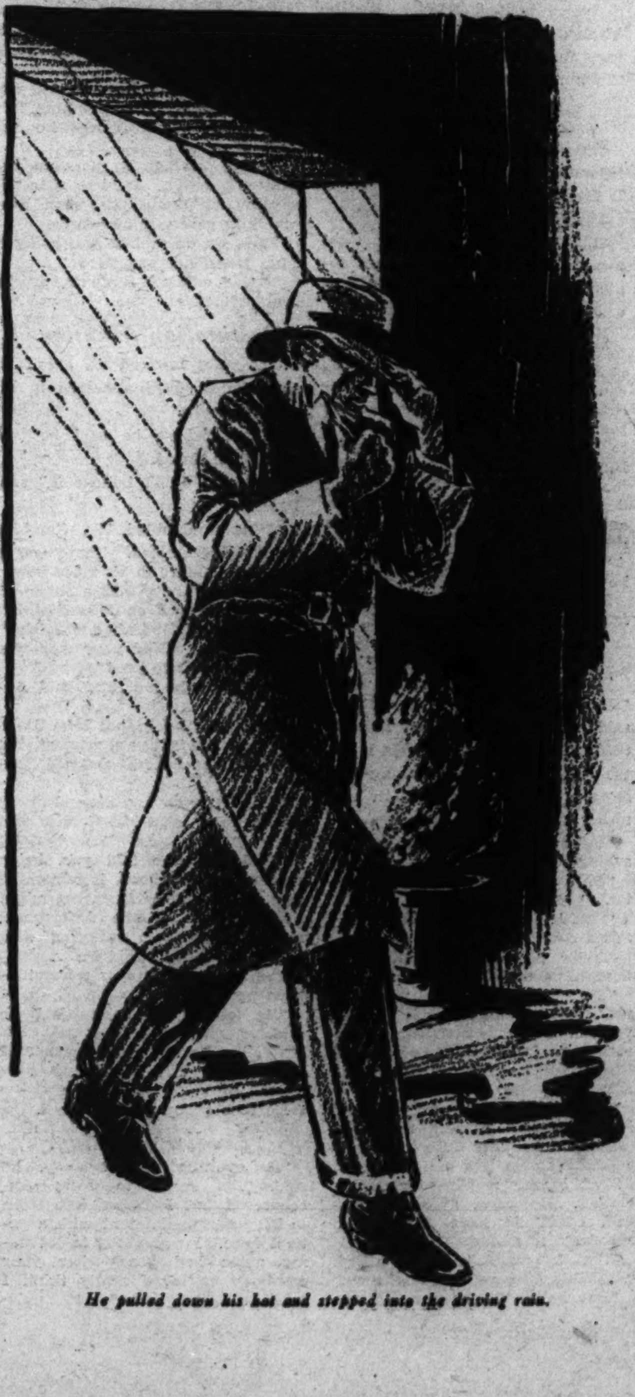
"This it?"

She nodded.

"Nothing else here? Hair brush, razor—anything at all?"

She shook her head.

"But shouldn't we phone Pete?" she unexpectedly asked.



He pulled down his hat and stepped into the driving rain.

"Why? That's the very thing we shouldn't do. We don't know where Pete is. If anything, we think he is at Trudie's. Why should we phone him?"

"I know," she said, "but—we're leaving him to carry it all, aren't we?"

He felt a momentary—and he realized unworthy—twinge of jealousy. All through the last hour or more he had fought against jealousy. It seemed to him that having to call in aid at a time like this reflected somehow on his own capacity to protect the girl he loved. He realized that he would not have felt this way had it not suddenly become known to him that Baxter, extraordinarily, was in love with Martha. Had Baxter been merely a mutual friend he would have had none of this feeling, and he knew it. It was cheap and ignoble to resent the fact that a man who loved Martha should be willing and able to do her service, and he tried to thrust the feeling from him.

"But he's the only one who can carry it, dear," he told her. "And now that he has picked up the load we'd knock it out of his hands if we interfered in any way. You see that, don't you?"

"I suppose so," she admitted. Her voice was dull again. "But it seems cowardly, doesn't it?"

"It seems sane," he replied.

"Oh," she cried with quick contrition, "I didn't mean that you were cowardly. I meant that I——"

"You've been the bravest girl in the world," he interrupted her. "You just continue to be brave."

"I will," she promised.

Baxter Plots Story.

Peter Baxter surveyed the body sprawled on the couch. Death was no novelty to him and he observed it with none of the horror of the layman. But this was an unusual death; this was a death in which he had evaded if not broken the law; it was death which might very well produce serious consequences for himself. Yet thought of these consequences was hardly in his mind as he surveyed the form of Gerrish. He was thinking of Martha Blaisdell, of the possible blighting scandal that would strike her if he made one false move. It must never be known—he must guard his tongue lest the faintest slip arouse suspicion—that Gerrish had been dead when he came into the clinic. The bringing in of a dead man, even by people other than the attendant physician, required notification of the coroner. But if a man came into a doctor's office, even though a stranger, and died there, there was no absolute necessity to notify the coroner.

So, then, Gerrish had come in here alive. He had asked for treatment to conquer incipient delirium tremens. As Baxter took his pulse the man dropped dead. Baxter had lifted him to a couch, started to administer restoratives and realized the man had died, unquestionably of cerebral hemorrhage. Gerrish had mentioned his name. Was there anything else that should be committed to memory?

He Tells Story.

He pondered a moment, then shook his head, and picked up the telephone directory. He thumbed its pages until he found Gerrish's residential telephone number. He called that number.

"This is Dr. Peter Baxter, of St. John's Clinic, St. John's Square, speaking. May I talk to Mrs. Gerrish?"

"Mrs. Gerrish is in Europe," said a voice.

"Then may I speak to any relative?" said Baxter.

"This is Ansted, Mr. Gerrish's valet," said the voice. There was faint apprehension in its tone. "Mr. Gerrish has no relatives here, sir. Is there anything I can do?"

Very deliberately Baxter chose his words.

"Mr. Gerrish came in here a few minutes ago and asked for treatment. He was suffering from acute alcoholism, verging on delirium tremens. Before I could administer any treatment whatsoever he died. Immediately, as soon as I recognized that he was beyond all possible medical aid—which was instantly—I telephoned his home. If you are the only person able to act——"

"Everything about his death is funny," Ansted said.

The valet's voice cut in on Baxter's measured utterance.

News Broken Harshly.

"Good God, doctor, you mean that Mr. Gerrish is dead?"

"I'm sorry to break the news so harshly, but it had to be done," replied Peter. "Matters like this allow of no delay, forbid evasion. Don't you think you'd better come down here right away? Do you wish me to send for an undertaker or would you prefer to select one yourself?"

The valet gasped.

"M-must I decide that right away?" he asked.

"It can wait until you get down here, but no longer than that. It's barely possible that other patients might come in——"

Peter hated himself for his own apparent callousness, but his attitude was required by the situation.

"Of course, doctor," agreed the valet. "But—I'd like to see my master's face again, and send for any undertaker, but let him stay where he is until I can see him."

"Of course," said Peter. "You'll be right down?"

Valet Rang Bell.

"Immediately," said Ansted.

Baxter lighted a cigarette; he sat deliberately down at his desk and began looking over some business papers. He was still engaged with them when Gerrish's valet rang the clinic bell. Baxter pressed a buzzer which released the catch on the door and a second later the valet was staring, with horrified eyes, at the body of his master.

He turned at length to the doctor.

"When did he die?"

This was a question that Baxter would have feared had it come from a medical man, who might have known that Gerrish had not been alive a quarter of an hour ago. But coming from one not of the medical profession, he didn't fear it.

"Just before I telephoned you," he said.

For a moment Ansted covered his face with his hands. Then, moving shakily, he walked a few feet and sat down in a chair.

"Have you phoned for an undertaker?" he asked.

"Not yet. Shall I do so now?"

The valet nodded. Baxter picked up the telephone, asked for a number and spoke briefly. He hung up and looked questioningly at Ansted.

"Have you cabled Mrs. Gerrish?"

The man shook his head.

"I—I'm too shocked to do anything."

"I'll gladly do it for you," offered Baxter.

The valet mopped his face with a handkerchief whose texture made Baxter inconsequentially wonder if it had ever been the property of Gerrish.

"No. I'll do it myself in a little while, doctor." His voice quavered, "wasn't there anything you could do for him?"

"There was nothing that I or any other medical man could have done," replied Baxter. "Hadn't any one—his own doctor—warned him that he couldn't drink with the kind of blood pressure he obviously had?"

"I'd warned him," replied Ansted. "But he didn't have any personal physician. He'd always been proud of his health, said he hadn't been to a doctor in 20 years."

Baxter hid the gratification that this statement gave him. There had been the fear in his mind that the valet would insist on sending for another physician who might have objected to issuing a certificate that Gerrish had died at the hour Baxter stated.

Warning Was Wise.

"Too bad he didn't listen to your warning; he might have been alive now."

The valet stared at Peter.

"How did he happen to come to you, doctor?" he asked.

"I don't know," replied Baxter, "unless it was that my name was in his mind. Last night I gave my name to two process servers. They were serving a summons in a suit brought by Mr. Gerrish, and I objected to the manner of the service. An intoxicated man's mind acts queerly. Gerrish must have felt an attack coming on; he must have realized that his condition was dangerous. And I suppose that my name entered his head; he probably forgot where he had heard my name, probably just knew that 'Doctor' prefixed my name, and so he came to me. But he seemed to have no recollection of me, of my having denounced the process servers last night. He simply opened the door when I pressed the buzzer, and asked if I were Dr. Baxter. I told him that I was, and he said that he was Gerald Gerrish, and said that he was sick. I started to take his pulse, having made him sit down first, and he collapsed. I looked up his name in the telephone book, and you know the rest."

To Cable Wife.

Ansted nodded slowly. He hid his face in his hands. The door bell rang and Baxter released the catch. Three men came in. Baxter greeted them, conferred with them in a whisper, then turned to Ansted.

"I've told these gentlemen that they must arrange details with you. Is that all right?"

The valet nodded.

"I'll cable Mrs. Gerrish right away. There'll be an answer tonight. If these gentlemen will take care of my master until then——"

No man, the saying goes, is a hero to his valet, and probably, Baxter thought, Ansted's sudden sobs were caused less by affection than by shock. Nevertheless, he mixed something in a glass, and gave it to the valet, who gulped it down. But he kept his gaze averted until the undertaker and his men had departed. Then he spoke to Baxter, and there was puzzlement in his small eyes.

"Did Mr. Gerrish come in a taxi?" he asked.

Baxter pursed his lips; he frowned slightly.

Clothing Not Wet.

"I really don't know," he said. "He didn't mention it. In fact, he said nothing beyond what I've already told you. And I guess I was too rattled to think of anything else. Even to a physician the affair was rather startling, you know."

"But no taxi man came in here asking for his fare?"

"Oh, certainly not," replied Baxter.

"Could he have walked here?" asked Ansted.

Baxter hesitated a moment, as though pondering his answer.

"Yes," he said slowly. "I see no reason why he shouldn't have walked. In fact, a man in Mr. Gerrish's condition might very well have been too nervous to ride in a taxicab."

"But his clothing wasn't wet, and it's been raining," said the valet.

Baxter nodded. He inwardly cursed his own lack of forethought in not having moistened Gerrish's clothes. But how, he asked himself, could he have foreseen so shrewd a line of questioning?

"No, it wasn't," he admitted. "Probably he came in a taxi, then."

"But he would have asked the driver to wait for him, wouldn't he?" asked Ansted.

Baxter laughed.

Questioning Persists.

"You or I would have, Ansted," he said, "but we're both sober. One can't compare the actions of a sober man to those of one who is intoxicated."

"I don't suppose we can," said Ansted. "He had no baggage with him?"

"Baxter's forehead wrinkled.

"Baggage? I don't understand."

"He left his apartment late last night—no, it was early this morning. He carried a handbag with him."

"Wasn't that a bit unusual?" asked Baxter. "Why did you let him, in his obvious condition—he was drunk, wasn't he, even then?"

The man nodded.

"I couldn't stop him; he was terrible when he'd been drinking."

"Do you know where he was going?"

Baxter waited in torment for Ansted's reply. It was slow in coming, as though the man were weighing carefully his words.

"Yes, sir, he said he was going to Miss Blaisdell's apartment."

"Going where?" Baxter's surprise was perfect.

Destination Mentioned.

The valet lowered his eyes, and the faintest flush appeared in his sallow cheeks.

"That's where he said he was going," he stated.

"But you didn't believe it," said Peter.

"I never doubted Mr. Gerrish's word," said Ansted. There was a trace of defiance in his voice now.

"Did you know that a summons had been served on Miss Blaisdell out on Long Island after midnight?" asked Peter. "Had your employer mentioned this to you?"

"Yes, he told me this," said Ansted.

"Then you knew that Miss Blaisdell was not in her apartment, but was on Long Island," asserted Baxter.

"I didn't know anything about it; I only knew what Mr. Gerrish told me."

"And what he told you, being evidently a falsehood, is something that might well be forgotten, might be set down to the unfortunate ravings of a man suffering with acute alcoholism," said Peter.

The man's shifty eyes were stubborn now.

"He took a bag with him," he said.

"Well, what does that mean? I don't think I follow you," said Peter.

He rose abruptly to his feet.

Handbag Missing.

"I'm overdue in the country," he said. "I'm sorry to seem discourteous, but I dashed into town to keep an appointment with a patient here. I was about to leave—my nurse had gone—when your employer called. I really think I must be leaving now."

"Then you can't tell me whether or not my master had a handbag; you can't tell me if he came in a taxi or not?"

"What the devil difference do either of those things make? He's dead and that seems to me the only important thing. What's in your mind?"

"I don't exactly know myself," replied Ansted. "All I can say is that I think its funny."

"What's funny?" demanded Peter.

The man moved uneasily in his chair. Nevertheless, although it was obvious that it was a tremendous effort for him to meet Peter's gaze, his eyes were fastened on the physician's face.

"I think everything about his death is funny," he said. "First off, he leaves his apartment at 5 in the morning carrying a handbag and telling me that he's going to Miss Blaisdell's apartment. Six or seven hours later he turns up in your office and dies. He didn't know you. I'd never heard him mention your name until early this morning and he talked everything over with me. And last night you butted in and told the men serving summons on Miss Blaisdell that my employer was a blackmailer. It's pretty hard for me to understand why he would go to you for treatment after that."

Suspicion Voiced.

"I've tried to explain to you the process of a drunken man's mind," said Peter.

"And the explanation doesn't seem to register with me," said Ansted. "I just don't get it."

Into Baxter's voice came that harshness which seemed to contrast so strangely with the gayety of his blue eyes.

"You'd better make yourself a bit clearer," he said.

And now the man's stubborn defiance became bold impertinence.

"If I were clear in my own mind you can bet your life I'd make it clear to you," he said. "And when it does become clear to me I'll certainly let you know what I'm driving at."

"You're English, aren't you?" asked Baxter.

"What's that got to do with it?"

"The English laws are very severe about blackmail and kindred matters, aren't they? And I suppose any Englishman would be justified in thinking that our laws were by comparison very mild. But they really aren't. When we catch a blackmailer over here we're apt to treat him just as severely as he is treated in England. That is, if sufficient pressure is brought to bear upon our prosecuting officials. There would be plenty of pressure brought to bear against anyone who tried to blackmail Miss Blaisdell. Your employer didn't realize that. I think it would be well if you did."

He Was Not There.

"I don't know what you're talking about," said Ansted.

"Yes, you do. You know perfectly well that if your employer said he was going to Miss Blaisdell's apartment he lied. She wasn't there. If she were, she wouldn't let him in. Furthermore, your employer knew that she was on Long Island."

"She could have come back, couldn't she?"

"That sounds plausible, doesn't it? That she'd have a rendezvous with a man who had been blackmailing her."

"Stranger things have happened," said Ansted insolently. "I want to know where he was from 5 this morning until he came in here."

"I haven't the faintest idea," said Baxter. "If you aren't satisfied with what I've told you, why don't you call in the police?"

Ansted rose from his chair

"Thanks for the sugestion," he said. "I may do that very thing."

Cranston, Gerrish's handbag tucked under one arm so that the initials would not show, and with Martha's suitcase dangling from the other, had the peculiar feeling that what he was doing had happened before. The ride down in the elevator, the brief walk to his parked car, the placing of Martha's bag in the rumble and the putting of the handbag on the floor in front—all these things seemed a repeated experience. Yet, even as he marveled at the phenomenon, he understood it. Shock sometimes renders one side of the brain infinitesimally less quick of reception than the other; by the time the slower half of the brain has become aware of something, that something has become memory to the quicker half. At least, so some alleged scientists had explained the matter to Cranston.

Nevertheless, though the thing was understandable, it was a bit terrifying. Then he grinned at his own alarm. He had told Martha she mustn't think of danger and that there was no danger. It would be well for him if he profited by the advice he had given her.

Rouge Is Panacea.

As he pressed upon the starter he glanced at her. It was miraculous what a touch of rouge and a trace of powder could do for a woman. Men bolstered up their courage with a jolt of Scotch; women applied external remedies. There she was, as fresh as though she had slept nine hours last night instead of less than three, as though she had experienced no nerve-devastating tragedy this morning.

But an actor, he realized, can banish from his face all signs of depression or unhappiness as he steps before the footlights, and all women are actresses. Give a woman the scantiest public and she becomes a different being from the person sitting alone in her boudoir. And the elevator boy, the casual passerby on the sidewalk, had become, for the moment, Martha's public. Not to one of them would she let it become known that tragedy sat upon her shoulder.

The feeling that he had passed through all this before left Cranston as they turned up Fifth avenue. The necessity of watching traffic brought alertness to both sides of his brain.

Talk of Trivialities.

"You're wonderful," he whispered to her.

"I can't tell you what I think of you," she replied. "When I think of the risk——"

"We're not to discuss that," he interrupted. "Not until we get to the Lemming's. Talk of something else."

She did. Of trivialities, of little happenings here and there, of mutual acquaintances, of mutual likes and antipathies they chattered. Had there been an invisible passenger in the car he would have testified that nothing beyond pleasure in each other's

The rain had ceased, and the summer sun shone more brightly than ever. Traffic was heavy on the Queensborough Bridge and upon the Long Island roads, so that it was an hour and a half after they left New York when they reached the Lemming place.

If the man who opened the door of the car for them was surprised at their return, there was nothing in his manner to indicate it. Yes, luncheon had been served and nearly every one had gone to the golf course. Mrs. Torrance was with Mrs. Lemming on the veranda playing backgammon. Would they like some sandwiches? Very well, they would be served at once.

Picked Up Handbag.

From the floor of the car Cranston picked the Gerrish handbag. While the man was busy getting the suitcase out of the rumble Cranston walked into the house with the small bag tucked under has arm. He went directly to the bedroom he had occupied last night and placed the bag in a chest of drawers. There was only the faintest chance that the room would be visited by a maid during the next hour or so, and that was a chance he must take, for there had been no opportunity to dispose of the bag on the journey out here. Then he went downstairs and found Martha with the other two women. He paused for a moment in the door leading to the veranda. He knew sister Letty as well as sister Letty knew him, and he could tell instantly that Letty approved.

The Nutwork Network Is On the Air

By H. I. Phillips.

(Introducing Felix and Fannie who just can't seem to get things satisfactorily straight.)

New England Boiled Dinner Corp. Presents a Domestic Comedy of Errors.

Oh, that's all right. I won't forget 'em. I've arranged everything. I'm having a book of etiquette put at my place and, not only that, but I'm having one put at every plate.

ANNOUNCER—You have been listening to the Amalgamated Butter Knife Hour of scrambled classics, and we now present to you the new air comics, Felix and Fannie, under the auspices of the New England Boiled Dinner Corporation. Felix and Fannie are two young people who would be happy if Fannie could grasp the general drift of things, but the girl doesn't seem to know what it's all about. Every radio program must have a Dumb Dora act, and so I give you Felix and Fannie Felix—Lissen, Fannie, were having important people as dinner guests tonight and I don't want you to forget your table manners.

Fannie—Oh, that's all right. I won't forget 'em. I've arranged everything. I'm having a Book of Etiquette put at my place, and, not only that, but I'm having one put at every plate.

Felix—That would insult the guests, Fannie. Think of the humiliation.

Fannie—Oh, I almost forgot it.

Felix—Forgot what?

Fannie—The humiliation. That's that new stuff you put in the cocktails, ain't it?

Felix—Fannie, you exasperate me.

Fannie—I haven't time to exasperate you now, dear. Some other time.

Felix—What are you talking about? You don't even know what exasperation means.

Fannie—Yes, I do. Exasperation is what you do to somebody when he's drowning and has his lungs full of water.

Felix—Please, Fannie. You're thinking of resuscitaton.

Fannie—No, I'm not. Resuscitaton is what a cashier does when he gives back the money he stole from a bank.

• • • •

Felix—Fannie, I think I'll have to give you up.

Fannie—You can't give me up. Nobody has sent for me yet.

Felix—Please, my dear, where is your gray matter?

Fannie—My gray matter?

Felix—Yes, your gray matter.

Fannie—Oh, you mean what college did I go to?

Felix—No. That's your alma mater. It means "our mother" in Latin.

Fannie—I remember. It was on those new 3-cent stamps. Traffic Officer's Mother, they called it.

Felix—Whistler's Mother, you dunce.

Fannie—Whistler or traffic officer—what's the difference?

Felix—Fannie, won't you please try to talk as if you were intelligent? Doesn't your brain function the same as mine?

Fannie—Sure. That's why I have those terrible headaches.

• • • •

Felix—Let's talk of something else.

Fannie—I can't talk of something else.

Felix—Why not?

Fannie—Because I don't know what we've been talking about so far.

• • • •

Felix—Let's talk about the New Deal.

Fannie—All right. You get the cards and I'll be dummy.

Felix—It isn't a card game; it's an Administration policy for four years.

Fannie—I can't use it. I've got all the insurance I can carry.

Felix—Who said anything about insurance?

Fannie—You did. You even named the company, the Administration.

Felix—Fannie, this is more than I can stand. I'm beginning to think we're incompatible.

Fannie—Oh, that's all right. What if we are? You can go to your church and I'll go to mine.

Felix—Sometimes I think we never should have married.

Fannie—Oh, I don't mind it. I was unhappy anyway even before I met you.

Felix—I'd have you understand you got the best of the bargain.

Fannie—It was no bargain. I've been paying ever since I met you.

Felix—I'd have you know my people came over on the Mayflower.

Fannie—One ferryboat between Jersey City and New York is as good as another, no matter what they name it.

Felix—I should have dropped you the first week I met you. Even a blind man could see you were a mental delinquent.

Fannie—You're a liar; I pay my taxes like everybody else.

Felix—You have no balance; you have no poise.

Fannie—I got two poises and a handbag but what good do they do me with no money to carry in them?

Felix—Lissen, Fannie, you have no education, no background.

Fannie—I have a background but no rock garden in it.

Felix—You're even ignorant of music. The other night at the symphony concert I asked what tune was being played and look what you did.

Fannie—I went up and read the sign and found out what the orchestra was playing.

Felix—Yeah? And what did the sign say the orchestra was playing?

Fannie—Refrain From Spitting.

• • • •

Announcer—You have been listening, but not very intently, to the new Nutwork Network feature, Felix and Fannie. We next present T. Quincy Cribbett, newshawk of the air, who will tell you of big news events during the past year and a half.

Mr. Cribbett—Hello, folks. I've a big piece of news for you today. It comes direct from Washington and is to the effect that Postmaster General Farley thinks the old postage stamps are good enough and will not try to have any new ones designed. "A stamp is a stamp," said Mr. Farley. "Why change it?"

And here's an item form New York City, which has gone the limit under repeal and now has more bars and more places than ever in the old days. The item says that a canvass of Manhattan shows that eight out of every ten stores in the city are now either taverns, bar rooms, liquor shops or hotel grills. An old soak, when taken on a tour of inspection last week, said:

"In the days of the saloon a man could cover every drinking place in the city in three weeks, four days and eleven hours on foot. Today it would take him seven years, nine months and four hours to visit just the tea room places alone."

• • • •

And here's a most amazing item from Washington. It says that the Republican party has found candidates to run against the Democrats and have named their ticket. It will be Darrow and Wirt.

• • • •

Announcer—I think we have had enough of Mr. Cribbett. The station orchestra will drive you away from your seats by playing a number of tunes, for which no copyright owner wants mention.

Great New Diving Bell Ready for Trip To Salvage Millions From Sea's Depths

had ever worked under water before.

No diving suit made could withstand this terrific pressure, so new methods had to be used. A barrel-like steel observation shell was constructed and in this divers were lowered to direct, by telephone, the operations of the salvage machinery above.

Bombs Are Sunk To Blast Liner.

Huge bombs were lowered, placed in position at the diver's direction, and the sunken hull of the 500-foot steel liner literally blasted to pieces. Great steel jaws, lowered by cranes from the salvage ship, reached down to tear away the wreckage after each blast.

Finally, the whole upper part of the ship was demolished and the cranes were able to reach directly into the strong room. They began to bring up box after box—of gold!

A million dollars was recovered in this manner, but $4,000,000 more remains in the ship's strong room which is cluttered with the twisted wreckage from the explosions. This wreckage is to be dredged out this summer and the grappling for the precious gold resumed.

Reports that there was $4,000,000 in the purser's safe of the Lusitania when that vessel was sent to the bottom by a German submarine in 1916, are scouted by officials of the Sorima Co. They say they have investigated the records carefully and found that the Lusitania carried no gold.

Far up in the North Pacific, 15 miles south of Juneau, Alaska, another major treasure hunt is getting under way today as a Seattle salvage firm prepares to tackle the wreck of the S. S. Islander.

Homeward bound from the Klondike gold fields with their newly-gained riches, 41 passengers lost their lives and nearly 100 others lost all their possessions when the Islander struck an iceberg and sank in 1901. The wreck is said to contain $1,000,000 in gold.

For many years salvors have tried to recover this fortune, but without success. Last summer, however, a Seattle salvage concern succeeded in draggng the hulk closer to shore, with the result that it now lies only a short distance from land and in comparatively shallow water.

Quest for Treasure Full of Grief.

Within the near future, divers will be ready to descend into the hulk to search for the long-lost riches of the gold fields.

Many have been the disappointments in the long quest for sunken treasure, but—in addition to the Egypt—there also have been notable successes.

Two years ago nearly $1,000,000 in bullion and coin was sucked up by an undersea "vacuum cleaner" from the wreck of the liner Colombia off the coast of California. The hulk, lying in shallow water, was dynamited, but the explosion burst the ship's safe and strewed the treasure among the wreckage. A huge siphon sucked up countless tons of the surrounding sand from which practically all the gold was recovered.

A Billion Dollars In Lost Gold.

In thousands of rotting wrecks that dot the floors of the Seven Seas—ranging from ancient Spanish galleons to modern liners—there is at least a billion dollars in gold and other treasure, according to an estimate made several years ago by an international banker. And much of this treasure lies in American waters.

A particularly rich prize awaits salvors in the wreck of the S. S. Merida, which sank off Cape Charles, Va., in 1911 after colliding with the S. S. Admiral Farragut in a dense fog. The ship, which lies in deep water, has never been located.

The Merida, en route from Vera Cruz to New York, is said to have carried $5,000,000 in gold which was being smuggled out of Mexico by President Diaz, overthrown by the revolution of that year. Also aboard, according to reports current at the time, were the crown jewels of the ill-fated Emperor Maximilian, of Mexico, these jewels having been saved by the mad Empress Charlotte after the execution of her husband by a firing squad.

Three million dollars in gold coins lies in the rotting hulk of the White Star liner Republic, lost off Nantucket in January, 1909. The Republic, damaged in a collision, was being towed toward New York by the Coast Guard cutter Gresham, when she sank in 240 feet of water. A salvage attempt in 1919 was unsuccessful.

Another wreck which offers rich returns is that of the S. S. Central American, which went down in a hurricane off Cape Hatteras, in 1857, while bringing returning "Forty-Niners" from California and $2,400,000 in gold. Scores of miners, who had made the long and dangerous voyage around Cape Horn perished when within only a few hours of New York. No attempt at salvage has ever been made as the precise location of the wreck is unknown.

Most romantic of all treasure wrecks in American waters is that of the De Braak, a British privateering bark, which sank off the Delaware Capes in 1798. This ship, while cruising on the Spanish Main, had captured two Spanish galleons richly laden with gold and silver and was en route to England with her loot—valued at 900,000 Spanish gold doubloons—when a storm sent her to the bottom.

For more than 100 years, men have attempted to locate this wreck and fish up the vast treasure, but no trace of it has ever been found. An expedition in 1814 met with failure as did one promoted by a friend of Gen. Grant in 1877, but as recently as 1932 two salvage ships were said to be seeking the De Braak's riches.

Her gold, like that of countless other drowned ships throughout the world, is still held fast in Davy Jones' locker.

The Old Timer Tells

When I Was a Boy

How the Drug Store in His Town Installed a Soda Water Fountain, and What Came of It.

By the Old Timer.

WHEN I was a boy——

There was gossip in town. Heath's drug store had installed a soda water fountain, far up in front! The very idea! What would Lydia Pinkham say if she knew that her medicine was being sold in a store along with soft drinks? Probably she would withdraw her famous remedy. It was a very small fountain of marble slabs. Sirups were served from bottles—vanilla, lemon, sarsaparilla, coffee—and there was a spiggot from which fizz water came. I preferred the coffee flavor and grandfather slipped me many a nickel to purchase the delicious beverage. Sometimes it was cold, more frequently tepid, for Fred Heath did not believe in a bountiful supply of ice, although it must have been cheap, the supply coming from the river every winter and being stored in sawdust.

* * * *

A man named Shumway had the audacity to open another drug store, three doors from Heath's. What, forsake the old reliable for somebody who might mix arsenic instead of quinine in your medicine? Shumway must have had even a harder time of it than the homeopathic physician. His brother built a cubby hole in the rear of the store and took tintypes. That helped some.

Friday afternoons at school we recited "pieces," or read compositions. My three standbys in the recitation line were "The Charge of the Light Brigade," "The Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight" and a poem commencing:

"Draw up the papers, lawyer,
And make 'em good and stout,
For things at home are crossways
And Betsy and I are out."

It was a sad poem at the start, but the ending was cheerful: not exactly the style of literature for juvenile ears, but teacher let it pass. However, I preferred "The Charge of the Light Brigade," and when I reached the passage

"Into the jaws of death
Into the mouth of hell
Rode the six hundred"

I rolled out that word h-e-l-l as long as it would last.

Something happened to my grandfather. Several men carried him home. The doctor was called and he remained in bed several weeks. When he got up he had to be helped from one room to another. He did not go downtown any more, but would sit for hours in a large rocking chair near a front window. He read a great deal, mostly the family Bible. By his side was a cane of heavy, dark wood, with a gold head bearing an inscription. It had been presented to him after he had served his term as lieutenant governor of Ohio. Finally he was able to move around the house with the aid of that cane and even go into the yard when the weather was fine. But nearly always he would be seen in that chair at the window, reading the Bible.

Death came to Mollie, the pretty daughter of the recluse who had married the Rev. Mr. Tanner, and villagers said the clergyman had been made insane by the loss of his wife. He would ride madly through the streets, past our house several times a day, urging his horse on and on till it was flecked with sweat, and stood panting in the cemetery, while the bereaved minister, kneeling beside the grave, begged his wife to come back to him. His sermons became incoherent, he neglected his appearance, and finally one day he rode out of town and never was heard from again.

My aunt became interested in foreign missions. It was decided to send supplies of clothing to Africa, and she invited the ladies to bring their bundles to our house, where they might be packed in a large box obtained from one of the two grocery stores. I watched the packing with great interest and saw several suits of red flannel underwear which I had outgrown tucked in with dresses, petticoats and unmentionables. How those African children would itch, thought I as the red articles disappeared.

There came another spring and in early June my mother was home once more. Yes, we were to return with her to South America in the fall. She and father had agreed that travel would be more beneficial than the rule of three taught in the little red schoolhouse; besides, there was home study.

The rural theaters that dot the landscape this summer are producing everything from the ancient classics to the most modernistic drama. Everybody is turning actor now.

Summer Theater Moves Out to the Country

seats are not plush and frequently lack arm-rests and even backs—but an air of good fun and close contact with the players, are irresistible charms of the pastoral theater.

Such extraneous disturbances as katydids joining in the chorus as they did at one of the operettas at Westport, or trains tearing by as at Milton, N. Y., or nor'easters raging as they frequently do at Dennis, seem only to add to the nice fellowship between audience and performers.

Astute business managers of "barn" theaters know another magnet—the refreshment stand. People are always thirsty between the acts—and how convenient just to step outside the front door and imbibe a bottle of pop! There's a beer terrace at the Brookfield Playhouse, and at Ogunquit. The patrons are invited to come early and stay late and dance on the spacious floor adjoining the theater proper. A fresco reception by the cast to the audience is in order between the acts and after the final curtain.

Still another attraction of the summer playhouse is the price scale. Few of the theaters have top prices more than $1, while 50 and 75-cent seats are available in all. The opportunity to see a prominent Broadway player in one of his most popular parts or creating a new one, supported by the local thespians, is a further inducement.

The most recent Broadway successes comprise the major portion of the season, although included in the repertoires are revivals of the best contemporary dramas and, as a result of the Hoboken experiment of Christopher Morley, the mid-nineteenth century melodramas.

During the last few years, "try-out" plays have become an integral part of the "barn" theater movement.

A notable example of a successful summer production which went on to New York was Lawrence Langner's "Pursuit of Happiness," the rollicking Revolutionary War comedy which opened the National Theater Players season this year. "When Ladies Meet," which went from the white light district to Hollywood, was first produced at the Cape Playhouse at Dennis, Mass. A closer tie-up is the arrangement at West Falmouth, Mass., whereby Arthur Beckhard, one of the most prominent producers, turns over to the Beach Theater, manuscripts that he is considering for production.

All the new plays do not see the lights of Broadway, however. Of those that do, a small percentage are "hits."

A Red Barn for Murders.

Among the melodramas, "Murder in the Red Barn," "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "The Copperhead," "East Lynne" and "The Drunkard," were freed of the dust of many decades and presented to summer audiences last year. In fact, melodramas were the sole fare of those attending the performances at the Notchland Inn at Bartlett, N. H., where members of the drama department of Yale produced "The Forty-Niners," among others.

Variety is the keynote of the repertoires—"What Every Woman Knows" is just as likely as not to be followed by "Outward Bound" or "Lady Windermere's Fan" or "Androcles and the Lion" or "Dinner at Eight." The lightest and most inconsequential of farces may rub shoulders with Shaw and Ibsen.

Broadway's best talent heads a number of the summer companies. Last summer Philip Merivale was with the Hopatcong Broadway Players at Netcong, N. J. Fay Bainter and Jane Cowl drew the vacationers to the Lyric Theater at Summit, N. J. In Clayton, N. Y., was Dorothy Gish.

A greater number are "free lances." Henry Hull, whose Jeeter Lester in "Tobacco Road" is considered by critics as one of the finest characterizations of the past season, included in his travels last summer, half a dozen summer theaters and as many different roles.

Edith Barrett's summer jaunts have become second nature to her. Since 1926 she has been trouping up and down the Atlantic Coast, darting up into the Berkshire Mountains and in amongst the Maine lakes, playing "What Every Woman Knows" and "Mrs. Moonlight" and creating new roles.

Uncle Sam's Sleuths Track Down Criminals down and killed by officers while resisting arrest. Ralph Fleagle, Royston and Abshier were hanged in Colorado.

In a case reminiscent of Victor Hugo's Jean val Jean, tell-tale finger prints recently turned up Frank Grigware, a mail robber who had been at liberty since his escape from the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth 24 years ago.

Robber Traced by Fingerprints.

Up near Edmonton, Canada, officers arrested one James Fahey on a charge of game law violation. A check of Fahey's fingerprints with a circular sent out by the identification bureau in Washington revealed that Fahey was really Grigware, the long-sought mail robber. He had fled to Canada, changed his name and married. Apparently, he had led an exemplary life, since neither his wife nor his neighbors knew of his past criminal history, and scores of his fellow townsmen flocked to his aid when his identity was disclosed.

Steps to return Grigware to the Leavenworth prison were begun, but later dropped by order of Attorney General Cummings. The latter seemed to take the view that an escaped convict who had "gone straight" for 24 years except for a trivial game law violation was entitled to his freedom.

Odell Boyles, now serving 15 years in the Atlanta penitentiary for extortion arising out of threats to kidnap the 18-year-old son of Joseph H. Cannon, North Carolina textile millionaire, can blame his downfall to his own fingerprint and the Government's identification unit here.

On the back of one of the extortion letters was found the faint imprint of a finger—apparently made while folding the page—which, with the aid of chemicals, was developed into a clear impression. This was sent to Washington and circularized throughout the country. Later, Boyles and his wife were arrested in Atlanta during an effort to collect the ransom by an elaborately planned scheme. He first denied any part in the plot, but when positively identified as the author of the extortion note by means of his fingerprint he broke down and confessed.

In many less sensational cases, the exchange of fingerprints between police of various cities through the Government's clearing house here leads to the detection of criminals who might otherwise escape justice. An average of 350 fugitives from the law are so trapped each month for police throughout the country.

Illustrative is the recent case of two brothers sought by the police of Ottumwa, Iowa, for armed robbery. Their fingerprints, taken during previous arrests, were sent to Washington with the request that they be circularized.

A few days later two men were arrested in Pasadena, Calif., for holding up a poker game in a hotel. Comparison of their fingerprints with the Government's circular showed, despite assumed names, that these prisoners were the fugitives from Iowa. After finishing their sentences in California they will be taken to Ottumwa for trial there.

Records From 6,000 Cities.

Uncle Sam's identification unit here receives fingerprints from police and other law-enforcement agencies in 6,000 cities and communities in the United States and Canada at the rate of 3,500 a day. If a check with the files discloses a criminal record, this record is mailed to the arresting police at once. Also, the Department of Justice publishes a monthly bulletin containing the prints of badly wanted fugitives. It is circulated throughout the country and any police department may get free listings therein.

The identification unit also exchanges fingerprints of international fugitives and particularly desperate criminals with 59 foreign countries. If a badly sought criminal flees the United States he is very likely to find that the police of almost any country in which he tries to hide will receive his fingerprints from Washington.

Dillinger's Prints Go Round the World.

For example, John Dillinger's fingerprints are on file today with police departments all over the world. There is practically no large city in Europe, Asia or South America where he could not be positively identified within a few minutes if placed under arrest. Dillinger's fingerprints were obtained when he was serving a term for robbery in the Indiana penitentiary several years ago.

Aside from aiding police departments in catching criminals, the fingerprint unit also checks up on the records of applicants for Federal jobs. All fingerprints taken by the U. S. Civil Service Commission are checked for possible criminal records.

This system has led to many interesting disclosures. For example, a man who applied for a job as a Federal prohibition agent in Detroit several years ago was found to be an escaped convict from a Texas penitentiary, where he had been serving a five-year term for burglary. He was arrested and returned to prison.

Founded 10 years ago in two small rooms and with only two checkers, the fingerprint unit now occupies the entire top floor of the old Southern Railway building on Pennsylvania avenue and employs a staff of 257 persons. It operates under the direction of John Edgar Hoover, director of the Department of Justice's Division of Investigation.

When you sit down to play against adversaries with whose methods you are not familiar and ask the formal and usual question regarding the system they play, you will feel more at ease and be better able to cope with them if you have previously read Mrs. Madeleine Kerwin's new book on "Partnership Contract." Mrs. Kerwin, forceful writer, popular lecturer and skillful player, knows all of the leading systems quite as well as their authors themselves. Moreover, she possesses the happy faculty of being able to impart her knowledge to others in a comprehensive and understandable way. Reading "Partnership Contract" is like sitting down in a comfortable chair and listening to Mrs. Kerwin talk in a free and informal conversational manner about the high points of the various systems which puzzle the minds of beginners and frequently of experienced players. She takes the Culbertson, Sims, Official, Winslow, Vanderbilt and One-over-one systems of bidding and interprets their meanings, often in language that is picturesque and forceful, but always intelligible. The book is not intended either to indorse or criticize any system, but rather to explain their conventions and differences. She finds many features that are quite similar in and common to all systems, and these she points out, as well as the variances.

The hand given herewith is an example of excellent defense by a player in a recent game at the Vanderbilt Club in Sheridan Circle, where there are to be seen many exhibitions of skill and bridge technique:

South was dealer and started the bidding with a spade and was forced to four spades by West over his four hearts in the several rounds of bidding. At first the contract looks simple enough, but West was shrewd. After leading his king and ace of hearts, he could see, with a third heart remaining in dummy, that both his partner and South had no more of that suit. His only hope was that East held the jack of spades. Instead of leading the queen of hearts and giving his partner a discard, he led a small heart, which, when overtaken by the ten in dummy, forced East to trump with the jack and South to overtrump with the king of spades. This play made the queen good in West's hand after the ace of spades had been led. The ace of diamonds then netted East and West four tricks and set the contract. Many players would have led the queen of hearts on the third round. This would have enabled South to win the trick with a small trump and with two leads draw all the adverse trumps and make his contract.

Love and Art Hard to Mix In Lives of Famous Stars

When he came to bid farewell, she summoned up the last bit of strength that was left her and threw him a smile. He went out through the door, and the door closed behind him.

"Ashes . . . ashes . . . ashes: before my eyes, on my lips, in my empty hands."

Isadora a Living Ideal.

The living embodiment of pure spirit and love was Isadora Duncan, the greatest dancer of all times. Her soul was in tune with the infinite, but her life was bound to a world which could not understand. Love was as necessary to her as food and drink to most people. But she did not believe in conventionalities, and was therefore doomed to suffer. And like Duse she suffered at the hands of another great artist.

One night in 1905 she was dancing in Berlin. She felt rather than saw the presence of a strong personality in the audience. After performance there appeared a beautiful being at her door. He was angry.

"You are wonderful! You are the living realization of all my dreams! But why have you stolen my ideas?"

She protested. "But who are you?"

From his lips came what to her were wonderful words:

"I am the son of Ellen Terry."

It was Gordon Craig, the inspirer of the whole trend of the modern theater. In her own words, "he was a creature like Shelley, made of fire and lightning." He took her to his studio and they lived for weeks in an ecstasy of love of which only Isadora Duncan was capable. In spite of the fact that during this time she had very little to eat and was forced to sleep on the wooden floor, she was in a heaven of bliss.

But this, like Duse's love for D'Annunzio, could not last. They were both lovers of creation and their love for each other was keeping them from their art. Craig was soon chafing at the bit and started crying, "My work! My work!" And she, in turn, was dying to get back to the school of dancing, the ideal of her childhood, which she had just founded in Berlin. This conflict, together with the idea of her lover belonging to another woman, drove her into a frenzy of despair. She knew the end had to come, and it did when one day a tall, debonair young man came in with:

"My friends call me Pim."

"But what do you do?"

"Nothing."

"But you must do something."

"Well, I have a lovely collection of eighteenth century snuff boxes." And she took him on a tour to Russia.

Tragedy of Craig's Son.

But that was not the end of Gordon Craig. She had a beautiful child by him and grew to love it as she had loved him. When, in 1913, it was killed in an automobile accident in Paris, she received a blow from which she never recovered. It broke her spirit and she left only a tragic shell of her former self. Nine years later fate intervened and took away a soul that should never have been exposed to the suffering of this world. Her scarf caught in the wheel of her automobile as she was driving through Nice. The other end was around her neck, she was thrown out and strangled.

Inter-Club Meet Draws Eighty Players

By Ely Culbertson.

WHEN your partner plays a high card to your lead to a trick, it does not necessarily follow that it is an encouraging card. It may be the lowest card he holds in the suit. The habit of taking the play of any card like the seven or higher as a definite order to continue a suit is widespread, but entirely erroneous. Whether a player is interested in the continuation of a suit and is signaling for its continuance is generally determined in this manner, but the leader, too, has a responsibility, and that is to determine whether the card played is in any sense a signal, for the lowest card in a hand of a suit is not regarded as a signal to continue, regardless of how high that card may be.

It was an unthinking continuation on the play of an Ace in misinterpreting the partner's play that permitted Ayfred Sheinwold to fulfill a contract of three diamonds doubled on the hand below—a contract which he had undertaken as a defensive measure against his opponents' game contract of three clubs.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1NT	Pass	2♠	Pass
2NT	Pass	3♣	Pass

Dbl.	Pass	Pass	Pass

East's bid of one notrump, while not as good as one club, had for its basic design making it difficult for the opponents to get together in case they held balanced hands, and thus facilitate the ending of the rubber. South passed, content to lead his diamond suit against a notrump contract, but confident that the bidding would continue. West bid two spades, a game contract, and East, with only two spades, a game contract, decided to bid two notrump. Again South passed, and at this point West, with a 5-5-2-1 distribution, decided to show his second five-card suit by the bid of three clubs. North and East passed in turn and South, willing enough to defend against notrump, felt that he had practically no defense against clubs, hence showed his diamonds.

After two passes East doubled, and West opened the Spade Ace. The Ten dropped from the East hand and West, feeling that a club lead might be presenting the Declarer with a free finesse, led another spade. The bidding should have convinced him that it was East and not South who held the doubleton in that suit. The King was played from Dummy, and South's only club discarded. Following this, South subsequently lost one diamond and two hearts, fulfilling his doubled contract—a result which could not have come had not the West player afforded him a valuable discard by his second lead of spades.

Successful defense, as well as successful attack, requires that a player stop, look and listen at every crossroad.

ski jumping and won many contests in that thrilling sport. When the snow was heavy, Mr. Morgenstierne was wont, on his previous stays here, to strap on his skis and glide over the paths of Rock Creek Park. Failing this opportunity, he enjoys a long hike or a good swim in nearby waters.

As Minister of Norway, Mr. Morgenstierne is placed in the happy although unusual position of having virtually as many of his countrymen in the nation to which he is accredited as live within the borders of their native land. Nearly 3,000,000 of immediate Norwegian ancestry make their homes in the United States. In fact, Brooklyn, N. Y., is the fourth largest Norwegian city.

No Internal Strife.

The Norwegian whaling fleet, a picturesque armada famed in prose and verse for many centuries, has in recent years turned to the Antarctic as its source of supply. Ten thousand Norwegians find employment on the huge floating cookeries that yearly trek southward for whale. One of these strange-looking vessels now lies at anchor in New York with a cargo of whale oil awaiting the outcome of the present situation.

Of particular interest to Americans is Norway's experiment with prohibition, which, like the United States, it abandoned in favor of state control. This was done after a referendum of the voters had registered an overwhelming opinion against the restrictive liquor laws.

In common with this country, too, Norway has in recent years faced a severe farm problem and has resorted to subsidies for agriculture. But Norway, unlike the United States, is not seeking to curtail farm production, but to increase it. With an area only slightly larger than the combined size of New York and Pennsylvania, much of it too mountainous for cultivation, Norway is untroubled by the large farm surpluses that worry the United States.

Large Whaling Fleet.

Norway has come through the turbulent post-war era without change in its constitutional monarchistic form of government and with far less than the usual internal political strife.

But its new minister has left domestic politics far behind and will devote his chief energies in Washington to the promotion of trade between his country and Uncle Sam. He has long been active in promoting cultural relations between this country and Norway.

Vacation Offers Boys and Girls Splendid Opportunity to Study Their Own City

Young Readers Are Urged to Write and Draw of Activity This Summer.

Dear Post boys and girls: Hurrah! hurrah! Vacation time is here!

Our boys and girls everywhere echoed this shout as they left their classrooms last week and prepared for a jolly good time during the holidays.

Many of them will go to other cities, a number are planning trips to the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago, and they are the truly lucky ones, and still others will stay at home and enjoy their vacation in healthful play and learning to know more about their own city.

That is a very good plan, because no matter where you may live there are always interesting new things to find out about your community. For instance, do the boys and girls who live in Washington know much about the public buildings here? People come from all parts of the country to visit them, and yet I feel sure that many of our own boys and girls never have seen the treasures so many of them house.

A very happy day could be spent in the New National Museum and the Smithsonian Institution studying the exhibits in those places. It would go down on your vacation calendar, I am certain, as one of the red letter days of your vacation.

The Junior Post will be glad to receive stories this summer on the general topic, "One Vacation Day and How I Spent It." Of course, the children who live outside of Washington may compete, too, for the prizes which will be given every now and then for the best stories received along this line. Vacation themes in your pictures and poems will be welcome, too. We want to keep The Junior Post seasonal, so far as is possible.

Speaking of pictures and drawings, please remember to draw only in black ink on good paper or drawing board. Drawings submitted in any other color can not be used in the Junior Post. It is just a waste of your time to use blue, red or brown ink in your drawing. Stick to the black ink, make your lines simple and to tell the story you are trying to give in your picture and you will find that you have a better chance of getting your work printed.

Also try to remember to put your full name, age, address and school on the back of your pictures. The same rule applies to stories, poems, letters and other material that you send to the Junior Post as well.

After you have written or drawn your picures or story stop and ask yourself "Am I keeping the rules of The Junior Post in submitting this entry?" If you have not, you have given yourself a handicap at the very start of attempting to become one of the many contributors to the Junior Post.

The editors of the Junior Post are most anxious to have many children contributing to this enterprising little newspaper within a newspaper. We welcome new contributors and we pass on to them the slogan of the Junior Post: "If, at first you do not succeed, try, try again." The boys and girls who are steady contributors to the Junior Post did not get their entries printed at first. They had to try and try again before they had the great joy of seeing their work appear in print. The Junior Post must maintain a high standard. To have your work printed therein means it has something unusual and particularly interesting in it. So be proud of your work when it appears and keep on trying until it does appear in the Junior Post.

Camping.

Joyce had just asked her father if she could go camping. She had longed to go since she was 9 years old and her father promised her she could when she had reached her twelfth birthday, which was four weeks ago. Now he consented to let her go over to the sand bar just across the river from their home.

Gerry came running up to Joyce, with Laddie, the faithful old collie, in answer to his sister's call. Gerry was Joyce's 10-year-old brother.

"Can we really go camping?"

"I guess so," said father. "If you need us, and shout loud enough, we can hear you. You'll probably want to come home in the middle of the night."

So Joyce and Gerry started off early the next morning. They ate their breakfast at home, but were on their way by 7:30.

After lunch they waded in for clams for their dinner. When they had enough they started off for a hike in the woods. As they walked along they noticed the different birds they had never seen before. When they had walked a long way they decided to head back to camp, but Gerry wanted to play some games, so they stopped and played for a long time.

They had been having so much fun they had not noticed that the sun had gone behind the hills. But as it got darker they started back to camp.

After the dinner dishes were washed they were very tired and went right to bed. Gerry went right to sleep, but Joyce just couldn't.

Suddenly she heard someone swimming. She could hear the pant, pant of quick-taken breath. Was it man or beast? She didn't know. She knew the wolves came down from the woods in search of food in the winter, but this was summer. Her heart was beating so loud she thought he would hear it.

Cautiously she peeked out of the tent. She saw two big eyes gleaming at her and tried to wake Gerry, but he just groaned and rolled over. Suddenly "it" made one dash for her and licked and licked her hands and face. It was Laddie. How glad she was to see him. She wrapped him up in some towels to get him dry and he laid down beside her for the rest of the night.

The next morning Gerry asked where Laddie came from and Joyce told him all that had happened. So they both decided they had enough camping alone. They got in their canoe and paddled home.

Rain.

Drip, drip, drip, on the window pane,
In torrents it comes down,
A silver sheet of water,
Spreads itself upon the town.

The trees enjoy its cooling shower,
The flowers and birds do, too,
For it cools them off and makes them glow,
With a shining brilliant hue.

It packs the dust down in the road,
It washes off the roofs,
And makes the bridle paths,
Too slippery for the horse's hoofs.

The farmers like it for their crops
Of oats and wheats and grain,
And we should think of all these things
When e'er it starts to rain.

Hark, Hark, the Lark.

From "Cymbeline"

By William Shakespeare.

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
And Phoebus 'gins arise,
His steeds to water at those springs
On chaliced flowers that lies;
And winking Mary-buds begin
To ope their golden eyes.
With everything that pretty bin,
My lady sweet arise!
Arise, arise
My lady sweet, arise!

Fidac Winner.

Harry Terhune, a high school pupil of Martinsville, Ind., was named first-place winner in the annual Fidac essay contest of the American Legion Auxiliary.

Second award was won by Beatrice Y. Black, pupil at Dunbar High School, Washington, and third by Viola Andrus, a high school girl at Blaine, Wash.

Swiss Cha

In Switzerland the people do not only build their chalets on mountains and raise goats, but also along rivers and lakes as summer resorts. These chalets are built entirely of wood and rather warm in summer. If they are built on mountains where it snows heavily or where avalanches often occur, they have neat rows of rocks to keep the roof from sliding off in avalanches. Often grass is grown on the roofs, and when it grows too long they put the goats on it to nibble it until it is short.

In the mountainous parts of Switzerland where most chalets are found the furniture is all handmade.

Busy Life on a Farm.

The farm is a very busy place. There is much work to do and everyone is busy. During the spring the ground is plowed and the corn is planted. In the summer the hay is cut and hauled into the barn. Then in the fall the corn is cut, shucked, and then the corn and fodder are hauled in. Besides this labor, both morning and night the cows have to be milked, the pigs, horses and fowls have to be fed. Although the farmers have much work they are happy.

Graduation.

June has come,
School is o'er,
Friends shall depart
To meet no more.

We've strived together
With each trial and test;
To build our character
We've studied with zest.
Forever we've tried
To do our best.

Fun we've shared,
Pranks we've played;
Fond memories
Like these shall ne'er fade.

'Tis time for the grand finale,
Tonight we march up the aisle,
We are sad, although we sing
And keep in step, in single file.

Yes, 'tis graduation night I'm told,
The time when my school and I must part,
But I say with meaning,
"Dear school of mine, you have my heart."

Summer Time.

Summer is almost here,
It's got spring on the run,
Why not have a good time,
In the good old summer time?
We go aswimming and on hikes,
On picnics and the like;
But best of all,
Is to play baseball.

The Junior Post.

There is quite a rush, I think,
In every family,
When The Sunday Post is in sight,
To grab the first they see.

Dad, dressed in his robe,
Comes down to read the sports.
He glances over a few pages until he sees
A sale containing shoes, shirts and shorts.

Mother is fond of the sales
Consisting of household needs,
dresses and shoes;
She is also interested in births,
deaths and marriages
And much of the other news.

Sis wants to be the firs to read the comics
And clip out the Jane Arden dolly,
But she is interested to see what the nearest movie is showing,
Perhaps her favorite star to make her jolly.
But brother beats them all!
He rushes for The Junior Post
And quietly sits down to read
The column that interests him the most.

So when Sunday comes around,
Grab the section you like the best,
But don't let the rest of them
Beat you to The Junior Post.

The Pets' Corner

By Laird Kiltie, of Tweburn
(Mascot of The Junior Post.)

Well, I have the matter of my name settled at last. It is Laird Kiltie of Tweburn. Through a mistake I thought it was Trueburn. But we got that straightened out. Furthermore, by the time you read this I shall be a full-fledged member of the American Kennel Club. My mistress says I am rather young to be a clubman. I know I shall enjoy the companionship of my comrades in the club. I hope my brother, Laird Angus of Tweburn, joins, too. In my next letter I shall give that advice to him.

By the way, Little Laughing Waters, who owns my brother, has a new pony. I hear it is a Shetland pony, and lots of fun. I know Angus will enjoy running alongside of the pony and barking, just for sport, not to frighten him. I rather wish my mistress would become pony-minded. I am sure we could keep the dear little fellow in the garage and I should be glad to entertain him for the folks. Perhaps, when little Anne is older, they will get a pony for her. She came to see me the other night, and we had great fun. I showed her all my tricks and how nicely I could smash her doll on the pavement of the garden walk. Anne did not cry when I broke her doll. That's the kind of a girl I like best.

I hear Meggie Roosevelt, the Scottish terrier, who was the pet and companion of the First Lady of the Land for so many years, is going to Hyde Park with the family for the summer. I am glad of that, because I know Meggie didn't mean any harm when she bit that girl reporter.

Meggie has been spending the spring with friends in Washington, but I know she will be glad to get home again. There's always been too much of a crowd at the White House for Meggie. She liked her quiet and her comfort and being in the limelight so much was hard on her nerves. So here's to you, Meggie. I hope you have a nice summer. Don't bite anyone else. You see, Meggie is a member of my family, the Scottish Terrier breed, and I have a special interest in her.

Mike Great Dane telephoned me the other day to say the family is leaving him again. This time they are heading for Iceland—a good place in which to spend the summer, no doubt. Daisy, Pansy and Bing Crosby are going, but Mike has to stay at home. He is not very fond of strangers, besides he is so big it would take several staterooms for him. Mr. Tweet, the canary, will keep him company and sing songs for him when he is lonely.

Mike asked me over to play with him in his garden. It is 25 acres in size, but somehow or other, I like my own little garden better. I have such fun pulling up the flowers, when they get big enough to make it worth the while. The Garden Lady says I should be spanked for doing that. I wonder what she means. Perhaps some day I will find out about it.

Laddie Boy came home to little Jimmie. He did not tell where he had been. But it must have been in a forest for he got a lot of wood ticks on him and all his hair had to be shaved off. He is not so good looking, but the same nice dog, all the same. We have great talks through our garden fence every morning.

I have learned a fine new trick. By jumping I can reach the window sill near my out-of-door porch. From there I can look into the kitchen. I can sit there and watch Ophelia get dinner. Sometimes I bark to remind her that I like roast lamb, too.

Of course, I only get a tablespoonful of chopped meat each day. But the bones of all the roasts come to me, sooner or later. I never get a chicken bone, of course. They are very bad for dogs and I hope none of the boys and girls of the Pets' Corner ever give them to their dogs. Be careful about this, my young friends, some dogs would be silly enough to eat them.

Here comes the editor of The Junior Post looking for my copy. That is what she calls the story I write each week for the Pets' Corner. Until next Sunday, one and all, farewell——

(Awarded $1.)

Dear Laird Kiltie: I have never written to any one before, so I don't know how this letter is going to sound. But here goes! I live right across the street from you and my mistress said she was going to bring me over to see you lots of times. She only brought me once. I saw you on your porch and in your mint bed. I am dying to see you with your glasses on. I think you are the cutest puppy editor I have ever seen. Please excuse me for calling you a puppy, but I am a whole year old. If you will come over some afternoon to see me I will lend you my best bone and half of my own house. Please come. Very truly,

PATSY.

Carol Hollingsworth (age 11). 3300 Cleveland avenue northwest.

Dear Laird Kiltie: I don't know whether you remember me, but the other day when I came over to see you and your mint bed you kissed me. I am going to tell you how I got my name. It is Peanuts, you know. Well to go on with my story. One day while I was lying on the floor of the Army hospital kitchen, the grocery man came in. He looked at me, all curled up, asleep, and said: "My, what a huge peanut that is. I didn't know they grew so big."

I was the size of my mistress' fist. The man who was my master then replied: "That's no peanut. That's a dog." I had not been named, my master said: "We have not named him yet, and he looks like a peanut. So Peanuts shall be his name." According to my mistress, I still look like one now. So, dear friend, that is how I got my name; but I don't mind, for I think a peanut is a very handsome nut and I think it is very delicious. Don't tell anyone I found and ate one, or my mistress will be angry. So long, Kiltie, old pal. Your friend and admirer,

PEANUTS.

Helen Jane Schmidt, age 13, 3306 Cleveland avenue northwest.

Dear Laird Kiltie: We both come from the same homeland and I am sure we shall be great friends. I am a little West Highland white terrier and my home was in the Highlands of the old country. I have an English champion grandsire by the name of White Laird, which, in Scotch, means White Lord. That really is sort of a coincidence, Kiltie.

I have won ten beautiful ribbons, Kiltie, but of course, that is only a start, because the rest of the family up in New Hampshire have won many, many more. My own mother and father are international champions, which is indeed a great distinction and honor. I'm glad your father is a champion, Kiltie, because it is something to be proud of. Love from a wee Highland laddie.

EDGERSTOUNE ROLAND.

Marcia O'Brien, 6406 Ridgewood avenue, Chevy Chase, Md.

Dear Laird Kiltie: Guess who I am? A dog. Right. Now don't get frightened because I am not close behind you. Bow, wow! Gee, but I hate summer time when the fleas start to bite. I hate 'em, don't you? I think they are mean old things when they get on my back and neck, where I can't reach them. My mistress uses something she calls flea powder that she says will do me good, but I would rather scratch them off.

I am very fond of jokes. Are you? I run down the road and bark and then my mistress will come to see what is the matter. But I only say Bow, wow. I guess I'll close. So-long, Kiltie.

JACK.

Wilbur Lemaster (age 14), Martinsburg, W. Va., R. F. D. 4.

Dear Laird Kiltie: I have never written to you before. I'm a duck. Quack, quack! I am black all over, so mistress named me Blackie. I also have seven brothers and sisters. I love to follow mistress and peck at her toes. I pulled three buttons off her shoe Tsk, tsk! I can't bite very hard, as I'm only nine days old. Mistress took me and all my brothers and sisters to a pond full of nice fresh water. She threw some bread in. We all dived in after it. "Quack," got my sister. She threw more in, I got three pieces. Come to see me and we can have a nice swim and dive after bread. Oh, I forgot, you can't swim! I'll teach you. Quack! Quack!

BLACKIE.

Olda Aumack, Burnleys, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie: It seems as though something is always happening around here. Why just the other day I had a terrible escapade! A big, bad cat came into our yard and I, just for curiosity, approached her and barked. Before I could gather my wits, she was scratching me furiously. Indeed she was in an awful temper. I, growling and howling, brought my mistress to the rescue. I have concluded, since I now wear a scratched nose, to leave such horrible creatures alone. I have no intentions of letting such saucy cats spoil my masculine beauty. Your pal,

LINDY.

Ellen Beaty, Savage, Md.

Dear Laird Kiltie: This is the first time I have ever written you. My name is Wee Wee. I know you are wondering how I got that name. I am no Peking

Well, to begin

puppy I belonged t

and he gave me to my present owner. It was a pretty cool night, so my new mistress put me in her pocket and carried me home. It was a "bumpy" ride, but it was worth it, because I have such a wonderful home.

Now that you know my beginning, I will close until the next time when I will tell you about my present life. Luckily, yours,

WEE WEE.

Mary Schmidt (age 13), McLean, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie: I am a cute little brown and white (with a little bit of black) dog. The other day I ran off and stayed away for four hours. I am ashamed of it now. The whole family that I lived with missed me awfully. Although I am not a pure bred dog I can do some tricks.

Now I will begin to tell you about my owners, our home, and the other pets (I am the most important). Well, to begin with, I live in the most beautiful home you can imagine, with lots of trees to lie under, and lots of grass to lie on. I guess you wish you were me.

We have one cat (and that is too many), chickens and two goldfish I don't mind the fish so much, because I drink out of their pool.

I have four owners and they are very good to me.

This is my first letter to you and I hope you enjoy it. If you do please write one to me if you are not too busy.

I will have to close as I hear my youngest mistress coming. Your new friend.

CHIPPY.

Marian Thompson (age 10), Box 31, Rosslyn, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie—Meow! meow! you know who I am don't you? My mistress has not fed me my breakfast and I am so hungry. Ah! here she comes with it now. Yum! yum! I could eat all day it seems.

Well. I must tell you one of my adventures. One day I decided to run away, just for fun, so off to the woods I went as hard as I could. I heard all sorts of queer noises and I chased a funny-looking animal called a rabbit, I think, but I could not catch it. I got so tired and it soon began to grow dark and started to rain. I got my beautiful fur all wet. I thought running away was not much fun after all, so I ran home and soon was cozy and dry in my little bed behind the stove.

So long! And remember your cat friend,

"DANDY."

Mary V. Miller, Vienna, Va.

Dear Laird Kiltie—This is my first letter to you—in fact it's my first letter to anyone. I'm a white rabbit. My mistress won me in a contest that was held at the Palace Theater in connection with the picture "Riptide." My name is Lady Mary Riptide, although everybody just calls me Riptide or "Rippy." My mistress really wanted tickets to the show, but she got me instead. She didn't want me at first, and asked almost everyone she knew if they wanted me. I was so hurt I just wouldn't do anything at all for the first few days, and had her worried silly. But she wouldn't give me away for anything now.

I've been with her almost three months now, which makes me about six months old. And my own mother wouldn't know me! But I do wish my mistress would take me out on the lawn more often. I love it so, and I do such funny things when I get out that she almost dies laughing. I sniff around a bit. Then nibble a bit. And suddenly I hop way up in the air and scoot all around the place. You really should see me jump. I can jump about a foot and a half high.

Well, I guess I had better stop, or you'll jump on my neck. So long!

RIPTIDE.

Eunice Gallagher, 1735 Irving street northwest.

Dear Laird Kiltie: As this is my first letter to you I hope you will enjoy it. I think you are a wonderful Junior Post editor and I hope we'll be good friends.

One day, when I had nothing else to do, I ran away from home with some of my dog friends. When I finally came home my mistress was very angry and what she did to me would be a sad story to tell. But that taught me to stay at home, where I belonged. I suppose you never get punished for running away from home, as you are such a well-behaved dog. I will put this in the mail before she thinks I have run away again.

Your new dog friend,

TOODLES.

How I Felt About Flag Day.

The way I felt about Flag Day was a very sacred way. I feel that on Flag Day we should honor the day in memory of the flag. The flag is an emblem of every country. Of course, we honor our own flag and do not really think about the flags of the other countries. But their flag is just as dear to them as ours is to us.

I most sincerely pledge that I shall honor my flag and keep it as a sacred possession. I ask that you will always take good care of your flag—the emblem of your country.

Weather Wisdom.

When the dew is on the grass
Rain will never come to pass.

When the grass is dry at night
Look for rain before the light.

When grass is dry at morning light
Look for rain before the night.

Three days' rain will empty any sky.

A deep, clear sky of fleckless blue
Breeds storms within a day or two.

When the wind is in the east
It's good for neither man nor beast.

When the wind is in the north
The old folk should not venture forth.

When the wind is in the south
It blows the bait in the fishes' mouth.

When the wind is in the west
It is of all the winds the best.

An opening and a shetting
Is a sure sing of a wetting.

Another version:

Open and shet,
Sure sign of wet.

Still another:

It's lighting up to see to rain.
Evening red and morning gray
Sends the traveler on his way.
Evening gray and morning red
Sends the traveler home to bed.

I Remember, I Remember.

By Thomas Hood.

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born,
The little window where the sun
Came peeping in at morn;
He never came a wink too soon
Nor brought too long a day;
But now, I often wish the night
Had borne my breath away.

I remember, I remember
The roses, red and white,
The violets, and the lily-cups—
Those flowers made of light!
The lilacs where the robin built
And where my brother set
The laburnum on his birthday—
The tree is living yet!

I remember, I remember
Where I was used to swing.
And thought the air must rush as fresh
To swallows on the wing;
My spirit flew in feathers then
That is so heavy now,
The summer pools could hardly cool
The fever on my brow.

I remember, I remember
The fir-trees dark and high;
I used to think their slender tops
Were close against the sky:
It was a childish ignorance,
But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from Heaven
Than when I was a boy.

To the Graduates.

To all you members of the Junior Post who are graduating this year, I wish you much luck and happiness. Some of you will go to college and some will not. Some of those who start to college will probably drop out, but others will go on until their diplomas are awarded.

I hope each of you will succeed in what you do. If once you fail remember, "Try, try again until success is yours."

Maybe our own Junior Post writers will become authors. I am sure we will all be proud of you if you do and I, for one, will be able to say, "She (or he) wrote to The Junior Post years ago and look where they are today!" We will be proud of you, so do your best. Even if you don't become famous, do your part well and you will have the satisfaction of knowing you have accomplished something.

As for the artists of our little paper, we probably will be wearing your creation in the line of clothes and will be sitting for a portrait by So 'n So. We lay much stock by you artists, and so please fulfill our expectations. It's a great thing to do but if you have the grit you will achieve it.

And to our young poets! If you are gifted I hope with all my heart that I will some day sing your songs or read your famed poetry. I do not say this with a jest. I truly mean it and I know you can do what others are doing. Please, please try hard and I will be able to sing your songs, etc.

And now, my dear graduates, take any of the paths to success but be sure to keep trying. Do not let Despair and Ruin get you. You can and will achieve success! The Junior Post members are still glad to see your drawings and read your stories and poems, so don't forget us! NADINE DAVIS (age 13).

A Summer Camp.

We will pretend we are living across the street from a girls' camp in New Jersey, 30 miles from Atlantic City. We will begin with Sunday.

Eight a. m. Sunday will bring a dozen or so girls piling into motor boats on their way to the church across the river. The girls under 10 have Sunday school at the camp about 10 a. m. Sunday is a quiet day at camp, for it is the day when the girls rest from the activities of the week. Sometimes new girls come and old girls depart. Often members of the families come to visit the girls.

Monday at 6 a. m. finds the early birds in bathing, for if they go early it means they can go swimming three times instead of twice a day. The rest of the week is spent in hiking, tennis, golf and various sports. Once in a while a surprise birthday party is given for one of the girls. Instructions of the sports are the most desirable part of camp. On Saturday night the girls are taken to Atlantic City, where they amuse themselves until 10 p. m. On regular nights every one is in bed by 9:15, but on Saturday no one goes to bed until 10:15 or 10:30.

When the girls return home they are strong and healthy. They know how to ride a horse and how to run a motorboat.

In the Editor's Letter Box

Dear Editor: You said that you liked to receive letters and, although I do not often write letters, I am writing you one.

I could put what I am going to say in story form, but I think it much nicer to tell it like this:

One afternoon on my way from school I saw two small children. One was an Italian, and she was saying: "America is a good country. My father got naturalized and now I'm a real citizen."

The other girl said, "America is all right."

I couldn't hear the rest of their conversation, but when I looked around I saw both little girls standing up and holding a small flag in front of them, singing "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

This struck me so that I had to put it down on paper. I hope other citizens will appreciate it as I did.

A constant reader and writer,
BARBARA BARNES.
4722 Fifth street northwest.

Dear Editor: I was very happy to see my poem printed in your paper. As I have gotten a start, I am going to continue composing and sending in poems. I am sending in two this time, both called "My Dog," in hopes that one will please you. I thank you for publishing my first poem. Yours truly,

DOROTHY JANE HUSTON.
4520 Walsh street, Chevy Chase, Md.

Dear Editor: I read The Post every week-day and every Sunday. The section that interests me the most is The Junior Post. I think it is a great advantage to the children, because it gives them an opportunity to show their talent. Please publish the poem I am sending in, entitled "The Junior Post." I am not a member, but I wish to join now. Thank you,

DOROTHY SENN (age 13).
3038 Georgia avenue northwest.

Dear Editor: I would like very much to join The Junior Post, as I like it very much, and think it is a very nice little paper for children to read.

I read it every Sunday.

Inclosed you will find a poem, "Summer Time." And a letter to Laird Kiltie. I hope you will publish these.

WILBUR LEMASTER (ae 14).
Martinsburg, W. Va.

Dear Editor: I am sending a drawing which I hope is worthy of publication. I enjoy reading The Junior Post every Sunday. I think G. G. Trois' drawings are especially fine. This summer I expect to have more time to contribute to The Junior Post. I think this little paper offers a wonderful opportunity for us to improve in drawing, writing or whatever newspaper work we are particularly interested in. Lots of new members contribute something every week and may they continue to. I remain, as ever,

MARJORIE DUVALL (age 14).
2121 New York avenue northwest.

Dear Editor: I'm sending you two drawings, Laird Kiltie a letter and a poem. Hope you will publish them some time.

Thanks for publishing my two Laird Kiltie letters.

I like the strip by Charlotte W. Rea, called "June Bride." She can draw well. Truly, yours, OLDA AUMACK.

Burnleys, Va.

P. S.—I made my grade and am now in sixth. Our school closed June 8.

Dear Editor: I am sending you this story, entitled "Blind Date." I hope you consider it good enough to be published. I am in doubt as to whether you will approve of it, as some of the younger Junior Post readers may find it too old for them. Sincerely, yours,

BETTY FLAHERTY.
Blunts Lane, Alexandria, Va.

(Your story is interesting, but unsuitable for The Junior Post.—Editor's note.)

Dear Editor: I wish to thank you for publishing my story "The Witch in the Mountains." I am sending in another story, "The Busy Life on a Farm," which I hope will be worthy of publication. Yours truly,

MARJORIE MORELAND
Berryville, Va.

Dear Editor: I have written once before and I want to thank you for publishing my letter to Laird Kiltie. I have become interested in this little paper.

Inclosed please find a composition entitled, "An Exciting Experience." Yours truly,

Dear Editor: Inclosed you will find a picture entitled "In The Park." I hope you can use it. I'm going to try to send in something every week now.

We are going to form a Junior Post club of four girls and meet two times a week. One girl writes and the others draw. I'm sure we are going to have lots of fun. Sincerely,

FRANCES HOLMES (age 14).
110 Virginia avenue, Jefferson Park, Alexandria, Va.

Dear Editor: I thank you so much for printing my story about Whistler. This time I am sending in a composition of an entirely different sort. I hope that you will like it enough to have it printed. It is about a very interesting discovery which I made while I was over in China.

In closing, may I say "lots of luck to The Junior Post and its many members." Sincerely,

MARGARET SAMPSELL.
Quarters 605, Quantico, Va.

Dear Editor: I thank you for awarding me the strip prize and for publishing my poem in Sunday's issue. I have inclosed more work for publication.

I like the poem, "Little Boy Blue," by Eugene Field. I remember the day I recited it for my English teacher. I hope our Junior Post members can compose something that will live after them as this did after Eugene Field.

Olda Aumack, of Burnleys, Va., writes such clever little stories. I enjoy them. Sincerely,

CHARLOTTE W. REA.

Dear Editor: I am sending you a Laird Kiltie letter, which I hope you will publish.

I read The Junior Post every Sunday, and I love to read it. I love to read. Your friend,

My Dog.

My companion my protector!
The best friend I've found yet.
Alert, bouyant, frisky;
My dog, my pal, my pet.
My joy in days of happiness,
My friend in days of woe,
My true and sincere standby
Wherever I may go.

Day Is Dying.

Spread your mighty wings
And meet the setting sun;
Fly to your nest and sing,
For day is done.

Sit on your rocky perch
And dream of the dying day
As you stare through the lofty birch
To the rising smoke far away.

Listen to the laughter of the stream
As it winds to the brook by the bend,
And in its laughter is a dream,
For day is nearing its end.

The clouds are lined with gold,
Tinted by the sun's last ray,
And the ferns' curly arms will fold
To tuck a sunbeam away.

The oak tree is now asleep,
Resting from the breezes' sway,
And the fir tree no longer weeps
To the wood friends as they play.

Now listen to the cricket's cry
And to the frog's croak bright
And to the love dove's sigh
At the coming of night.

See the star's first peep
Over the great dark space.
All the earth is asleep
As the moon shows its face.

The great eagle must rest, too;
So put your wing over your head.
Now all is quiet about you,
For now day is dead.

The Home of the Fairies

The Fairies are happy,
So why aren't we?
Right by the clear lake,
Just look and see!
The kind little breeze,
Whistles through the air,
Up and down and everywhere.
The Fairies like this Kind of night,
They dance and sing,
In their delight.

The Story Book Lady

"School is out, school is out, hurrah for lots of time to play and to read, too," shouted Frances, as she sat in the playground swing and waited for the Story Book Lady and the members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the George Washington Junior Citizens to assemble for the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land.

"I feel that way too," her cousin Frances shouted back, and they flew in the swings high among the playground trees. "I like to play, but I want to read, too."

"Who does not," asked Evelyn, who had joined the two girls in the swings. "I like to play and read all day long, but mother says that we must all have some kind of duty to perform every day."

"Well, I guess worthwhile people, those we read about in books, did combine work and play and reading," said Margaret.

"Of course they do," Mark exclaimed, "but I get the work father has for me to do, weeding the garden and watering the lawn and so forth done as quickly as I can first thing in the morning so I can spend lots of time playing and reading. Of course I am expected to be around to go to the store and help mother as much as I can."

"Well," said the Story Book Lady, who had come up just then, followed by most of the members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the George Washington Junior Citizens, "we all like to take as much time to read and play as we can in the summer time. Of course, we have some work to do. All work and no play would make us dull and all play and no work would make us uninterested in life, too."

"That is what I tell my grandsons," Mr. Gnome remarked as the Story Book Lady and the members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the George Washington Junior Citizens were transported by magic right to the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge and the little house of which Mr. Gnome was in charge. "I tell them to play hard and read all they want, but not to neglect their duties. One of their most pleasant duties is to help me open the gate every week for you, Story Book Lady, and the members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the George Washington Junior Citizens."

"Of course, we feel that way," exclaimed Mr. Gnome's grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick, as they hurried out of the little gate house to help their grandfather open the gate.

Then Mr. Gnome and his three grandsons stood in a row and made deep bows with their green hats with scarlet feathers in their hands.

"We work and play and read and sing at work and play and read and sing all the live long day in Fairy Story Land," sang the Story Book Fairy as she flew out of the Fairy Story Forest in her golden airplane, followed by Merry and Jolly, the Story Book fairy children, also in golden airplanes.

"Oh, oh, what luck," Annabel said as they came to the very first book street. "This looks like such a nice story, adventures and history all together."

"It is, indeed," the Story Book Lady replied as she led the way down the book street. "Let me see. Just wait until I put on my magic glasses. It is called 'The Princess Runs Away,' a story of Egypt in 900 B. C.; by Alice Woodbury Howard, with illustrations by John T. Howard. (The Macmillan Co., New York.) Princess Meryt in this book is the youngest of four young Egyptians and what a good time she has. And what a good time we will all have reading about her."

"I like history," said Harold as they came to another book street.

"This seems very interesting history," replied the Story Book Lady, leading the way down the book street. "It is called 'The Conquest of Mexico,' by William H. Prescott, with illustrations by Keith Henderson and an introduction by Carl Van Doren. (The Junior Literary Guild, New York.) What pretty pictures, too. This is a real book for vacation time."

Flower in the Crannied Wall.

By Alfred Tennyson.

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies;
I hold you here, root and all, in my hand,

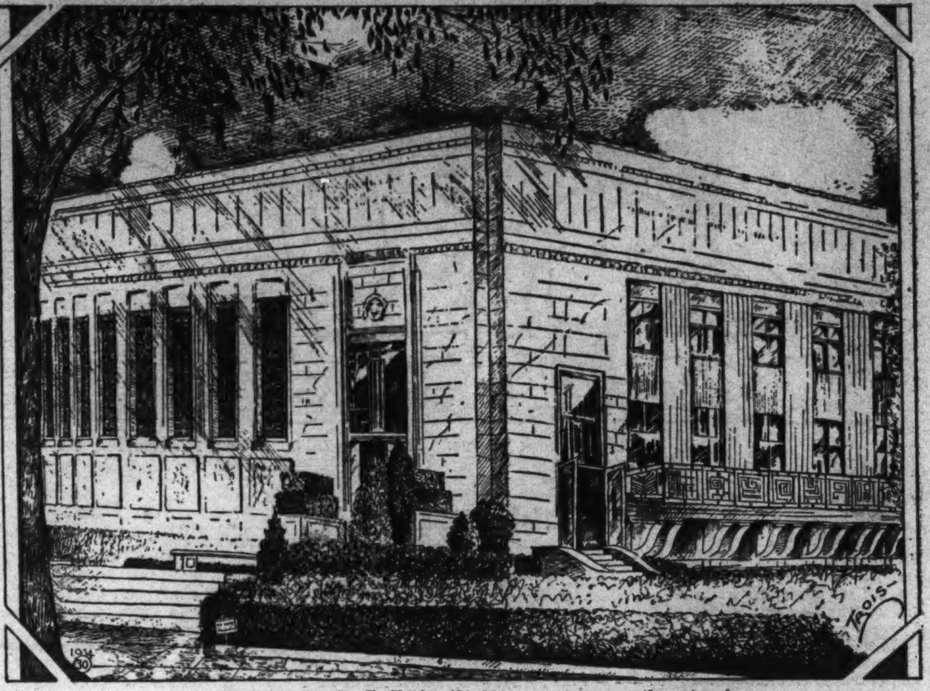
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.

Know Your Washington—Folgers' Shakespeare Library



Drawing by G. G. Trois, 429 Kenyon street northwest.

Henry C. Folger, of New York City, was the builder of the Shakespeare Library, from which it derives its name. Mr. Folger decided at first to make the construction in the style of Shakespeare's time. It was afterward decided that to build it in Elizabethan architecture would mean it would be out of harmony with the modern buildings so very close to it such as the House of Representatives, the Capitol, Library of Congress and other Government structures, which will adorn the nearby section before long.

With this in mind, Mr. Folger decided to make it of marble and of classic design. Construction was begun in 1929, and the estimated cost was $1,500,000. Although the exterior is classic in frame, the interior harmonizes to the collection there displayed. There is a large reading room, and the Elizabethan atmosphere puts the reader in the "mood" with his reading.

The library provides for a collection of 75,000 volumes and space for 150,000 more for its future growth.

The exhibition room is the largest in the building and in it are displayed many of Shakespeare's personal belongings and materials, a few original autographs, statues, trunks, jewelry, &c., of that period. riod.

The building is 226 feet by 111 feet and rises to a height of 48 feet on a property of 364 feet by 186 feet. The facades harmonize in masses and material with classic Washington. A quiet, modern Georgia marble facade with silver grilles and balconies were designed, using as principal decoration a set of nine bas-reliefs illustrating Shakespeare's plays, and some inscriptions emphasizing its purpose of memorial to a great poet.

The sculptural themes are from the plays, Macbeth, Romeo and Juliet, King Lear, Julius Caesar, Midsummer Nights Dream, Merchant of Venice, Richard III, Hamlet, and Henry IV. There execution was entrusted to John Gregory, of New York. Over the entrance is a comic and tragic mask. Stone from Larraine is used in the construction of the vestibules.

The exhibition hall is 22 feet by 130 feet by 30 feet 6 inches high. The reading room is entered from the administrative corridor and through the catalogue room. It is a typical English hall, 32 feet by 121 feet by 37 feet 9 inches high.

It is surrounded by bookcases in two tiers, the upper one having an oak balcony. On the east end is a hall screen having as a central feature a faithful reproduction of Shakespeare memorial in Trinity Church at Stratford-on-Avon. The room is lighted by three huge bay windows. This room also contains a large fireplace, stained glass decorate the windows. The west window has its tracery similar to that of Trinity Church at Stratford-on-Avon, also..

The small theater or lecture room, in the east wing provides seating for 300 and is built just as the theaters of Shakespears's day. It is tiny and homey, with small side balconies "almost over the stage."

The Little Temple.

(Awarded $1.)

While over in China I had the good fortune of being able to spend my summer vacation in a Marine camp. Every morning after breakfast I would take a long ride on my favorite donkey. Unfortunately we did not have horses.

One morning I rode farther away from camp than usual, and when I started back, I found to my disgust that I was lost.

I urged my donkey up a small hill, thinking to get a better view of the countryside. Upon reaching the top of the hill I rode through some dense underbrush until I reached a clearing. There in the middle of the clearing stood a tiny though lovely temple. It was rapidly going to ruin, although the door was still intact.

I sat on my donkey and stared in amazement, realizing that it was very probable that I was the first human who had looked upon the temple for many years.

After a few moments I slowly dismounted and tied my animal. After this I made my way cautiously around the temple, examining it thoroughly. It had without a doubt been very beautiful in its time. Now, however, the paint was coming off and the walls were crumbling. The paper in the windows was broken and spiders were spinning their webs across the tiny door.

I tried to open the door and to my delight it creaked open about half way. I stepped gingerly inside. When my eyes became accustomed to the gloom I could see very well. The inside of the temple was still very beautiful. The walls were all carved with figures and designs, which had evidently once been skillfully colored. The floor of the temple was stone, the middle of which was beautifully carved into some Chinese design.

Along the walls of the temple there were shelves. On the topmost shelf there stood the most horrible Buddha that I had ever seen. Its eyes were portruding and dilated so that they looked like those of a madman. Long tusks extended from the mouth, making it more horrible and grotesque than ever before. On this horrible apparition there had been placed the most beautiful of carved wooden trappings.

On all of the other shelves there were smaller Buddhas, which were a little less horrible.

The things which caught my eye now were four huge and beautifully carved coffins, which were ranged beneath the shelves. They were red and gold, and seemed more perfectly preserved than the Buddhas. I advanced to one and struggled to open it. Finally I succeeded in doing so. Almost immediately a huge bat flew out nearly in my face. With a frightened cry, I turned and ran out of the temple, slamming the door behind me. I leaped on my donkey and fled. Fortunately, I hit the right path, and finally reached camp.

The next day I returned to the little temple, but try as I would I could not open the door. In my fright I had sealed forever the entrance to the mysterious temple. It may be standing today, for all I know, alone on the little hill with the spirits of the dead.

Vacation Time.

(Awarded $1.)

Vacation time is wonderful,
So we hear a happy shout,
From boys and girls everywhere,
The day the schools let out.

Some romp and play the whole time,
Others travel far and near,
But never mention school to them,
Those three months of the year.

But after they have had their fun,
And tanned, with spirits high,
School seems to them a different place,
And mentioned without a sigh.

Then when vacation time is over,
We hear the same old shout,
When children hurry back to study,
As they did when schools let out.

Thomas Jefferson.

Thomas Jefferson was born in Charlottesville, Va.

Like Washington he became a surveyor, enduring the hardships of the pioneer. He was so fond of books and learning that he prepared himself for college.

He made many friends for himself in the College of William and Mary at Williamsburg, Va.

He studied law and began to practice, but his chief interest was in farming.

You will find his life very interesting as I did. I guess we all know that he signed the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776, and it is a legal holiday.

An Interesting Visit.

"Of course, I'll be glad to go," said Ruth. Ruth had just received an invitation to spend the week-end at Jessie's home. Ruth, an only child, looked forward to visiting Jessie because Jessie had two brothers and two sisters. When Ruth arrived she was greeted by Jessie's brothers and sisters and asked to play a game.

Ruth became so excited about the game she soon forgot about Jessie. When Jessie finally called her she talked to her sister a while. At supper it was quite enjoyable with such a large group around the table. Although there were many dishes to wash, they got through early because everyone pitched in and helped.

That night Ruth felt a little lonesome, but not for long, because Jean, Jessie's little sister, thought it her duty to amuse Ruth. She sang a number of songs, paying no attention when her family told her to kindly "be quiet."

The next day Ruth returned home. She had enjoyed herself so much. How quiet it seemed at supper with only three of them.

The Junior Post Airship

"I hear the big drums of the Marine Band," declared the pilot as The Junior Post Airship circled slowly around the Capitol in Washington last Monday night. It was a rainy night but the good ship Junior Post did not seem to mind the pelting drops at all.

"That's the band, all right," replied the editor. "I guess they are there, closing up the Seventy-third Congress."

"They are like a parcel of school boys, those Congressmen," commented the pilot, "so glad to get off for their vacations."

"It is much more than vacations," reminded the editor. "If they are not successful in being reelected it is back to the home towns for good, so far as their careers as Congressmen are concerned."

The pilot only laughed. In his mind, there was no job in the world which could compare with the life of a flier. Flying was his one and only thought and he would not have exchanged his care-free existence in the air for a crown.

"Well, 28 of them are not worrying about reelection," continued the editor. "They are retiring from Congress voluntarily and perhaps they are the happiest of all."

With a wide swoop the pilot drove The Junior Post Airship higher into the air for his answer. Then he headed toward the World's Fair in Chicago and it was not long before they were above the brilliantly lighted spectacle. Through the magic glasses the passengers on The Junior Post Airship carry with them they gazed into an exhibition room at the fair where Moissaye Boguslawski had been playing Beethoven's matchless sonatas for ten hours without stopping. He did not seem in the least tired and most of them were played from memory, it must be remembered.

"He certainly loves music," the pilot pointed out "I've heard of dancing for that long and even longer. But who ever heard of any one before who was willing to bang a piano for that stretch."

"Due west," shouted the editor as the pilot turned about and motioned, asking for direction. While crossing Iowa they saw a remarkable sight, a dried-up stream, once a good-sized river, which had been so affected by the recent drought that people were walking across what was formerly navigable waters. True it was a trifle muddy but no one seemed to care about that very much.

There was plenty of water when they reached California, however. On the way to the Pacific, the airship flew over the Riviera Club at Santa Monica, Calif., where a sextet of riders, men and women, were going over the hurdles in truly magnificent style.

"You want to see the cinema beauties," the pilot said as Jack turned the airship toward Hollywood.

"Wrong that time," the editor returned. "It is the new observatory, the Griffith Observatory, Hall of Science and Planatarium which is attracting my roving eye. My, how I would like to get a look through that giant telescope!"

"We will, too, some day," the pilot promised him. "But now let us return to the East. I want to get to New Haven in time to see President Roosevelt get an honorary degree and watch Yale and Harvard struggle for racing supremacy."

"Agreed," said the editor heartily. He had a young brother in the Harvard freshman varsity crew and he wanted to see the fun. Next to his brother when the shell swept out before the spectators was Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., the President and Mrs. Roosevelt's third son, and the Chief Executive and the First Lady could not keep their eyes off the boy as he did his part to bring victory to the Crimson colors.

An Exciting Experience.

This exciting experience did not concern me very much. It mostly concerned my cat.

One day we went to our cottage at the seashore and took Inky, my cat, with us. Inky was a black cat with a white stripe down her back. She was a very playful cat and was always getting into trouble. That afternoon we were on the pier crabbing. All of a sudden we heard a "splash!" The poor cat had fallen in. We immediately took a crab net and pulled her on the pier. Of course she was very wet and excited. The poor cat.

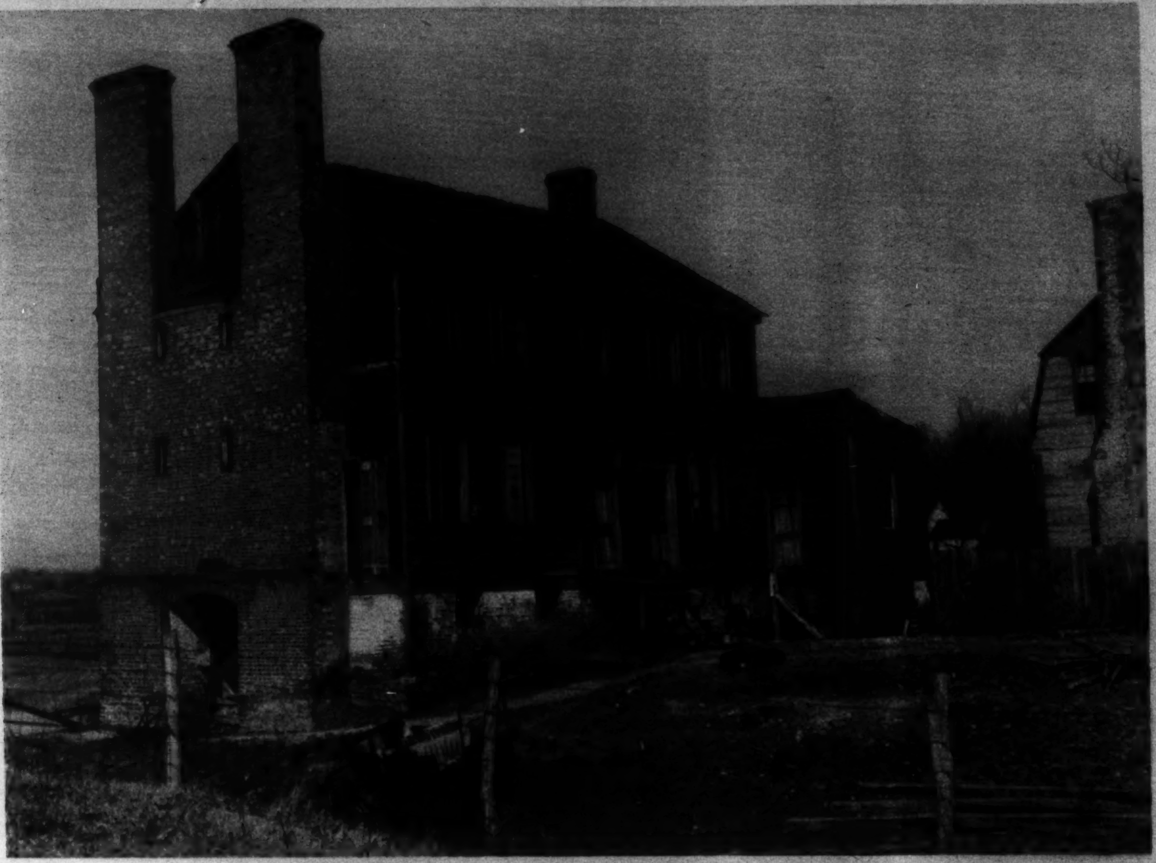
Old Houses of Historic Port Tobacco Claim High Interest



OVERLOOKING the Port Tobacco River, on the site of the first county seat of Charles County, Md., are some of the oldest manor houses in the State. Many now abandoned, such as that pictured at the left, they still give evidence of their original grandeur.

A LOZENGE

IN ANCIENT ROME THE WORD FOR "PRAISE" WAS LAUS, WHICH BECAME LOS IN OLD FRENCH, AND---------
THE FRENCH CREATED FROM LOS THE WORD LOSENGE, MEANING "FLATTERY," SUCH AS THAT IN AN EPITAPH ON A GRAVESTONE.
LATER LOSENGE BECAME APPLIED TO THE GRAVE-STONE ITSELF, WHICH WAS OFTEN OF DIAMOND SHAPE, SO----------
WHEN THE DIAMOND USED ON ANCIENT PLAYING CARDS TO REPRESENT THE LANCE-HEAD, WAS ADOPTED AS A HERALDIC DEVICE SYMBOLIZING MIGHT, IT WAS CALLED A LOZENGE.
LATER THE LOZENGE BECAME THE COAT-OF-ARMS OF WIDOWS AND UNMARRIED WOMEN, WHOSE COACHES WERE THEREFOR CALLED LOZENGE-COACHES.
THE DIAMOND SHAPE WAS USED IN DECORATIVE GLASS PANES FOR CHURCH WINDOWS, WHICH WERE CALLED LOZENGE-WINDOWS.
EARLY APOTHECARIES DEVISED MEDICATED TABLETS WHICH WERE CALLED LOZENGES BECAUSE OF THEIR DIAMOND SHAPE, SO--------- TODAY THE WORD LOZENGE MEANS ANY SWEETENED PILL OR SMALL PIECE OF CANDY NO MATTER WHAT ITS SHAPE.

WHY JADE IS LUCKY
© 1934 by United Feature Syndicate, Inc. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. — British rights reserved 6-24-'34
THE GREEN COLOR OF JADE REMINDED THE ANCIENT CHINESE OF GREEN SEA-WATER, VEGETATION AND THE SKY AT SUNSET, SO THEY HELD IT TO BE THE LUCKIEST OF ALL STONES.
THEY APPLIED THE STONE TO THE BODY TO CURE ILLNESSES, AND SOME PEOPLE DERIVED PLEASURE MERELY BY RUBBING JADE WITH THE FINGERS.
THEY BELIEVED IT WAS HEALTHFUL TO DRINK FROM A CUP OF JADE, SO EMPERORS PAID HIGH PRICES FOR THESE CUPS TO PREVENT BEING POISONED.
FOR THIS REASON CRAFTSMEN DEVELOPED THE FINE ART OF CARVING JADE WHICH IS DIFFICULT BECAUSE OF ITS EXCEEDING HARDNESS.
FINELY CARVED JADE WAS SO HIGHLY PRIZED THAT TO RECEIVE A JADE SCEPTRE FROM THE EMPEROR BECAME THE HIGHEST HONOR POSSIBLE.
BELIEF IN JADE WAS PREVALENT AMONG THE EARLY AMERICAN INDIANS, WHO MADE TALISMANS OF SIMILAR GREEN STONES FOUND IN AMERICA.
SPANIARDS WHO SAW THE INDIANS WEARING THESE CHARMS NAMED THE STONE PIEDRA DE YJADA (STONE OF THE SIDE), WHICH GAVE US OUR WORD JADE.
LU CK
AND PEOPLE TODAY PRIZE JADE, PARTLY FOR ITS COSTLINESS AND PARTLY BECAUSE THE ANCIENT BELIEF IN ITS LUCKY QUALITIES STILL PERSISTS.

Thousands Slaughtered In Bolivians' Chaco Trap

Paraguayans Rush Into Deadly Cannon Fire at Jungle Fort.

World War Ruse Fails to Save Day

Defenders "Mop Up" Field, Then Celebrate in Last Stronghold.

Buenos Aires, June 23 (AP). — Bolivian dispatches from the Chaco war front tonight claimed 2,000 Paraguayans had been killed or wounded in an unsuccessful attack on Fort Ballivan, backbone of the Bolivian defenses.

Wholesale slaughter of men under a withering artillery barrage on a front only half a mile long was described in the advices from La Paz, which asserted Bolivian casualties totaled only 61 dead and 170 wounded.

The Paraguayan command did not put out a definite estimate of casualties and was silent beyond claiming that withering machine-gun fire had caused irreparable losses to Bolivian forces.

Fort Still Held.

Advices indicated that the Paraguayan army had been unsuccessful, however, in its third major offensive since March against the Bolivian stronghold.

The survivors in Fort Ballivan celebrated a victory tonight.

Bolivian sources said a complete Paraguayan division, led by Col. Brizuela, had smashed through a Bolivian defensive line only to run into an artillery trap.

Cannon of large and small calibre as well as mortars were used by the Bolivian defenders to blast the Paraguayan attackers, stalled in their attempt to encircle the fort behind Condado in the Pilcomayo sector.

Recalls World War Tactics.

Military tactics were brought into play by the Paraguayan command reminiscent of World War days in Europe. A general strafing directed toward "Canada strongest" and "Canada el Carman" sectors was served up to attract the attention of the Bolivians at the northern end of their line. This strategy failed to draw in the Bolivian points, however, but sensing the maneuvre the high command directed a consolidation of positions at Condado.

The Paraguayans under Brizuela, unmindful that the Paraguayan feints had failed, drove directly at Condado.

The shower of munition was described as the fiercest yet seen in the Chaco. The massed Paraguayans were cut down like wheat before a scythe.

Suddenly the bombardment ceased and wave after wave of Bolivian troops poured over the field. A general mopping-up consolidated the Bolivian position. The Paraguayans straggled back to what safety they could find, but the strategically planned coup had been turned into ignominious defeat, Bolivian advices stated.

8 Dead, Heat's Toll in Midwest

Mercury Reaches 103 at Kansas City; Many Prostrated.

Chicago, June 23 (U.P.).—A sultry June heat wave sent temperatures to the 100 mark in mid-America today, causing a mounting toll of prostrations and drownings and bringing new threats to farm crops.

The heat hung over the upper Mississippi and Missouri Valleys following rains that supplied humidity and made the temperatures more difficult to bear.

At Kansas City the temperature reached 103. Des Moines had 100; St. Louis, 98, and Minneapolis, 96.

The death toll from drownings in the Chicago area was eight, with numerous heat prostrations.

Two more persons were overcome by the heat in the District yesterday as the mercury, temporarily checked by Friday night's violent storm, climbed to 96. Fair and possibly warmer was forecast for today, with a shower possible this afternoon.

The heat victims, Edward Roan, of the 2100 block of Virginia avenue northwest, and Edward Borsick, colored, of the 400 block of Franklin street northwest, were given first aid at their homes.

Meanwhile Watt Wrigley, 93-year-old Civil War veteran and a native of England, who suffered a heat stroke Friday, died in Casualty Hospital, the first hot-weather fatality of the year here.

The maximum temperature, which was accompanied by variable winds, was reached at about 3:30 p. m. The minimum early yesterday was 69.

German Priest Arrested.

Augsburg, Germany, June 23 (U.P.). Adam Birner, a Catholic priest, was arrested today on a charge of sabotage because he chided a member of the Hitler youth body here for absence from Divine services.

MRS. ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT.

Elliott's Child, Wife Greeted By Roosevelt

President Enjoys Beer on Motor Trip to Hyde Park.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Hyde Park, N. Y., June 23—President Roosevelt returned to his rambling Hudson River home today to meet for the first time, Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, the wife of his second son, and to see his new granddaughter, born six weeks ago at Fort Worth, Tex.

With Mrs. Roosevelt, he paused for lunch during a long motor trip from New London, Conn., at a roadside lunch stand, which served him with two "hot dogs" and two glasses of beer. Then they hastened here to be greeted by Elliott and the former Ruth Goggins, who were married in Texas a little more than a year ago.

The President ended two days aboard the yacht Sequoia at New London this morning, coming ashore at the Coast Guard Academy to begin a five-hour motor trip over the Berkshire foothills to the Hudson Valley. He intended to reach here for luncheon, but soon after crossing the border into New York State he called for a halt at the next lunch stand.

President Enjoys Meal.

Sitting in his open car under the gaze of several score of excited motorists, the President finished off one "helping" and signaled for more. Mrs. Roosevelt contented herself with one wiener and a glass of water. During the simple meal, which the President ate with relish, State Troopers and Secret Service men guarded the automobile.

Neither Elliott nor his wife, who came here two days ago to be introduced to the family, were on the portico when the President's car rolled up to the Roosevelt mansion. But the meeting—a strictly family affair—took place a few minutes later. This afternoon the President was driving them about the estate in his old touring car.

They went to the "cottage," two miles back of the home, where the family is wont to gather in the late afternoons for tea on the lawn or a swim in an open swimming pool. Here also is the site of the Val-Kil furniture shop of Mrs. Roosevelt, who has the cottage furnished in early American style.

Studies Farm Bill.

Secluded within his own broad acres, the President tonight went over the Frazier-Lemke farm moratorium bill and the railroad pension measure. After a visit to the home, Secretary Marvin H. McIntyre reported the President's promise of giving out some "big news," made in New London, Conn., yesterday, would not materialize. In fact, he may not act on either measure before returning to Washington, it was said.

The two bills were among a batch sent here from the Capital for the President to look over on his vacation. An earlier stack of bills was signed by the President aboard the Sequoia, as he cruised about the Thames River before the Yale-Harvard regatta yesterday.

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, an old friend, will be a luncheon guest at Krum Elbow tomorrow.

Loss of Eagle May Compel Mill to Close

653 Employes Facing Loss of Jobs at Hosiery Plant.

Firm Cites Trade Drop, Urges Restoration of Emblem.

Unable to operate without a Blue Eagle, the Harriman Hosiery Mills, Harriman, Tenn., may close Tuesday and throw 653 employes out of work.

An urgent request for restoration of the emblem was made yesterday by J. Asbury Wright, jr., vice president and attorney of the plant. He said failure to regain the insignia would force the factory to shut down Tuesday.

A. R. Glancy, an NRA official, told Wright his only chance would be to appeal to Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson tomorrow.

Although officials estimated NRA has produced jobs for 3,000,000 men and women, this is the first case on record where the livelihood of a substantial number of workers has been threatened by its rulings.

Cites Business Loss.

Wright protested the mill's business has fallen to the lowest levels on record because code restrictions prevent jobbers and retail stores from doing business with any manufacturer not in good standing at NRA.

He cited recent loss of an order from the State of Pennsylvania for 30,000 dozen pairs of hose. The order was cancelled because Federal relief funds could not figure in such a transaction.

NRA officials intimated the eagle would not be restored until the mill reemployed all of 350 men and women reported to have been dismissed because they joined a union. Wright said 149 union members have been reinstated.

Town Split by Ruling.

The Harriman case first gained National attention several months ago when Johnson revoked the mill's eagle on recommendation of the National Labor Board.

Soon after the emblem was withdrawn more than 50 irate Harriman merchants telegraphed Johnson offering to surrender their own insignia unless the mill's eagle should be returned. Johnson refused to restore the bird.

Meanwhile, the Harriman public refused to patronize the merchants who sided with the mill. As a result all except four or five of the business men hurriedly returned their eagles to show windows.

The Harriman case was referred to the Department of Justice for prosecution last March, but no action has been instituted.

Extended Negotiations.

The NRA was only about four months old when the Harriman strike was called last October 26, after alleged dismissals of employes for union activities.

The case was called to the attention of both the National and Atlanta labor regional boards in an attempt to reach a settlement. Negotiations proceeded until January 10, when the National board announced here the company had promised to bargain collectively with its employes.

One month later, however, the board, in a statement, said the company's rejection of an agreement with its employes "impugns the good faith of the company and is indicative of a desire to perpetuate discord, foster industrial unrest, and to obstruct the forces of recovery."

Cat Leaps in Driver's Face; Car Wrecked

When a pet cat she was taking to a hospital yesterday became frightened and leaped against her face, Miss Mary E. Coon, 48 Sycamore avenue, Takoma Park, Md., lost control of her automobile and crashed into a fireplug.

Miss Coon, sister of Janet Coon, radio star, was severely shaken up. The car and the fireplug were wrecked. She returned home with the cat.

Bi-Partisan Group to Study U. S. Policies; 17 Leaders Join

Seventeen prominent Democrats and Republicans have joined to form the nucleus of a National advisory council for the Crusaders, an organization formed to provide a vehicle for free discussion of Governmental acts, policies and tendencies, Fred G. Clark, commander in chief, announced yesterday. Offices have been established in New York City.

Those accepting membership on the council are Sewell W. Avery, president Montgomery, Ward & Co., Chicago; Francis H. Brownell, president American Smelting & Refining Co., New York; John W. Davis, New York; Cleveland E. Dodge, vice president Phelps Dodge Co., New York; Percy H. Johnston, president Chemical Bank & Trust Co., New York; Prof. E. W. Kemmerer, Princeton University; Fred I. Kent, director, Bankers Trust Co., New York; Martin W. Littleton, New York; Kenneth U Meguire, president Harlan Coal Co., Louisville, Ky.; Frank Purnell, president Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., Youngstown, Ohio; Alfred P. Sloan, jr., president General Motors, New York; Charles F. Thwing, president emeritus, Western Reserve University; James P. Warburg, president International Manhattan Co., New York; Edwin S. Webster, Stone & Webster, Boston; William Woodward, New York; Edward Bushnell, Cleveland; James K. Watson, former police commissioner, Detroit.

"The Crusaders propose to organize to make articulate the voice of the great mass of unorganized citizens of this country," Clark said in announcing the advisory council. "They propose to provide an unselfish vehicle by which the public, and through it the Government, can know the good and bad effects of Governmental experiments. The National Advisory Council of the Crusaders will give the unorganized majority of American voters the benefits of judgments based upon sound and clear thinking by men who are outstanding leaders and who have the best interests of the country and its citizens at heart."

Glass Voted Ablest Democrat in Senate

Reporters Call Reed Most Capable Republican and Wagner Most Industrious; Huey Long and "J. Ham" Dapper Dressers.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, was designated the ablest Democrat in the Senate, with Senator Robert F. Wagner, of New York, a close runner-up, in a poll of Washington newspaper correspondents made public yesterday. Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania, received the largest vote as the ablest Republican.

Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, won overwhelmingly the title of best orator in the Senate, while Senator Henry W. Keyes (Republican), of New Hampshire, received the distinction of being the "most silent Senator" in a body which spends its time chiefly talking.

The most liberal Senator was declared to be George W. Norris (Republican), of Nebraska, with Senator Simeon D. Fess (Republican), of Ohio, as the most conservative. Senator Wagner received the highest number of votes both for the "most popular" and "most industrious" Senator and was tied with Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson for the Senator most helpful to the press.

A majority of those voting regarded Senator Arthur R. Robinson (Republican), of Indiana, as the "Senator who would be least missed." There was no decisive trend toward the "Senator least inclined to work," but first place on that question went to Senator Park Trammell (Democrat), of Florida, with 10 votes out of the 82 questionnaires returned.

Senator Millard E. Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, regarded as one of the Senate's most eligible bachelors, won by 1 vote the title of "Senator with most sex appeal." Senator Huey P. Long (Democrat), of Louisiana, was held to be the best-dressed Senator, with Senator J. Hamilton Lewis (Democrat), of Illinois, as the "flashiest dressed Senator."

With many Senators mentioned, Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat),

Capt. Poderjay Faces Charge Of Murder

Vienna Police Declare Evidence Found Is Sufficient.

Vienna, June 23 (AP).—The famous Vienna International Police organization today completed its investigation of Capt. Ivan Poderjay and its chief announced that he considers the evidence developed sufficient to support a charge of murder.

Poderjay, husband of Miss Agnes Tufverson, missing New York and Detroit lawyer, was turned over to the prosecuting attorney, who will offer American authorities an opportunity to come and get him if they want him.

At the same time an explanation of the indifference toward Poderjay of the authorities of Yugoslavia was given by local Yugoslavs, who said that he has powerful connections in his native land, partly through a former wife there.

Poderjay's possession of trunks and clothing of Miss Tufverson and evidence that he sent one trunk filled with dresses to a sister form the most important evidence against the man, said Bruno Barber, head of the International Police organization.

While there have been persistent reports that Poderjay is wanted in Yugoslavia, Belgrade police have ignored the case.

Local citizens of the country said today that Poderjay's former wife, Zhivka Bradic, is a niece of the noted Yugoslavian patriot-prisoner, Punisha Rachich, and that the Poderjay family has a high standing.

Relatives of the former wife were said to oppose any action which would take Poderjay back to his native land as a prisoner.

Rachich was sentenced to prison in 1928 for shooting coalition leaders in the Yugoslavian Parliament, an act which precipitated a dictatorship. Nevertheless, he is regarded by many as a national hero who saved the nation.

Poderjay's own family was said to be devotedly religious and to strongly disapprove of his career as a marrying adventurer.

D. C. Man Hits Student Ouster

Richmond, Va., June 23 (AP).—Petitions charging unfairness in the suspension of his daughter and calling for an investigation of the college of William and Mary, at Williamsburg, have been filed by B. G. Foster, Washington patent attorney, with Gov. George C. Peery and members of the education committees of the House and Senate.

In a printed document, Foster asserts that his daughter, Charlotte Eleanor, was suspended from the college after she had been reported as having paid, in company with another girl, a short afternoon visit to a house in Williamsburg occupied by a young man described as being in disfavor with the college heads.

John Stewart Bryan, vice rector of the board of visitors, said that "not the slightest reflection on the girl's character was intended" by either the college authorities in suspending the student or by the board in upholding the suspension.

Two Brothers Are Slain In Norfolk Gun Duel

Norfolk, Va., June 23 (AP).—Two brothers died today after a gunfight at St. Bride's, near here, which a Norfolk County policeman was unable to prevent although he stood almost in the line of fire.

The dead men are Charles and Cliff Gibbs, aged 40 and 29, respectively. The shooting took place on the former's farm after a bitter argument over money. County Officer J. W. Peoples, who had accompanied Charles Gibbs, witnessed the duel.

Langer Loses Support of 6 In His Cabinet

Wary of Backing Acts Until Court Decides Who Is Governor.

Bismarck, N. D., June 23 (AP).—Six members of Gov. William Langer's cabinet, all elective officials, revolted today and joined Lieut. Gov. Ole H. Olson, who claims he is legal governor. They refused to recognize Langer's authority, since he was convicted of a felony recently.

Today's action was a climax to a series of events which began last March when opponents of Langer engineered a split in the nonpartisan league, a Republican faction.

Langer's conviction with four others a week ago was in the foreground of the developments which came at the height of the campaign for the State primary election Wednesday, two days before the chief executive was scheduled to appear for sentence. He faced a sentence ranging up to two years imprisonment or $10,000 fine or both.

In a statement announcing their position the revolting officers, several of them serving with Langer on important State boards, said they believed the Governor's conviction automatically disqualified him from holding office. His opponents were Lieut. Gov. Olson, John Husby, Commissioner of Agriculture and Labor; Robert Byrne, Secretary of State; Alfred Dale, State Treasurer; S. A. Olsness, State insurance commissioner, and Fay Harding and C. W. McDonnell, members of the State railroad commission.

In a statement the six expressed fear that acts performed in conjunction with Langer might be illegal, and declined to "participate in any of his executive acts until the courts have clarified" the question of his right to hold office.

Woman Mistakes Divorced Mate for Prowler, Kills Him

Atlanta, June 23 (AP).—George Eckford, member of the State Legislature, died today from a wound his divorced wife said she inflicted last night when she fired on what she thought was a prowler in the yard of her home.

Eckford, who served two terms as a member of the legislature from Fulton County, died from a pistol bullet wound through the abdomen shortly after his wife was acquitted in police court in connection with the shooting.

Recorder A. W. Callaway dismissed Mrs. Eckford after she told how she fired from a bedroom window of her home when she saw a man she believed to be a burglar in her back yard.

She said at the time her only thought was of her children in a nearby room.

Eckford recently served a term in the city stockade for drunkenness.

Youth, 14, Drowns In Maryland Creek

Ward of D. C. Welfare Board Was on Outing.

James Owens, 14, a ward of the Board of Public Welfare of the District, was drowned yesterday while swimming in Tennyson's Creek, a branch of St. Clement's Bay, near St. Clement's Shores, St. Mary's County, Md.

Owens was a member of a group of about 40 boys who had gone on a week-end trip to the bay resort under the supervision of the Industrial Home School officials.

The boy had been quartered at the school since March. He had been a ward of the Welfare Board since he was an infant. His mother died when he was a few months old and his father disappeared.

Ickes Bares Widespread "Kick-Backs"

Walsh Probers Told of Disregard for Law on Wages.

Stringent Regulations to Be Formulated to End Practice.

Violations of the prevailing wage law on Government projects have been widespread throughout the country, Government officials admitted yesterday before the Senate committee investigating "kick-backs" and other wage and hour violations.

Government agents investigating complaints on many projects have discovered dozens of instances of "kick-backs," Secretary of Interior Ickes told Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, committee chairman, in a letter the Senator made a part of the record.

Five instances had been discovered on postoffice buildings in New York, and the facts in each case were forwarded to the Treasury Department for action, it was said.

New York Complaints.

The sum of $4,262.15 was alleged to have been taken in "kick-backs" by the paint subcontractor on the New York postoffice last year. The employer paid the painters $11.20 a day, but forced them to kick back $5.20, it was said. The Joseph S. Fulton Co., plastering subcontractor on the same building, was said to have collected $833.15 from ten plasterers to whom it ostensibly paid $8.50 a day, but forced to kick back $2.50 a day, it was said. The John Swanson Co., floor subcontractor, same building, was said to have paid his workers 50 cents, instead of the prescribed $1, an hour.

More than $1,000 was paid back by seven bricklayers employed on the Flushing and Jamaica postoffice buildings by David Slote & Son, it was charged. The contractor got back $4 of each $8 paid the men, it was said.

At least one plasterer on the postoffice at Hempstead, Long Island, paid back $2.50 for each $8 he was paid by Martin Conroy & Son, it was charged. Carpenters were paid only 50 cents an hour, instead of the prescribed $1.25, by the Jerome Construction Co., carpentering subcontractors on the building at Mitchel Field, Long Island, it was said.

Kick-Back' on Rents.

Employes of other contractors who have contracts for a number of projects in the vicinity of New York were forced to live in an apartment building owned by the employers, it was said. The employers were Del Turco & Bro. and Tozzini Tile Works, Inc.

"Rentals on these apartments," Secretary Ickes said, "are higher than average, and it is claimed that this, in effect, is a means of receiving 'kick-backs.'"

The Celemente Construction Co., of New York, collected $1.40 a day from bricklayers working on Letchworth Village, a New York State project, according to a news-

Byrd Has Narrow Escape From Gas

Spread of Monoxide Fumes at Base Revealed.

Little America, Antarctica, June 23 (AP).—Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd described by wireless yesterday a narrow escape from carbon monoxide poisoning on June 17 in his solitary base, 123 miles south of here.

Carbon monoxide from his kerosene stove and lights and from the engines used in scientific work is one of the major hazards of the admiral's "farthest south" position. His report of the spread of fumes on June 17 explained why he broke off a wireless conversation abruptly that day.

"I felt rocky," he reported, "and decided it would not be wise to continue operating the small engine mounted on a shelf in one of the tunnels leading from the shack."

U. S. Horses Run Wrong Way! Frenchmen Lose All and Riot

Longchamp, France, June 23 (AP). Ah, zees Americains! Even their horses are crazy!

Crazy? They were a riot—such a riot that it took police reserves coming all the way from Paris to quiet things down again.

And, even despite the police, several betting booths were burned and there was all kinds of damage, including cracked heads.

Up until those American horses went to the post, today's affaire at the Longchamp race course was one of the most chic avenements sociales which la grande semaine has seen.

The trouble was that the racing fans assembled were thinking about "Lafayette, we are here" and other hands-across-the-sea matters and had bet their chemises off on two American horses in the second race.

One of the horses was Kantara, owned by Joseph E. Widener, and the other was Jock, owned by A. J. Duggan.

Kantara and Jock showed their sturdy American background by forgetting all about their French training and trying to run the race in the American fashion, which is counter-clockwise.

Now French horse races, for some unknown reason, are run clockwise. The American horses were having none of that.

The fans did not know American customs, but they did know that they were getting taken to the cleaners. So they did the only thing that was left for them to do:

They rioted.

They tore down the fences. They screamed, they poured out all over that track, tossing policemen about in their fury.

Authorities put in a hurry call for reinforcements from Paris. The reinforcements arrived. Heads were cracked. The melee went on and on.

Finally the battle and everything else, including the other four races scheduled for the day, were called off with the approach of twilight. Here's the biggest headache: A horse called Pepino won the race and paid $45.50 to $5.

House Unit Set To Probe NRA's Fight With Ford

Probe Witness

MAJ. GEN. MacARTHUR.

Quiz Opens Tomorrow; Seeks Results of U. S. Policy.

MacArthur Called By Sub-Committee

Summoned Only for Views on Legislation, Members Say.

By Robert C. Albright.

What promised to be the first Congressional probing into Government enforcement policies under the NRA was officially sanctioned yesterday by the House Military Affairs Sub-committee investigating Army purchases.

In the absence of Chairman William N. Rogers, the sub-committee in closed session decided to inquire immediately into the Government's move to bar the Ford Co. from bidding on automobile and truck contracts.

Following conferences with sub-committee members, Representative Paul Kvale, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite, announced the inquiry will probably get under way tomorrow, with Maj. Gen. L. H. Bash, quartermaster general of the Army, on the witness stand.

NRA Men May Be Called.

Representatives of the Comptroller General's office and even the National Recovery Administration, may be called to show just what denial of bidding rights to Ford has meant in increased Government procurement costs, and who has benefited most from the policy. The inquiry will further develop reasons underlying Ford's refusal to sign an NRA compliance certificate, said Kvale.

The sub-committee was closeted all morning with Maj. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the Army, who denied direct knowledge of Army procurement policies, and withheld his views on committee recommendations that Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois be relieved as Army Air Corps chief.

MacArthur was questioned regarding testimony of Col. Joseph I. McMullen, of the Judge Advocate General's office, that he (McMullen) had accepted fees for private services while on duty with the War Department.

But MacArthur consistently denied any information other than what he had read in published reports, and the committee turned to the chief of staff's legislative recommendations on Army promotions and National defense.

Members insisted MacArthur was

Dr. Marshall Considered as Steel Mediator

Labor Board Official Is Pushed as Chairman of Group.

Dr. Leon C. Marshall, vice chairman of the National Labor Board, last night was reported as under consideration by President Roosevelt for appointment to head a board of mediation for the embattled steel industry.

Secretary Perkins has directed recent negotiations to avert a prospective strike of 100,000 steel workers. The conferences, it is said, have emphasized the need for creation of a presidential board to conciliate differences between manufacturers and workers.

Friends of Marshall advanced his name on learning Administration plans called for establishment of the mediation body. They pointed out Marshall has a National reputation as an economist and has had wide experience as acting chairman of the National Labor Board in the absence of Chairman Robert F. Wagner.

Empowered by Congress.

The new board could be appointed under authority of labor legislation enacted in the closing days of the recent session of Congress. Both Houses provided by joint resolution for establishment of a board or boards to investigate issues in any labor controversy and, if necessary, to conduct elections among employes for collective bargaining.

Marshall formerly was professor at Johns Hopkins University. He also is a past dean of the College of Commerce and Administration at Ohio Wesleyan University. He holds degrees from Ohio Wesleyan and Harvard and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa Fraternity.

He is the author of "Readings in Industrial Society," "Business Administration," "The Story of Human Progress," and "Production in the Modern Order."

Served on Advisory Council.

During the war he was secretary to the advisory council of the Department of Labor and director of industrial relations for the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Observers believed the steel board would handle disputes in that industry in a manner agreeable to both sides and would function along the same general lines as the automobile industry mediation board, headed by Leo Wolman.

The recent Pittsburgh convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Stel and Tin Workers adopted a resolution calling on the President to name an impartial board of three to mediate all differences.

Cuban Gunboat Revolt Ended

Ship's Commander Nabbed Without Bloodshed on Vessel.

Havana, June 23 (AP).—A mutiny on the gunboat Cuba, largest unit of the Cuban Navy, was suppressed quickly and bloodlessly late today. The Cuba's commander, Capt. Evaristo Ulloa, was placed under arrest.

Capt. Ulloa had sent a message to the new chief of the navy, Angel Gonzalez, stating that he did not recognize the chief's authority.

Within three hours Secretary of the Navy Felix Granados announced that new officers sent to Antilla, where the Cuba lay, had taken charge and that the mutiny was over.

Capt. Ulloa, a member of the old Havana aristocracy, apparently was taken into custody by two army officers who flew to the scene.

A detachment of soldiers had been sent from San Diego to Antilla before the mutiny was suppressed.

$10,000 Offer By U. S. Spurs Dillinger Hunt

Federal Reward Bill Is Invoked First Time by Cummings.

Uncle Sam posted a $10,000 reward yesterday for capture of John Dillinger, the desperate Midwestern killer, who has been hunted for weeks in every corner of the country.

A reward of $5,000 was offered for the capture of Dillinger's pal, Lester M. Gillis, better known by his crime world tag, "Baby Face" Nelson.

The Department of Justice, in addition to these offers, also announced it would pay $5,000 for information leading to Dillinger's capture and $2,500 for information leading to the arrest of "Baby Face" Nelson.

In posting these offers, which will be broadcast throughout the country, together with photographs and other identification data, Attorney General Cummings took first action under the new Federal reward bill recently passed by Congress, which permits him to put up as much as $25,000 for the head of any public enemy. Officials or employes of the Department of Justice are not eligible to the rewards.

Posting of these rewards comes after weeks of futile effort by thousands of law officers all over the country to bag the most desperate killer of recent crime history. Dillinger, just 32 this week, has a record of cold blooded killings, bank robberies, jail breaks, and other offenses to make him without question the Number 1 Public Enemy. His ability to escape arrest after shooting his way out of one tight place after another so stirred Congress that it put through in the last session the measure under which the Department of Justice is now making the captured head of this criminal worth almost literally its weight in gold.

"I wish to express my gratification to the many local and State authorities who have entered so wholeheartedly into the Nation-wide hunt for Dillinger and the members of his gang," said Attorney General Cummings in announcing the reward.

He said he wished especially to commend the valor of the two police officers at Waterloo, Iowa, Paul Walker and Emil Steffin, who shot down one notorious member of the Dillinger gang, Tommy Carroll, a few days ago. Carroll died within a few hours with his lips sealed despite every effort of police officers to force from him some clew as to Dillinger's whereabouts.

The death-dealing bandit has been reported seen in various parts of the country, blind trails have led across to Canada and to Europe, he has been reported dead, any number of recent bank holdups have been attributed to him, one Indiana police officer swore recently that Dillinger rushed into the station house and beat him up—but the best detective brains in the country have been unable to get a clew that has up to now produced any real footprints of this phantom criminal.

Text of Announcement.

The Attorney General's announcement of the rewards read as follows:

"I, Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, by virtue of the authorty vested in me by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1934, and by virtue of all other authority vested in me, do hereby proclaim and offer the following rewards:

"1. For the capture of John Dillinger, $10,000.

"2. For information leading to the arrest of John Dillinger, $5,000.

"3. For the capture of Lester M. Gillis, alias "Baby Face" Nelson, $5,000.

"4. For information leading to the arrest of Lester M. Gillis, alias "Baby Face" Nelson, $2.500.

"All claims to any of the aforesaid rewards and all questions and disputes that may arise as among claimants to the foregoing rewards, or any of them, shall be passed upon by me, and my decisions shall be final and conclusive. The right is reserved to divide and allocate portions of any of said rewards as between several claimants.

"No part of the aforesaid rewards shall be paid to any official or employe of the Department of Justice."

Center of Record Hunt.

A reward of $5,000 for capture of Dillinger was posted more than a month ago by a proclamation signed by the Governors of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Minnesota and Michigan.

From the time Dillinger, on March 3, escaped from the jail at Crown Point, Ind., with the aid of a wooden gun, and fled in the automobile of the Widow Holley, the sheriff, he has been the center of a man hunt the like of which the country has never seen.

This was not the beginning of his spectacular crime career. At 20 he was convicted for robbery and assault. He was paroled in 1932. Within a year officers were searching for him as a suspect in a bank robbery in Indiana. Then he was jailed at Lima, Ohio, on robbery charges. Last October three men shot up the jail, killed the jailer and escaped with Dillinger.

Gathering around him a gang of former convict pals out of Indiana State Penitentiary, he terrorized the State, robbing banks, shooting policemen, and last January he was trapped with three others at Tucson, Ariz. Police recovered $40,000 in cash and $12,000 in jewels. He was taken by airplane to Crown Point, Ind., to face a charge of murdering a policeman.

Reported in Dozen States.

He became friendly with the widow who became sheriff when her husband was killed by a bandit. He became friendly also with the prosecutor—so much so that the prosecutor and the lady sheriff posed for news photographers with Dillinger, the prosecutor with his arm around the criminal. A few days later, he pulled a wooden pistol on the deputy sheriff and with a colored accomplice, they seized guns from the jail, hopped into the sheriff's car and escaped.

Police officers went into frenzied search. Dillinger was reported in a dozen States simultaneously. It is certain he was in St. Paul March 31, when he shot his way out of an apartment house and escaped. His father says he visited the family home at Mooresville, Ind., April 7 to 9, while police were searching the whole Middle West. On April 20 he and his gang took over a summer resort near Mercer, Wis., and when it was surrounded by Department of Justice officers he shot his way out, leaving behind two dead and four wounded as victims of the hundreds of shots that were exchanged. Since then there has been nothing but rumor as to his whereabouts.

"Baby Face" Nelson was with Dillinger in the battle.

Since then nothing but rumor has developed as to Dillinger's whereabouts.

Last week a warrant was issued for Nelson's wife, who was charged with failure to report to probation officers at Chicago. She was under an 18-month sentence for harboring Dillinger and his gang near Mercer, Wis.

Indianapolis, June 23 (U.P.).—Officers picked up fresh clews to the will-o'-the-wisp trail of John Dillinger today.

Capt. Jesse McMurtry issued a warning to all police squad cars that confidential information had been received indicating Dillinger and members of his gang are in Indianapolis. The source of the information, which was regarded by police as authentic, was undisclosed.

Baruch Favors 'Iron Rule' During Crises

Backs U. S. Industrial Control to Curb War Profits.

Government control of all industry in national emergencies to "take the profit out of war" was urged here yesterday by Bernard Baruch, financier and chairman of the World War Industries Board.

Speaking before the Army War College's graduating class, he declared the Government should fix a definite ceiling beyond which war profits and prices could not go.

While standing armies may not be up to full strength and the wheels of munition factories are lacking full tempo, Mr. Baruch said, he emphasized the world today is as "great an armed camp as it was in the World War."

Once a definite ceiling for war prices is set, the speaker asserted, "a tax program must be enacted that will take away, in totality, the spread between the selling prices and costs, plus a reasonable return.

"By parallel planning there must also be a control over all prices, goods, foods, rents, wages, services; in short, of all activties that yield profit. All must be denied the right to indulge in a joy ride at the expense of the Nation. The control of dollars must be made applicable to the entire citizenship, regardless of their classification.

War Profits Assailed.

"Incidentally, I hold the belief that the last war was profitable to nobody—neither to individuals nor to nations. They made apparent profits, but none of permanent nature. We should avoid even a first appearance of profit, for war is too horrible a thing to permit any advantage to be gained therefrom.

"Plans to eliminate war profiteering should provide that each man, each business, everything and every dollar shall bear its just proportion of the burden. These plans should be designed to avoid the prostrating economic and social aftermath of war, and, finally, should be laid with full recognition that modern war is a death grapple between peoples and economic systems, rather than a conflict of armies alone.

"Your studies have already shown you that in any major conflict the entire population must cease to be individuals following a self-appointed course and become a vast mechanical unit composed of corelated moving parts, all working to the end of directing practically all the National material resources to the single purpose of victory. Modern war requires that the full power of the Nation be exerted in the shortest possible time, not only for the purpose of destroying the enemy by material forces, but also by the process of slow and often insidious economic strangulation and political isolation. * * *

Pictures Activities.

"War on the modern scale we now know has disturbed our normal economic structure so greatly that, irrespective of the side which wins, the aftermath of the struggle prostrates both the conquered and the conqueror. To war's aftermath we must give such thought and make such plans that we shall not suffer again, what has become a burdensome 16 years after the war, as at any time during the war."

Mr. Baruch declared it is not generally realized how embattled the world is at the present time. He stressed that while it is true that the primary purpose of the present struggle was not to kill or maim," yet it has for its object the restriction of international commerce with immediate reactions upon the life and happiness of others."

Besides setting up tariff barriers and other methods of economic warfare, Mr. Baruch pictured activities as:

"Airplanes and navies are being increased and from some far distant places we can faintly hear the tramp of increasingly greater masses of men under arms. Surely in these circumstances you must study well the forces at work and be ready if the dreadful day comes to meet it.

Cites War Danger.

"It has been said that in the passing of dynasties of kings and princes who could make war, there would be less chance of war. There already is established in the world, governments under dictatorship with powers greater than that possessed by any of the modern princes before the World War.

"There is no doubt that peaceful as may be their intentions and their avowals, either Stalin, Hitler or Mussolini can plunge the world into a war that could not be localized.

"Yet I feel hopeful that this very situation—a world bristling with economic armaments — will soon bring home to the nations the necessity of sitting down together again and reestablishing some fair relationships, so that men and women may carry on their lives with a decent regard for the rights of all.

"That can be done; it must be done, and in that better day this country will hold its place, as it does now, as the chief evangel of peace and its blessings."

Miss Perkins' Aid Asked in Donovan Case

Urged to Head Probe Board in Ousting of NRA Union Head.

Secretary Perkins was requested yesterday to head a board to investigate the discharge of John Donovan, president of the NRA workers union, for the American Federation of Government Employes.

E. Claude Babcock, president of the federation, who asked Miss Perkins to fill the post, had not been informed several hours later whether she would accept.

"Our federation," he wrote Miss Perkins, "does not desire to hamper in any way an administrative service of the Government. This federation is totally and fully loyal. We do feel, however, that we must adjudicate this manner in some way in which either the official of the Government will be publicly vindicated or this local union president will be vindicated.* * *

"We all agreed that the best thing we could do would be to ask persons totally unbiased and unprejudiced in the case and of such high standing that their judgment would be accepted by all parties concerned, to assist us in the determination of whether or not this lodge president was removed for his union activities.

Donovan was dismissed by Recovery Administrator Johnson, who accused the lodge president of insubordination and inefficiency.

The lodge has begun raising a defense fund to be used in seeking Donovan's reinstatement.

Meanwhile, Nancy Luke, a clerk recently dismissed from NRA and reinstated by Johnson on the insistence of the union, wrote Donovan a letter of appreciation. She wrote:

"If and when the NRA heads will willingly cooperate with A. F. G. E. and recognize the union's rights to intercede for employes without retaliation, a spirit of friendliness and new life will course through the structure of the entire organization which will reflect no small credit to the New Deal."

summoned only for his views on legislation, and questions on the policies of Gen. Foulois and the practices of Col. McMullen were merely incidental. They pointed out that MacArthur will retire as chief of staff before Congress reconvenes, and the committee wanted the benefit of his recommendations.

The sub-committee's decision to look into NRA restrictions on Government purchasing, entirely unrelated to the chief of staff's appearance, came after Congress consistently sidetracked every effort to investigate recovery agencies and recovery policies.

Although NRA implications will be reached indirectly through Army truck and automobile purchases, both Kvale and Representative Edward W. Goss (Republican), Connecticut, said before they are through a complete picture will be offered.

"The policy of this committee has been to open up bidding wherever possible on a stiff competitive basis, and if Ford competition is to be eliminated, we have every reason to look into it," said Kvale.

"It is no small item in Government costs when the price paid for trucks jumps more than $50 a unit. If for no other reason, we want to develop the matter so the President will have information at hand on which to act."

The decision of the sub-committee was announced as the Detroit automobile manufacturer, who is willing to comply with code conditions but has refused throughout to sign a compliance certificate, was being barred from Government business on a broad front. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, last of the Federal agencies to move against him, ruled Thursday that not a dollar of the millions appropriated for loans to industries may be spent on materials supplied by firms not pledged to NRA allegiance.

Meantime, the House Army purchase investigating group, prepared to call former officials of the War Department in their search for irregularities in Army procurement.

Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War under President Hoover, and a number of former assistant secretaries may be asked to supplement testimony already presented by Assistant Secretary Harry H. Woodring, and others. Col. McMullen may be called again this week.

Department of Justice operatives assigned to the committee several weeks ago are watching the case for developments.

The sub-committee yesterday received a letter from Gen. Foulois, whose retirement as chief of the Army Air Corps has been demanded by members.

They declined to disclose its contents, other than to reveal "he asked for certain information." The sub-committee drafted a reply last night, which they sent to Chairman Rogers, in New Hampshire, for approval.

Appearing before the sub-committee tomorrow, Gen. Bash will be questioned again on preparation of specifications for trucks and automobiles, to determine what changes, if any, have been made, and what manufacturers they benefited.

Third Darrow Report on NRA Due This Week

Likely to Tell President of Situation Facing Little Business.

(Associated Press.)

Clarence Darrow's National Recovery Review Board, whose two previous reports had wordy repercussions in Hugh Johnson's office and on Capitol Hill, will make its third and final report some time this week.

This done, the board will disband and go home.

Darrow said yesterday the report was virtually completed. It will cover those codes not commented upon in the other two reports. In addition, it is expected to inform President Roosevelt what the board thinks in general about the manner in which one of his major recovery plans has worked out with relation to little business.

The 77-year-old veteran of historic court battles, in shirt sleeves and familiar suspenders, was working over the final pages of the report yesterday, in his hotel room a stone's throw from the headquarters of NRA.

Darrow Going Home.

To questions, he said:

"Yes, it's about done, we'll have it out in a few days."

Then with a weary smile:

"I'll be going home then."

The board has considered only NRA codes upon which complaints have been made, but the list already includes some of the biggest industries and involves some of the hottest controversies arising out of the National recovery act. Steel and bituminous coal were covered in the first group.

When the board made its second report, Darrow prepared to include at least a dozen more codes in the third report.

In the three months of the board's existence, it has received more than 600 complaints on something over 140 codes. The number of complaints climbing slightly after the first report was made public.

Monopoly Charge Made.

Reiterated repeatedly in the review of many of the previous codes were charges that monopoly had been fostered under the NRA law which was put into operation after suspension of the antitrust act. The Darrow board particularly emphasized this monopoly charge in its discussion of the steel industry.

Price fixing features of NRA codes, linked with the monopoly charges, figured in the previous reviews. After the first report, the trade practice provisions, allowing Recovery Administration, through an Executive order of President Roosevelt, released a number of service trade industries from fair them to agree on trade practices and prices in regional groups.

Darrow subsequently called this order a "complete verification of the criticisms we made in the first report of existing evils in certain codes."

The third report, covering studies of recent weeks, is expected to embrace comment on investigations of charges made against the effect of codes for the building material, cotton garment, hosiery, coat and suit and structural clay products industries.

Astor 3d Selects Pastor for Wedding

The Rev. Harold Burrill Picked for Rites.

Newport, R. I., June 23 (AP).—The latest obstacle in the somewhat rock road of John Jacob Astor 3d to matrimony—deciding on a minister to officiate at his wedding—was smoothed today as the Rev. Harold St. George Burrill, of Emanuel Church, was chosen to marry him to Miss Ellen Tuck French on June 30.

The Rev. Stanley C. Hughes, of Trinity Church, had been announced as the officiating pastor, but yesterday he found he could not perform the ceremony because of a previous engagement to marry the daughter of a boyhood friend at Ann Arbor, Mich.

Tonight, armed guards surrounded the French and Astor residences as costly wedding presents began to arrive.

Texas Peace Officers Indicted as Slayers

Rio Grande City, Tex., June 23 (AP).—Eulalio Elizondo and Jose Cantu, county peace officers, were indicted today for the slaying of Pablo Solis and David Gomes at a bloody political rally held here May 30. Both were arrested and released on $1,500 bonds. The men will be arraigned Monday.

The killings occurred at a political rally held by the forces supporting F. W. Seabury, of Brownsville, for State Senator against Archie Parr, choice of the Guerra faction, long rulers of Starr County politics.

City Planning Boards Grow To 739 Total

Maryland and Virginia Are Among Leaders in Work.

Increasing emphasis on the value of long-time plans for public works and civic improvements has resulted in the establishment of 739 city planning boards, the National Planning Board reported yesterday to Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Under these boards, comprehensive city plans have been prepared in 218 cities. In addition, 39 States have adopted the planning board scheme.

Leading many States in planning work are Maryland and Virginia, the board reported. Under the direction of George Radcliffe, Baltimore, regional director, Maryland has nine committees at work on planning. These committees range in interest from sociological development of the Georges Creek area of western Maryland to a group studying improvement of the sea food industry.

In Virginia, 18 committees are at work on education plans, public works programs, coordination of transportation, vital statistics and health, water supply, port development, and similar subjects. County and local governments are being studied in both States.

In Virginia, the planning board is aiding with research work in State schools. Preliminary reports are expected from most of the committees by August 1, and all are expected to have their final recommendations ready for the Legislature in January, 1936.

The National board reported to Secretary Ickes that "planning must appeal to the public as the sensible and economical method of determining the long time public works program. This can be accomplished, however, only by continuous educational efforts aimed at thoroughly acquainting each and every citizen with the purposes or objectives and advantages of planning well in advance of development."

Reactionary Democrats Rapped in Pennsylvania

Reading, Pa., June 23 (AP).—Charges that the Democratic party in Pennsylvania has failed to follow the liberal tendencies of the National Administration were tossed into the State convention of the United Workers' Federation of Pennsylvania today.

Stephen Raushenbush, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Security League, attacked the Democrats for what he termed their refusal to support "major social legislation" in the General Assembly.

Pact Is Signed To Cut 'Hot Oil' Output in West

Leading Companies Will Buy Surplus From Independents.

Moves to stabilize the petroleum industry in the Nation's two oil "trouble spots"—Texas and California—were undertaken yesterday by Secretary Ickes, the oil administrator.

To cut production of "hot oil" in the east Texas area, the administrator announced signing of a cooperative agreement whereby principal oil companies would buy up surplus stocks of gasoline held by refiners on condition the refiners would refuse to purchase crude oil produced in excess of quotas. For California, an "agency agreement" designed to end price wars was approved by Ickes.

The Texas agreement was announced as "a cooperative effort" by the industry, the Department of Justice and the Oil Administration. Ickes termed it "a real move toward stabilization," and Oil Administration spokesmen said it should go a long way toward curbing the troublesome problem of oil produced in excess of quotas unbalancing markets.

Under the California agreement, refiners agreed not to purchase or run any oil produced over allowables, and to post prices for gasoline. Surpluses held by independent refiners are to be bought up by companies party to the agreement.

The agreement also set a 3-cent margin for retailers, which the Oil Administration said was designed to halt destructive price wars recurrent in the area.

A large force of Department of Interior investigators has been working recently in the East Texas field to stop "hot oil" operations.

Tariff Board Order Ready For President

"Yankee Traders" Hope to Show Benefits of Reciprocal Deals.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

President Roosevelt's "Yankee traders" yesterday completed arrangements for showing off to the home folks to best advantage the "horses" they expect to get in their foreign trades.

They had prepared the rough draft of an Executive order, to be issued by President Roosevelt immediately upon his return here, to set up machinery for public hearings on tariff changes proposed in connection with reciprocal trade deals to be made under the new tariff bargaining act.

The group of experts which will negotiate the reciprocal trade agreements are expected to attend the hearings, which will be conducted by a special "Presidential trade committee" to be named by the President.

The committee is expected to have one representative each of the State Department, Commerce Department, Treasury Department, Agriculture Department, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, U. S. Tariff Commission, and the Peek foreign trade organization.

Same Groups Represented.

The same departments and organizations are represented on the executive committee on foreign trade policy, which has active charge of the trade agreement negotiations. It was considered advisable, however, to appoint entirely different personnel to the "Presidential trade committee" for the hearings.

At these hearings all industries and individuals affected by the proposed tariff changes can present their views and objections, if any. The committee which negotiates the agreements will rave representatives to explain the proposed agreements, their advantages and reasons why tariff changes are wanted.

The "Presidential Trade Committee" will make recommendations at the conclusion of the hearing. The committee, it is anticipated, will sit almost continuously after the negotiations get under way.

Most of the evidence presented at the hearings, the executive committee on commercial policy believes, will be submitted in the form of legal briefs, thus saving industries the time and expense of sending special representatives here.

Cuban Treaty First.

The first reciprocal treaty to come under this procedure is expected to be the new commercial treaty between the United States and Cuba, which is now almost completed. The reciprocal trade agreement with Colombia was negotiated before the present committee was formulated.

Cuban treaty negotiations are being handled by the committee, however. It is expected to be completed within two or three weeks, and will give the first practical working test to the "Yankee trading" machinery.

This treaty, it is generally conceded, will provide for reduced tariff rates on a number of Cuban products, notably sugar and tobacco, imported into this country in large quantities. In return, the Cuban government will grant reduced tariff rates to a number of American products, including American agricultural products. The reduction in the sugar tariff is expected to be about a half cent per pound.

Members of the negotiating committee expect protests from a number of industries and trade groups, but particularly from sugar and tobacco producers. These will afford the new "Presidential trade committee" an opportunity to swing into action and "sell" to American industry and business as a whole the proposals put forth in the new treaty.

A Lot of Us Must Have Quit Smoking

8 Billion Fewer Cigarettes Made During 1933.

A drop of more than 8,000,000,000 in the number of cigarettes manufactured in the United States last year as compared with 1931, is reported by the Census Bureau, according to the Associated Press.

Tobacco companies rolled out a 1933 total of 112,704,260,156 cigarettes, nevertheless.

The bureau reported that both wages and cost of materials decreased, but that there had been an 11.8 increase in the number of wage earners employed in the cigarette field.

Salmaggi Opens Opera Season in New York

New York, June 23 (AP).—Maestro Alfredo Salmaggi—Salmaggi, the spectacular—came back to the Hippodrome tonight. And since Salmaggi never opens an opera season with anything else, the inaugural was a gala performance of Verdi's "Aida." It had all the pomp possible with elephants and camels, as well as singers and ballet.

The long-haired impresario of the Chicago Opera Co. has not been at the Hippodrome since last winter, when he went on a National tour with his dollar-top company.

Engine Pulling Shriner Train Jumps Tracks

Montreal, June 23 (AP).—The Canadian National Railways reported today that the front truck of a locomotive drawing a special train of Shriners left the tracks at River Beaudette, 25 miles east of Cornwall, Ontario.

No one was injured, the company said, and after a 2½-hour delay the train, which was bringing the Shriners from their convention in Minneapolis, resumed the journey to Montreal.

Probers Are Told by Ickes Of Growing 'Kick-Back' Toll

paper investigation, Secretary Ickes said and added: "State prosecution was contemplated, but an applicable law could not be found."

Other Violations.

San Francisco, Philadelphia and other places were enumerated as places where complaints had been made and evidence found of "kick-backs," underpayment, and other violations of the wage and labor laws. Bradley B. Smith, of the investigation division of the Interior Department, outlined the methods pursued by the department to run down violations. Action was taken on all complaints, he said. Special agents were assigned to investigate them. Regular inspectors on the jobs were not used for that work, he said.

Apparent violations had been discovered on several hospital and soldier homes jobs, Herbert Baruch, representing the Veterans' Administration, testified. Herbert S. Wood outlined the procedure of the Board of Labor Review which was created to handle labor questions and problems incident to the emergency construction program.

Opinions of officials in charge of regular construction projects is being sought on what new legislation or Executive order within the power of the President is needed to protect labor conditions on those projects, Senator Walsh said.

To Talk With Roosevelt.

The situation was thrown into confusion by an Executive order suspending provisions of the Bacon-Davis prevailing wage law because administrative confusion and delay resulted from its operation and operation of the emergency regulations. As soon as he has worked out a definite plan to meet the situation he will confer with President Roosevelt on the subject, Senator Walsh said. The session yesterday brought the hearings to a temporary halt. They will be resumed later at call of the chairman. Meanwhile, Senator Walsh said, investigators for the committee will go ahead collecting data and preparing necessary information for the committee.

All PWA and other emergency construction projects continue to be governed, so far as wages and labor conditions are concerned, by the PWA rules which were described by Senator Walsh as much more stringent and effective than were the provisions of the suspended Bacon-Davis law.

Neither will the suspension affect regular Government construction projects contracted for prior to June 16, 1933, the date the National Industrial Recovery act became effective. All projects and the bidding on them also will be affected by provisions of the NRA building codes.

The suspension is not expected very materially to affect Government building in the National Capital because those projects which are not within scope of the PWA were begun prior to June 16, 1933.

NRA Is Lauded, Johnson Hit By Clyde Kelly

Says General Fails to Grasp Philosophy of Recovery Act.

Neaut Lake, Pa., June 23 (AP).—Represenative Clyde Kelly (Republican), Pennsylvania, a member of the Congressional sub-committee of three which wrote the original National industrial recovery act, told Pennsylvania newspaper publishers today he believes the NIRA "fundamentally is sound," but that "tragic mistakes" have been made in administration.

"Fundamentally the NIRA is sound and has qualities of permanency," Kelly told the P. N. P. A. delegates attending their annual summer convention. "In my opinion, however, Gen. Johnson has not understood the philosophy back of either the act or the NRA, resulting in administrative abuses."

Kelly, a veteran publisher himself, urged the others to fulfill "your great mission of furnishing raw material for the manufacture of public opinion."

The speaker asserted hundreds of press bureaus at Washington are sending out "bales of one-sided propaganda," and said the brain trust today should be the newspapers, "presenting actual facts from both sides of any question and a carefully considered, fair view" for the public.

"The publishers' great mission is the furnishing of raw material for the manufacture of public opinion," Kelly said.

2 Women Confess Killing Man, Report

Oneonta, N. Y., June 23 (AP).—District Attorney Harold Grant announced today that two women held in connection with the death of Harry Wright, 49, had admitted running over him with an automobile in an effort to collect his insurance.

Mrs. Martha Clift, 28, the prosecutor said, signed a statement saying she ran over Wright on Crumhorn Mountain on June 14, after Mrs. Eva Coo, 45, had hit him with a mallet. Grant said Mrs. Coo also signed a somewhat similar statement.

The purported Clift statement said that Mrs. Coo, proprietor of a roadhouse, was the beneficiary under Wright's life insurance policies to the extent of $3,000 in case of death by accident.

Borah Terms Sheppard Dry Plan Mistake

Thinks It Would Be Source of Political Corruption.

(Associated Press.)

Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, yesterday expressed his opposition to the new Sheppard prohibition plan, asserting it would be a "source of eternal legislative turmoil and political corruption."

The plan, proposed by Senator Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, calls for a Constitutional amendment to clothe the Federal Government with authority to regulate or prohibit alcoholic beverages.

Sheppard was a coauthor of the eighteenth amendment. He offered his amendment in the closing hours of the last session as a substitute for National prohibition.

Drys Rally to Sheppard.

At that time he declared conditions under repeal had shown that States were unable to handle the liquor traffic. He said he was offering his proposal for discussion and consideration in the approaching elections. Several dry leaders have since rallied to his support.

On the other hand, Borah, in a statement written for the Associated Press, indicated he favored a thorough trial of the State control method, with strong Federal protection for dry States against importations from their wet neighbors. The Idaho Senator, who fought side by side with Sheppard for retention of the prohibition amendment, said:

"I am unable to bring myself to believe in the amendment proposed by Senator Sheppard. I do not want to be amending the Constitution every fifteen minutes—like we would some poorly designed statute.

"Source of Corruption."

"I do not want to leave this matter to Congress—we would have it eternally with us, dominating legislation and politics. It would be up for consideration at every session, a source of eternal legislative turmoil and political corruption.

"The amendment would hamper and emasculate the police powers of the State without anything effective being substituted therefor There are other reasons."

In offering his amendment, Sheppard said he was still a believer in the old eighteenth amendment as the best way to regulate the liquor traffic. He emphasized, however, that his proposal would be more flexible in that it would permit Congress to prohibit, to regulate, or to do nothing about the liquor problem.

Steer Injures Godson Of Jefferson Davis

London, June 23 (AP).—Capt. Jefferson Davis Cohn, well-known English race-horse owner and godson of President Jefferson Davis of the Confederate States of America, was injured today by a steer which ran wild at Tex Austin's rodeo in White City stadium.

Physicians said one of Capt. Cohn's shoulders was fractured, and ordered him removed to a hospital.

Air Branch Name Will Be Changed

Department of Commerce Bureau Formed.

The name of the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce will be changed to the Bureau of Air Commerce, effective July 1, it was announced yesterday by John Dickinson, Acting Secretary of Commerce. The office of director, now held by Eugene L. Vidal, will be known as director of Air Commerce.

Authority for the change is contained in an order signed by Secretary Roper just before his departure for the Pacific Northwest.

The name more accurately describes the duties and functions of this organization, Dickinson said. It has enjoyed the status of a bureau, but it has never been so designated.

American Smelting Charge Dismissed

Trade Body Admits Lack of Jurisdiction.

Admitting lack of jurisdiction, the Federal Trade Commission yesterday dismissed its complaint against the American Smelting and Refining Co., alleging violation of the Clayton act.

The commission held that acquisition of the stock of the Federated Metals Corporation by the American S. & R. Co., violated provisions of the Clayton act regarding acquiring stock of a competitor. The smelting company denied the acquisition lessened competition, and asserted it had not acquired securities of another corporation in commerce as defined in the act.

In dismissing the complaint, the commission held it lacked jurisdiction, but indicated "that the acquisition complained of might well be the basis for court action."

El Paso Frees Mrs. Fidanque; Returns Home

Officers Gather Evidence That Kidnaping Story Wrong.

El Paso, Tex., June 23 (AP).—El Paso officers decided tonight to release Mrs. Sibyl Fidanque, 39, San Jose, Calif., radio singer, whom they had held in custody while they investigated her story that she was kidnaped last Saturday and brought here.

Confronted with information that police had evidence indicating she went to a Santa Monica, Calif., beauty shop alone and had her black hair dyed red, Mrs. Fidanque insisted she did not remember having this done. She previously had told officers here that her abductors, a man and a woman, had dyed her hair.

"It's all a blur," she said.

She was unable to refute the belief of San Jose police that she had not been kidnaped, insisting that the whole chain of events was still unclear to her.

"I want to help the officers clear things up as soon as I get home," she said. "The first thing to do is to meet the bus clerk (in San Jose) who said he sold me a ticket. I'm confident the whole affair will be cleared up somehow."

Mrs. Fidanque, the wife of a Panama Canal Zone business man, said she would leave here immediately with her son, Jack, who came from San Jose to join his mother.

Sheriff Chris Fox, of El Paso, earlier tonight had refused to release Mrs. Fidanque to the son. The sheriff said he wished to investigate her story further.

Fox and J. A. Street, Department of Justice investigator, conferred with Mrs. Fidanque afterward, when they learned from San Jose officers that she purchased a bus ticket there and was seen alone at a Santa Monica beauty shop, where her hair was dyed.

Fox asked young Fidanque if his mother was in the habit of making sudden trips, and the youth said she was not.

"My mother always left me a note when she went away from the house and I first became suspicious last Sunday (the day after her disappearance) when I returned home and found no note," the youth related. "I thought she might have gone on a trip."

San Jose Police Chief Scouts Kidnap Story

San Jose, Calif., June 23 (AP).—Chief of Police J. N. Black announced today investigation of the disappearance of Mrs. Sibyl Fidanque has convinced him the radio singer was not kidnaped.

He said results of the Federal agents' work on the case would be announced later, but cited as partial basis for his doubt of the attractive matron's story of being kidnaped, information obtained from a San Jose bus station and a beauty parlor in Santa Monica, Calif.

Frank Good, agent at the San Jose bus station, previously had declared he recognized the woman pictured in newspapers after her disappearance last Saturday as the one to whom he sold a ticket to San Francisco.

The police chief said Mrs. Fidanque's brother, Basil Maduro, of Hollywood, had gone with investigators to a beauty shop in Santa Monica, where attendants related a woman resembling Mrs. Fidanque had come in to have her black hair dyed red.

National Chief Are Guests of Maryland Group at Celebration.

To the wail of the bagpipe and the rhythm of the Highland Fling, the National officers of the Scottish Clans of America last night at Cheverly, Md., joined with the local Clan MacLellan and the Ladies MacLellan in a bit of old Scotland merrymaking.

The National chiefs, who dropped in unexpectedly at the gathering of more than 200 persons assembled at the home of Mayor Fred W. Gast, were from various cities throughout the East. They included:

Duncan McInnis, chief accountant of the City of New York, who is royal chief of the clan; Col. Walter Scott, New York, past royal chief of the clan, and Alexander McKnight, second assistant to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, NRA chief, vice president of the clan.

Guests also included Thomas R. Grebb, Boston attorney, royal secretary and editor of the clan publication, and William Reid, assistant accountant of New York City, royal treasurer of the organization.

The gathering was in charge of George Park, of Takoma Park, Md., chief of the MacLellan Clan, and William C. Petrie, of Cheverly, past chief of the clan.

Los Angeles, June 23 (AP).—A steadily mounting list of infantile paralysis cases included among the sufferers today Ida Lupino, film actress and daughter of Stanley Lupino, British actor.

She was the second screen personality to be afflicted. Harold Rosson, cameraman and estranged husband of Jean Harlow, was stricken several days ago. Twenty-eight new cases were reported in the city Friday, bringing the total for the month to 401.

Glass Is Voted 'Ablest' Democrat In Senate; Reed Leads G. O. P.

Wagner Called 'Most Industrious,' Borah Best Orator.

Huey Long and 'J. Ham' Win All Honors as Dapper Dressers.

of Oklahoma, was decreed the "handsomest Senator," while Miss Catherine Blanton, secretary to Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, was voted the "most beautiful woman employe of the Senate," getting 1 vote more than Miss Alice Uphoff in the office of Senator Felix Hebert (Republican), of Rhode Island.

"Not Up to Standard."

The consensus was that the present Senate was not up to the standard of previous Senates. Many of the voters commented on the submission of the Senate to domination from the White House and in a few instances it was likened to "a rubber stamp."

These were the high lights in the poll which was taken when Capitol Hill correspondents decided to go collegiate during the last few days of the Seventy-third Congress and let the world know what they thought of the Senate. Of the 435 correspondents listed as members of the Congressional galleries, 82 filled out the 28 inquiries of the questionnaire. But of the number who voted the majority were those whose work brings them frequently to the Senate gallery.

Among the correspondents voting were men and women representing newspapers in every section of the country and reflecting every shade of political opinion. Although there was nothing official about the poll—the standing committee of correspondents having no connection with it—the result where decisive might be regarded as a cross-section of opinion in the corps of Washington correspondents.

29 Call Glass "Ablest."

In reply to the question "ablest Senate Democrat," 29 correspondents named Senator Glass, the man who has been more bitterly opposed to many of the major items on the "new deal" program than any other Democrat. This tribute to the 76-year-old former Secretary of the Treasury was apparently based on the qualities he displayed in making what was a hopeless fight against some of the Administration's measures.

But 21 correspondents regarded Wagner as the "ablest Senate Democrat." The New Yorker is a stanch supporter of the "new deal" and has fought for two years for measures to decrease unemployment and to protect labor in its right to organize for collective bargaining. Democratic Leader Joe Robinson was third, with nine votes, while Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, was favored by five reporters.

Senator Reed, a conservative Republican, received 30 votes as the ablest Republican. Senator Norris was favored by 16 correspondents, while Republican Leader Charles L. McNary and Borah each received 10 votes.

65 for Borah as Orator.

There was a greater unanimity of opinion that Borah was the best orator than on any other question. He received 65 votes, while Senator Hiram Johnson (Republican), California, the runner-up, was favored by only seven correspondents. Two voters thought Norris the best orator.

While Senator Keyes received 31 votes as the "most silent Senator," Mrs. Hattie Caraway (Democrat), of Arkansas, was close behind him with 22 votes. Senator Marcus Coolidge (Democrat), of Massachusetts, went into third place with five votes.

The consensus was that the "best looking" men come from the wide open spaces of the West because the tall, silvery-haired leader of the inflation bloc, Thomas of Oklahoma, was first with 15 votes, while the tall, windsor-tie-wearing Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), of Texas, was second with nine votes. Senator Walter F. George (Democrat), of Georgia, was third with seven votes and Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, received six votes. Not a member of the Senate from a State north of the Potomac and East of the Mississippi river was the choice of more than two voters.

Wagner Most Popular.

Wagner was deemed the most popular Senator by 26 votes, with McNary receiving 12 and Harrison seven. Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, was held by 27 correspondents to be the "most ambitious Senator" while 10 favored Long and six Reed. In the opinion of 22 voters Vandenberg has the best chance of all of being President.

Long was the choice of 17 voters for "best dressed Senator" with Thomas of Oklahoma getting 10 votes. Reed received seven votes. Next to Borah's oratorical ability the voters seemed more strongly convinced that Lewis was the "flashiest dressed Senator." The bewhiskered displayer of fancy waistcoats and colorful handkerchiefs from Illinois was favored by 56 voters while Long won second place with 21 votes.

On the other hand, 17 correspondents favored Senator M. M. Logan (Democrat), of Kentucky, as the "Senator caring least for dress," with Borah being favored by 11 voters. Norris received 10 votes on this question. Most of those mentioned were from Western States.

Norris was named the "most liberal Senator" by 36¼ votes, the fraction resulting when one correspondent named four among whom he could not make a choice. Senator Homer T. Bone (Democrat), of Washington, was second with 15 votes, while Senator Robert M. La Follette (Republican), of Wisconsin, went into third place with 10¼ votes.

Fess Far Ahead of Field.

Fess was the favorite of 23 reporters for "most conservative Senator," with Senator Hamilton F. Kean (Republican), of New Jersey, receiving 12 votes, and Senator Jesse Metcalf (Republican), of Rhode Island, 9 votes. Two Democrats, Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma, and Glass were held the "most conservative" by three voters each, while two reporters thought Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, the "most conservative."

Tydings won the honor of having "the most sex appeal" by one vote over Senator Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, receiving 18 votes to the latter's 17. Four candidates were tied for third place with 3 votes each, including Mrs. Caraway.

Apparently proving that people, even reporters, prefer voting against some one rather than for them, every voter designated a choice for the "Senator who would be least missed." Only one other question—the flashiest dressed Senator—was answered by all filling out questionnaires. For the Senator who would be least missed, Robinson, of Indiana, received 42 votes, while Trammell received 11 votes. Long was third with 4 votes.

McNary "Senator Politician."

Republican Leader McNary was the choice of 20 for the "smartest politician in the Senate;" Long received 11 votes and Vice President Garner and Byrnes were tied for third place with 7 votes each.

Senator Bronson Cutting (Republican), of New Mexico, who, like President Roosevelt, learned about the classics at Groton and Harvard, was named by 26 reporters as the "most literary Senator." Close behind, however, was Senator Henry F. Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, with 24 votes. Senator Bennett C. Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, received 7 votes.

Ashurst, however, was the favorite of 23 for the "best mannered Senator," with Lewis receiving 20 votes and George of Georgia six votes. Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, was second in the race for "most industrious Senator," receiving 15 votes to Wagner's 18. Norris and Senator Morris Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, were each favored by six voters.

There was less unanimity of opinion regarding the "Senator least inclined to work" than any other. While Trammel got first place with ten votes; Erickson of Montana, seven votes, and Keyes, six votes, 25 other Senators received one or more votes.

"Robinson to Go Higher."

Democratic Leader Robinson was the choice for "Senator most likely to go higher and where," 39 reporters believing he would be named to the Supreme Court bench and one thought he would go higher, but did not designate where; seven thought Wagner also would go to the Supreme Court; four thought Nye would be Vice President; 22 believed Vandenburg would be President; four thought Byrnes would get a Cabinet post.

Of the 82 questionnaires filed, 45 left blank a choice for "most beautiful Senate woman employe." Miss Blanton was favored by 14, Miss Uphoff by 13 and Miss Anna Hurwitz, secretary to Edwin A. Halsey, secretary of the Senate, by six. A woman correspondent replied: "Victor Russell in Senator Sheppard's office is the handsomest man. Why ask a woman to vote on the beauty of another woman?"

James D. Preston, Senate librarian and former superintendent of the Senate press gallery, was the choice of 19 for "most popular Senate employe." John Carson, secretary to Senator James Couzens (Republican), of Michigan, was second with 9 votes, while Leslie Biffle, secretary to the Senate majority, was third with 8 votes.

Biffle was favored by 15 as the "most courteous, helpful Senate employe," while Preston received 13 votes and Col. Halsey 12 votes. Richard Riddell, a messenger for the press gallery, was third with 6 votes.

Long "Least Helpful"

Joe Robinson and Wagner each received 15½ votes for "most helpful Senator to the press"; McNary, 14 votes; Couzens and Borah, 10 votes each. Long was the choice of 10 for "Senator least helpful to the press," with Bulkley getting the support of 9 and Senator Henry D. Hatfield (Republican), of West Virginia, 7.

Lewis was the choice of 21 for "Senator most anxious to please the press." Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, was the choice of 10 voters, while Borah received 6 votes. Two voters replied "all of them."

Vandenberg was preferred by 22 as having "best chance being President," with La Follette in second place with 15 votes. Reed was selected by 6 and McNary by 3. The high ranking Democrats on this question were Bulkley and Byrnes with 2 votes each. There were 10 reporters who held that "none" of the Senate had any chance of being President.

Of 53 answers to the question: "Compare present Senate with previous Senates," susceptible of classification, 23 regarded this Senate as below the standard of previous Senates; 16 held that it was just as good and 14 voted that it was better. One thought it was the "best Senate in 12 years or more," another that it was "better but not much"; a third that "probably as capable as they come, but appearing weak because of bending to the President."

"Supine," Says One.

One correspondent contended that this Senate was "passive and supine — accomplished little constructive legislation—no initiative." Another wrote that it was "more radical-worded and reactionary-handed; a more abjectly docile hand-maiden to the White House." Another opinion was that "this one has a greater proportion of intelligent statesmen than any other I have known in my 10 years here." But another thought it the "worst ever" and another ventured the opinion that this Senate was "dull and demagogic." Others regarded this Senate as "better — harder working—more sober—more honest"; as "less oratorical and more business like" and as "best rubber stamp in history."

One correspondent wrote that the Senate "receded appreciably with the loss of T. J. Walsh; without presence of progressives would be utterly spineless. They may be wrong but they've got the guts to sacrifice patronage for principle."

Slain Baby's Body Reveals Mystery

Police of Five States Join Search in East.

Darien, Conn., June 23 (AP).—The police of five States sought tonight to penetrate the mystery surrounding the discovery today of the body of a child in a field not far from the Boston Post road, as Darien authorities became convinced that death had rseulted from violence.

Dr. William H. Slaughter, medical examiner for Darien, said the body probably had been in the field four months or more. A check of missing persons records by police here and in surrounding communities failed to show any child unaccounted for.

Dr. Fred A. Reininger, examined 20 teeth found in the skull and said from their condition the child probably was between three and five years old.

Reich Cabinet Now Divided Into 3 Camps

One Ultra Radical, 2d Backs Von Papen, 3d Leans to Hitler.

Berlin, June 23 (AP).—A division of the cabinet of Chancellor Adolf Hitler into three groups became evident today as discussions based on Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen's criticisms of some Nazi policies continued.

One group would have the Government adopt even more radical measures than the present policy; a second favors the reforms suggested by the more conservative von Papen, and the third is ready to follow Hitler, but hope he will be influenced by the conservatives.

Von Papen, who is tied to President Paul von Hindenburg by close personal friendship, was invited to visit the President at Neudeck tor the week-end, but decided it was wiser to postpone the trip.

Moratorium Discussed.

He will attend the German Derby at Hamburg tomorrow, and will visit the President's country estate next week after the country has had more time to think about his advocacy of a free press, free speech and non-interference in religious matters.

The Cabinet has met repeatedly to discuss the speech since its delivery Sunday, but the matter went into the background temporarily today as the moratorium discussions occupied Government officials.

Outstanding in the "radical" group in the Cabinet are Joseph Goebbels, minister of propaganda, who suppressed Von Papen's speech; Walter Darre, commissioner of agriculture, and Ernst Rohem, minister without portfolio.

Favor Wider Action.

These men believe the Government has not gone far enough in suppressing opposition, in the press and church as well as in other phases of life, and impressing Naziism on the whole German people.

With Von Papen in advocating conservatism in economic matters and more freedom for critics of the government are Franz Seldte, minister of labor; Franz Guertner, minister of justice; Konstantin von Neurath, minister of foreign affairs, and Werner von Blomberg, minister of defense.

Those who would follow Hitler blindly, while hoping he will see fit to become more conservative, include most of the other members of the cabinet, one of whom is the influential minister of aviation and premier of Prussia, Hermann Wilhelm Goering.

Delayed Parachute Record Is Claimed

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 23 (AP).—Clem Sohn claimed a new world record for delayed parachute jumping today after a jump from a plane more than 18,000 feet above Floyd Bennett Airfield during an air meet. One altimeter on the plane registered 18,500 feet and another as 18,200 feet.

Sohn did not open his parachute until he was within 2,000 feet of the ground. The unofficial record for the event is 17,500 feet.

Hanfstaengl Expulsion Is Urged by Anti-Nazis

New York, June 23 (AP).—More than 3,000 opponents of the Hitler regime staged a peaceful demonstration this noon in front of the German consul general's office, facing Battery Park.

Speakers demanded the expulsion of Dr. Ernst Hanfstaengl, Hitler aid, from this country and the release of Ernest Thaelmann, Communist prisoner, in Germany. The delegation was told that Dr. Hans Borchers, the consul general, would not see them, and they departed quietly.

Her physician said Miss Dressler was stronger than she had been for a week.

Teacher's Link In Lost Bride Case Is Probed

Letter to Poderjay Gives Clew; Sister Aids in Tufverson Hunt.

New York, June 23 (AP).—Information concerning Ivan Poderjay and his missing bride, Agnes Colonia Tufverson, was sought today by police from an unidentified Connecticut school teacher.

Two New York detectives were in Hartford and Waterbury to determine what knowledge the teacher, a friend of Miss Tufverson, has of Poderjay's mysterious activities.

The teacher was said by police to have sent a letter to the polished Yugoslavian, addressed to Miss Tufverson's East Side Apartment.

There it remained unclaimed for months, until police began their exhaustive search for her. It was hoped the teacher might be able to assist authorities whose long hunt for the talented attorney has been futile.

Stains Examined.

Chemists of the police department, examining brown stains found in the apartment have not yet made a report of whether they had been made by human blood.

A slim blonde girl is proving an untiring, valuable aid to police in their search for Miss Tufverson. She is the "baby sister" of Miss Tufverson.

Miss Selma Tufverson, known to everyone in the missing persons bureau as "Sally," is an able lieutenant, Capt. John H. Ayres, head of the bureau, said today.

Day and night in the painstaking search for clews she assists him, Ayres said, devotes her entire strength to a solution of the disappearance.

Resembles Sister.

Sally Tufverson, say those who knew both sisters, resembles Agnes in many respects. She is younger, not so large, but her face, her voice and her hair bring out the relationship in sharp relief. Sally is 30, her sister was 43.

The office telephone jangles. Miss Tufverson answers.

Outwardly calm, she tells a questioner:

"No, we haven't determined definitely yet that Miss Tufverson is dead."

The caller doesn't know he speaks with a sister of the missing woman.

Five sisters there were in the Tufverson family, devoted to each other, and all accustomed to hard work.

Gave First Clew.

Until the strange disapperance of her sister catapulated Miss Sally Tufverson into the midst of a mystery which Capt. Ayres describes as the most perplexing of the 350,000 cases he has handled, she was secretary to an attorney in Detroit.

Never once has there been a letup in the persistency of Miss Sally Tufverson. It was she who first discredited a cablegram which Poderjay since has admitted he sent in his bride's name, saying she had arrived in London.

"Agnes didn't write that," she said. "It isn't like her."

Then she told Capt. Ayres:

"My sister wrote to us every week without fail. That is—up until December. She would now, if she could."

And that remark, to Capt. Ayres, is significant.

Woman Is Firm In Slaying Denial

Mrs. Madison Awaiting Death Sentence.

Los Angeles, June 3 (AP).—Convicted of murdering her husband, Mrs. Nellie Madison, 39, former Montana cowgirl, calmly insisted in the county jail today that she was innocent. She awaited the formal pronouncement of a death sentence next Tuesday, the jury which found her guilty last night not having recommended leniency.

Madison, 45, auditor for a movie studio, was slain last March 25 by five bullets fired into his back in the couple's Burbank apartment.

Madison's body was found several hours after he was killed. Mrs. Madison was found two days later at the home of a rancher friend 50 miles away. Prosecutors contended she was in hiding, but she denied this, insisting she had not heard of her husband's death until officers came for her.

Held for Extradition

Hitler Studies Britain's Bid For Debt Talk

Acceptance Is Expected; Move Seen as Victory for Dr. Schacht.

Berlin, June 23 (AP).—Distinctly encouraged by the British invitation to talk over the problem of foreign debts, German government officials, led by Chancellor Hitler himself, devoted their attention today to a series of conferences on the problem.

The chancellor was understood to be taking an active part in the deliberations, and it was evident that eventually Germany will accept the British proposal, after a policy has been decided upon and negotiators named.

The British invitation, coming in the midst of threats to collect interest on the Dawes and Young loans by impounding German commercial accounts, was regarded in banking circles as a distinct victory for Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank.

Dr. Schacht had said that Germany would retaliate by cutting off commercial relations with countries setting up clearing houses as has been proposed in Great Britain and France.

While government and Reichsbank officials carried on their talks, Kurt Schmitt, minister of economics, and Sir Eric Phipps, the British Ambassador, had a long conversation at the American Embassy, where both were luncheon guests.

American banking circles here adopted a policy of watchful waiting, emphasizing that the United States is not likely to take any steps with regard to the moratorium unless it develops that some arrangement is made whereby American holders of German bonds are discriminated against.

40-Hour Week U. S. Goal, Parley Told

Labor Session at Geneva Puts Off Action.

Geneva, June 23 (AP).—Predictions that the influence of the United States will force adoption of a world-wide policy of the 40-hour week were made today at the final session of the international labor conference.

The American membership will be in effect at the 1935 session, the French delegate Jouhaux warned, and "you will be obliged to accept reductions of hours."

He made the statement after the conference had postponed for a year action on a resolution proposing advocacy of the 40-hour week.

Minnesota PWA Fund Probe Asked

Forced ContributionsFrom Workers Charged.

Minneapolis, June 23 (AP).—Charging that men employed on Federal public work projects "have been forced to contribute to the Farmer Labor Association," Republican leaders today requested Secretary L. Ickes, public works administrator, to investigate the handling of Federal funds in Minnesota.

Ward F. Senn, chairman of the Hennepin County (Minneapolis) Republican committee, demanded that Gov. Floyd B. Olson, Farmer-Labor, submit to the taxpayers of Minnesota "a detailed statement" covering the expenditure of approximately $24,000,000 in Federal funds which, G. O. P. leaders claim, passed through the Governor's hands.

There have been charges that men hired for conservation work in Minnesota had been working for the Farmer Labor party.

"ERA" Brand Will Designate New Deal Cattle

Half Million Animals Will Be Pastured in Old South.

A new alphabetical designation appeared yesterday when Harry Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, announced that some 500,000 cattle, which will be taken out of drought areas and fattened on more plentifully watered pastures in the South, will be branded with a uniform "ERA" insignia, to indicate they are New Deal property.

First shipments were ordered yesterday, 10,000 head to Alabama, the first of 75,000, which will go to that State, as fast as pasture is made available. Arrangements were made at a conference between Hopkins, Governor-elect Bibb Graves of Alabama, Thad Holt, director of FERA in Alabama, and several other officials.

Only thrifty beef-type cattle under 6 years old will be shipped. After fattening they will be taken to the last round-up and canned for distribution to relief families.

Other shipments ordered yesterday were 10,000 head to Tennessee; 5,000 to Oklahoma and 800 to Virginia. They are coming from Wisconsin and the Dakotas.

U.S. Emergency Outlay in Year Four Billions

Roosevelt's Six - Month Borrowing Estimate 3 Billion High.

(Associated Press.)

The Government's emergency expenditures during the fiscal year to end June 30 likely will total more than $4,000,000,000.

The Treasury yesterday set the figure for June 19 at $3,824,895,985. The last 11 days will carry that amount over the four-billion mark at the present rate of spending. Borrowing of the Government during the six months ending June 30, however, will be upwards of $3,000,000,000 short of the $10,000,000,000 estimate made by President Roosevelt in his budget message to Congress January 4.

The total was set by Treasury officials yesterday at $7,197,000,000, including $75,000,000 of Treasury bills to be sold this week. Of this, $3,162,000,000 represents new money and the remainder refunding.

No further important borrowing is expested until September.

Debt Exceeds 1919 Peak.

The National debt, standing at $26,981,458,205, June 20, exceeded the 1919 peak by $384,756,557, but was far short of the 29,847,000,000 named by the President as prospective for the fiscal year end.

Expenditures will come substantially under the $9,403,066,967 figure he set, having reached $6,851,124,353 June 20. On the same day, receipts of $3,042,556,414 were within strikinf distance of the $3,259,938,756 sum included in the budget.

The opinion has never been widely held that the Government, even with its enormous emergency operations, would spend the huge amount projected by Mr. Roosevelt, and it has been looked on generally as an informal outside limit under most adverse developments rather than an attempt to gauge actual outgo in advance.

When the budget was prepared, evpenditures were running at the rate of $800,000,000 a month, but since January they have never gone as high as $500,000,000.

Borrowing since the first of the year consists of $2,431,000,000 Treasury bills, $2,881,000,000 Treasury certificates and notes with maturities extending to 1939, and $1,885,000,000 bonds maturing from 1944 to 1948.

U. S. Reenters Coast Dispute

Labor Secretary Sends McGrady to Settle 'Longshore Strike.

Breakdown of peace efforts in the Pacific Coast longshoremen's strike yesterday prompted Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins to send her First Assistant Secretary, Edward F. McGrady, back to the strike area.

Proposals for mediation advanced by Miss Perkins broke down last week, and yesterday dozens of messages from citizens and civic organizations on the Coast demanding some kind of settlement poured into the Labor Department. Miss Perkins' answer was to dispatch McGrady to San Francisco by plane.

The Assistant Secretary only recently returned from the strike area, where he sought to bring the strikers and employers into agreement. The chief issue is control of the "hiring halls" where longshoremen are hired.

It is believed McGrady will "observe" the situation and press for acceptance of Labor Department proposals that the longshoremen, employers and the Labor Department sit in on management of the halls.

Marion Davies' Portrait Withdrawn at Exhibit

Venice, Italy, June 23 (AP). — A tempest in an art gallery came to a peaceful end today as Marion Davies' "Portrait Without a Country" was pulled out of the pavilion of the American exhibit at the Venice biennial exhibit.

The removal satisfied the objections of Mrs. Juliana Force, director of the Whitney Museum of Art, who had ordered the American paintings withdrawn because of the unauthorized hanging of the portrait.

Mailed Bombs Blamed On French Politicians

Paris, June 23 (AP).—Paris police today switched from the madman theory of the bombs mailed by "the three judges of hell" and worked on the theory that terrorists in some extreme political group are responsible.

From the spies in the ranks of both rightist and leftist groups detectives sought tips which might lead to the laboratory where the bombs are made.

Green Pledges Unionization Of Auto Shops

Announces Firm Intention at Detroit Session of Workers.

Detroit, June 23 (AP).—William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, told delegates assembled for the first annual conference of the United Auto Workers Federal Labor Unions today that it is the "firm intention" of the federation to unionize the traditionally open shop automotive industry.

"If I were to advise the automobile manufacturers," he said, "I would advise them to accept the fact that the workers are organized, and to bargain collectively with them. The most important objective in this movement is the development of cooperative relations between those who own the industry and those who serve it."

Of "company unions," he said they offer "the form without the substance," and that men who might submit to discrimination or discharge "become active rebels when a company union is forced upon them."

Green said the National automobile labor board has "served to remedy a lot of wrongs, settle a lot of grievances and act as a stabilizing force," but that he was not "fully informed at the moment of its specific accomplishments."

He said a National automobile council of organized workers was planned as a step preliminary to presentation of union charters by the A. F. of L.

The A. F. of L. head predicted a renewed fight in the next Congress for enactment of the Wagner labor disputes bill.

Factor Admits Fear Of Kidnapers' Guns

Chicago, June 23 (AP).—John Factor, market speculator, who for two years has fought extradition to England on charges of bilking investors of some $7,000,000, does not plan to make a personal appearance in court Tuesday when he seeks his freedom because, he said today, he is afraid of vengeance of the Touhy gang.

From his cell in the jail at Sycamore, Ill., Factor said he had heard that Tommy Touhy was "gunning" for him because of Factor's testimony that sent his brother, Roger, and three henchmen to the penitentiary for kidnaping him.

Batavia, N. Y., June 23 (AP).—Speaking today at the dedication of the Batavia Veterans' Hospital, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, veterans administrator, said "a liberal and adequate service" for the care of war veterans was still being maintained despite economies by the Government.

There has only been a slight reduction in the number of veterans receiving medical or domiciliary care, he said, adding that those in hospitals last February totaled 50,000, compared to 47,832 today.

Stage Drivers of Old West Meet Again; Woman, 73, Among 'Em

Tall Tales Told of the Days When "Road Agents" Were on Job.

Carpenteria, Calif., June 23 (AP). Men who drove the stage coaches of the Old West and fought highwaymen and Indians as an incidental duty assembled here today to swap yarns in a two-day reunion. They plan to make the gathering an annual affair.

Eager to perpetuate in tradition the romance and hazards of stage coach piloting during the frontier days, the old-timers came to review some of the most exciting chapters in Western history—when gold shipments ran heavy and the occupation of "road agent" was recognized in some quarters as a "profession."

Among those expected to attend is Mrs. Delia A. Rawson, 73, San Dimas, Calif., first woman stage driver to carry the mail in California.

To re-tell old stories and uncover many that may never have been told in this modern day is one of the objects of the reunion. Another object is to get the names and addresses of drivers and unify them into a companionable group.

The idea of the reunion was conceived by four veteran coach pilots here, Col. Fred Richardson, John E. Jones, Selin Carrillo and Maj. Joel Rimington Fithian. Each of these cracked whips from the swaying seats of Concord stages in the old days.

A crack pistol shot at 18, Mrs. Rawson drove the old style stage coaches until competition of the railroads forced the introduction of the more elaborate Concord coach. She used to start daily at 6 a. m., from Ukiah, Calif., and drive to Long Valley, north of San Francisco, arriving at 3 o'clock the next morning.

Shaughnessy, of Albany, N. Y., pleaded guilty to the killing of Lon Blankenship, Tucson automobile dealer, a year ago while Blankenship was carrying him in his car from Nogales to Tucson.

53 Hurt as Trolley Takes Wild Ride

Two Pedestrians Halt It by Seizing Pole Rope.

St. Paul, June 23 (U.P.).—A passenger-crowded trolley, with no one at its control ran a half mile through the loop district today before two pedestrians risked grave injury to bring it to a halt. Fifty-three of the 65 persons aboard were hurt, but only one seriously.

The wild ride started when the trolley collided with a sand truck. The motorman jumped to avoid being killed. The controls became jammed and the trolley brushed past the truck.

Edward J. Bisson seized the pole rope but could not keep the pole from contacting the power wire. Alfred Koepke, another pedestrian, came to his assistance. The car finally came to a halt.

Pecora, Landis, Mathews Seen On Market Job

Slated to Be Among Five Who'll Rule Exchange Under New Law.

(Associated Press.)

The Capital is pretty thoroughly convinced that three of the five men who will administer the stock exchange control bill will be James M. Landis and George E. Mathews, of the Trade Commission, and Ferdinand Pecora, counsel for the Senate Banking Committee.

Stock exchange officials and big business organizations have been deluging the White House with requests that two of the appointees be men versed in the ways of the market through long and actual experience with it.

The friends of the bill, at the same time, have been tugging the President in the other direction with the argument that an undivided commission would function best, and that precedent be given to men who favored enactment of the measure.

Landis was a prime influence in the drafting and subsequent revisions of the bill. He worked with the committees of Congress throughout their long consideration of the bill, and wrote the modifications of the 1933 securities act subsequently attached as a rider

Mathews has been in charge of the trade commission's administration of the securities act and has won acclaim from the elements that favored the enactment of the bill.

Pecora conducted the investigation of Wall street which led to the enactment of the present law. He has been anxious to return to his private law practice after nearly two years devoted to Government service.

The five commissioners are to be appointed for one, two, three, four and five-year terms, and it is believed that Pecora will accept the shortest of these.

Briton Cites World Spending for Arms

London, June 23 (AP).—In a speech at a Conservative meeting in North Worcester urging an adequate navy, Commander Bolton Eyres-Monsell, parliamentary secretary of the admiralty, today asserted that Britain is the only country which has decreased armaments expenditures in the past eight years.

During that period, the commander said, Italy has increased such expenditures 9½ per cent; the United States 10 per cent; Germany, 12; Japan, 80; France, 100; Russia, 197. England, he pointed out, showed a decrease of 16 per cent.

He declared, however, "It is about time we woke up in this country and that we look to our national and imperial defenses, because we can not go on pursuing an international dream of disarmament all alone."

Her late husband was a prominent figure in the copper industry, having founded the United Verde Extension, and for years was an official of the Phelps-Dodge Corporation.

Electric Woman Tests Fail to Prove Claims

Rome, June 23 (U.P.).—Anna Monaro, known as "the woman with the electric breasts," was dismissed from a neuro-psychiatric clinic today after a series of negative results in tests to observe the strange glow said to appear from time to time.

Scientists said the woman emitted no radiation from her breasts during 45 days of observation, despite the assertions of a number of physicians that the phenomenon had occurred while she was in a hospital at Pirano last spring.

Communism Hit By Junior Chamber

Maps Propaganda Fight and Adjourns.

Miami, Fla., June 23 (AP).—With a parting thrust at communism, the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce today ended its three-day National convention here.

E. R. West, head of the Los Angeles unit, was unanimously elected president of the National organization to succeed Leslie B. Farrington, of St. Paul. Columbus, Ohio, was chosen as the 1935 convention city to break a deadlock between Buffalo, N. Y., and Houston, Tex.,

Reciting that the "avowed purpose" of the Communist party is to bring about "overthrow of the United States Government," the Junior Chamber mapped a program to fight propaganda with legislative and educational campaigns.

New Effects of Cosmic Ray On Atmosphere Discovered

Intensities Are Measured by Electroscopes on Ships.

Berkeley, Calif., June 23 (AP).—Measurement of the intensities of cosmic rays throughout the world through recordings made on electroscopes placed on ships was productive of new and fundamental knowledge of scientific interest, Dr. Robert A. Millikan, of the California Institute of Technology, reported to the American Association for the Advancement of Science here today.

Chief among these new conclusions, he said, was one that fully 90 per cent of the observable effects of the cosmic ray on atoms in the earth's atmosphere is not due primarily to the action of incoming particles, but to that of secondary particles—positive and negative electrons—liberated in the explosion of atoms struck by the incoming particles.

"We have found," said Dr. Millikan, "that the resistance supplied by the atmosphere of the earth is approximately 6,000,000,000 electron volts. That the ionization (wreckage or otherwise altering the structure of the atom and thus changing its behavior) of atoms in the earth's atmosphere is immediately due to positive and negative electrons and not to the heavier particles of atomic nuclei such as protons, that probably over 95 per cent of all ionization in atmosphere is immediately due to secondary electrons formed in the atmosphere by incoming photons (bits of light) and electrons."

The recent studies based on analysis of ship electroscopes also disclosed, Dr. Millikan stated, that the intensity of number of incoming cosmic particles in a given area has been found to vary longitudinally as well as in accordance with the distance from the equator.

Dr. Millikan said additional proof that the bulk of the ionization due to the cosmic ray is attributable to secondary electrons is to be found in the startosphere measurements. These revealed the rays are less penetrating as height is reached, he said.

Farley Makes Public Stamp Design Plans

Grand Canyon and Yosemite Issues to Be Ready During July.

Descriptions of the Yosemite 1-cent stamp and the Grand Canyon 2-cent stamp of the National Parks series soon to be issued by the Postoffice Department and also the Wisconsin 3-cent Tercentenary stamp have been announced by Postmaster General James A. Farley. Mr. Farley also announced the dates and places of first-day sales for these stamps.

The Yosemite National Park 1-cent stamp will be arranged vertically and is to be printed in green ink. It shows a scene in Yosemite Park, with the famous El Capitan Mountain at the right. In a solid panel across the bottom of the stam is the inscription "U. S. Postage," in white roman lettering. Resting on this base is a dark panel with curved top and ends, within which in a curved line, along the upper edge is the title "Yosemite," in white Gothic type. Below the title is the figure 1c in white Roman, flanked on either side by white line ornaments. The stamp is inclosed in a narrow double-line border.

Available July 16.

This Yosemite stamp will be placed on first-day sale in the Yosemite National Park Postoffice in California and also at the Philatelic Agency in Washington on July 16.

The 2-cent Grand Canyon National Park stamp is arranged horizontally and will be red in color. The central design on this stamp is a view of the Grand Canyon, depicting the temples of Deva, Brahma and Zorcaster, and also Bright Angel Canyon. On either side of the stamp are upright panels containing the words, "U. S. Postage," at the left and "Grand Canyon" at the right in white Gothic letters, arranged vertically within an ornamental frame work. In each lower corner is the denomination designation "2c" in white. The stamp is inclosed in a narrow double-line border.

First-day sales of this Grand Canyon stamp will be held in both the Grand Canyon postoffice in Arizona and also at the Philatelic Agency on July 24.

The one change in the National Parks stamps program, as announced by Postmaster General Farley, is the shifting of the Crater Lake National Park stamp from the 8-cent to the 6-cent denomination, and of the Zion National Park stamp from 6 to 8 cents.

Wisconsin Stamp Purple.

The 3-cent Wisconsin Tercentenary stamp, which is being issued in commemoration of the 300th anniversary of the arrival of the explorer Jean Nicolet on the shores of Green May, Wis., will be purple in color and will be arranged horizontally. Extending across the top of the stamp in a narrow panel is the inscription "1634—Wisconsin Tercentenary—1934" in white Roman lettering. The central subject is a reproduction of the painting depicting the arrival of the explorer on Wisconsin shores. At the base of the central subject is the title "Nicolet's landing on the shores of Green Bay" in solid Gothic lettering. Along the lower edge of the stamp are the words "United States Postage" in white Roman type. In each lower corner appear the figures "3 cents" in white.

The Wisconsin Tercentenary stamp will be first placed on sale at the Green Bay, Wis., postoffice on July 7 and it will be available at the Philatelic Agency on July 9.

Worm-Eating Mushroom Has Hunting Habit

Fungus Revealed as One of Civilization's Best Aids in Industry.

By Robert Shosteck.

It is news when a man bites a dog; so, too, it is news when a mushroom bites a worm. This reversal of "who bites what" is recorded in an interecting account of a threadlike fungus which extrudes a maze of threads which envelop and virtually engulf the luckless worm. Upon the death of the worm, the fungus slowly absorbs its nutritious juices.

It is only the unusual mushroom that hunts worms since most of our fungi find already decayed animal or vegetable matter a satisfactory diet. The fungi as a group include bacteria, mushrooms, smuts and molds, and constitute the great class of destroyers, reducing to simple chemical compounds the decadent or senile plant or animal body. The green plants on the other hand are the great class of builders, making food and foliage by means of tiny green bodies within the leaf which combine carbon dioxide gas with water and minerals, utilizing the sun's energy to accomplish this chemical reaction.

Mushrooms Best Known.

Mushrooms are the largest and best known of the fungi. Hundreds of species are native to this region, many of which are edible and quite a number known to be deadly poisonous. These are many very beautiful species, such as the coral fungus which resembles sea corals, the tongue of flame, the hedgehog hydnum, the morel and the wheel mushroom. While it may be safe for the experienced mushroom collector to gather wild edible kinds for the table, the amateur who does so flirts with death. It would be safer to place his hands in a rattlesnake den since two good antidotes are known for snake venom, while there is none for the poisonous amanita. Most deadly species may be recognized by the "death cup," a bag-like structure surrounding the stalk, and by the presence of white gills, the thin plates beneath the cap. The destroying angel fits this description.

In the matter of propagation, some of our fungi would put the salmon to shame. The common bracket fungus has been estimated to liberate 11,000,000,000 spores from a single bracket. That means that over a million spores go free every minute! Only one spore in 20,000,000,000 ever mature, scientists assure us.

Cultivated by Ants.

Mushrooms are domesticated not only by man, but also by ants and termites, which construct spacious mushroom cellars in which they cultivate small species of mushrooms for "home consumption." These gardens are carefully cultivated and watered by the insect farmers.

Different species of mushrooms and other fungi perform essential services for man. Yeast raises our bread and buns and ferments beer, while rocquefort cheese owes its flavor to a certain mold. Fungi make our buttermilk and cheese, tan our leather, cure our tobacco, ferment our sauerkraut and afflict us with "athlete's foot." Business men will be interested in the forgery-proof writing fluid obtainable from the inky coprinus mushroom, a slivery gray species whose cap reminds one of a partly open umbrella. People who enjoy both mushrooms and garlic may have both in the garlic mushroom, a variety easily found by the nose.

A mushroom's family relationships are often determined by the color of the microscopic spores which may be white, rose, ochre, purple, brown or black. The mushroom collector may make a beautiful circular "spore print" by removing the stem of a fresh specimen, and placing the cap on a piece of white paper, leaving it there undisturbed for two hours. On carefully removing the cap, a deposit of millions of spores will remain in the figure of a wheel, colored according to the family to which this specimen belonged.

Puffball Is Largest.

The giant puffball is probably the largest mushroom found in the United States. A single specimen, often 15 inches in diameter, will provide a meal for a large family. Prof. Buller calculated a large specimen to contain 7,000,000,000,000 spores; yet this species is rather scarce! While such fungi as the puffball are short-lived, certain of the bracket fungi live to the ripe old age of 10 years. Just visit the next oak tree bearing these brackets and count the number of concentric zones marked on it. Each zone, like the rings on the cross-section of a tree, represent one year's growth.

When Bill Farmer plans legumes one season in order to enrich the soil, he is employing the world's most efficient chemists A little fungus, known to scientists as pseudomonas, cause the formation of tubercles on the roots of legumes such as beans, peas and clover. Working day and night within these tubercles, these little fungi transform the nitrogen of the air into nitrate food which the plant can utilize. In exchange for this favor, the bean or pea plant gives shelter and food to the bacteria.

Poison Baited for Rats Menaces Neighbor Dogs

Rat poison, set for sleek rodents. is a menace to dogs in the vicinity of Webster, Allison and Buchanan streets northwest, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets, Postmaster W. M. Mooney said yesterday.

In warning dog owners of danger to their pets; Mr. Mooney pointed out that several rats and pigeons have been found poisoned within the past several days. The poison is intended for the rats, Mr. Mooney asserted, but dogs should be kept closely on leash and watched carefully.

Price Goes Up, But U. S. Has Enough Wheat

Short Crop After Drought Leaves Good Supply on Firm Market.

Despite drought which curtailed the Nation's wheat crop, Robert E. Sterling, editor of the Northwestern Miller, believes American granaries will be full this year.

By Robert E. Sterling

(Editor Northwestern Miller.)

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Kansas City, Mo., June 23.—We who live in the midst of the territory suffering from the unprecedented spring drought are likely to emphasize too much its effects upon food and feed conditions.

Talk of shortage in wheat supplies in this country or in the world is absurd. The world still has a burdensome surplus of wheat, and this country has much more than enough for its own needs.

As a matter of fact, when Northern hemisphere harvests are completed next August, the world will have a total stock of wheat within a few million bushels of last year's peak, far more than enough for current needs and ample to keep world prices from fully following the present American advance.

Prices Help Producers.

In the United States, the lowest estimates of combined spring and winter harvests suggest a crop of nearly 550,000,000 bushels. With the carryover added, this means a total supply of 800,000,000 bushels, against actual year's requirements for food, seed and waste of but 625,000,000 bushels.

Quite naturally, however, the virtual wiping out of the long troublesome surplus was bound to be reflected in the price level. Through our system of trading in wheat for future delivery, this advance has come at once, so that the growers will get the full benefit of it, instead of later in the year, when most of them would have marketed their grain.

Providence in a few weeks has done more to adjust production to needs than the Government has been able to accomplish in a year with a vast and complex machine and expenditure of about $125,000,000, collected through the processing tax on the people's bread.

Weather Still Supreme.

At the same time, public sentiment, working through the equation of supply and demand, has brought about an advance in the wheat price greater than the Government has been able to effect by use of a multitude of devices, including changing the weight and value of the dollar.

The present world situation in wheat simply demonstrates that all of the devices of international swapping and bartering of duties, quotas and allotments come to nothing in a contest with nature, sunshine and showers. These and these alone determine the world's crops of bread grains.

In this country, too, it is reemphasized that all of the things which the agricultural planning philosophers said were old fashioned and should be discarded, still are the determining factors. A month's drought has disposed of the surplus, a month's free play of supply and demand has restored prices.

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker
(Trade-mark Applied For).

Oregon passes in review today in the Federal Diary's Parade of the States. Tennessee will appear Tuesday; Rhode Island on Wednesday; New York on Friday and Virginia will conclude the parade next Sunday.

Toast to Oregon.

To know her is to love her charms;
Her scenic beauty which disarms
All who traverse this wonderland
Adorned by nature's lavish hand
When in her most endearing mood—
Columbia's Gorge, Cascades, Mount Hood—
The rich Palouse, the Siskiyous,
Multnomah Falls—go where you choose,
You'll find no place that can compare
In beauty here found everywhere.
Yet this is not her only claim
To leadership, or wealth and fame,
For this fair land is also known
Because of wheat and apples grown—
For lumber, salmon fisheries,
Herds, mills and shipping industries.
So, drink to Oregon a toast—
That rose of roses on the Coast!

SPANISH navigators in the seventeenth century were the first white men to see Oregon. The earliest authentic exploration of the coast was made by Capt. Juan Perez in 1774. Historians credit Capt. Bruno Heceta with the discovery of the Columbia River. The American Capt. Gray, who followed Heceta, named the stream after his ship, the Columbia.

BAKER.

The first whites to enter Oregon by land were, as usual, the English and French fur traders. But here, as elsewhere in their transient trading and hunting, they left no records of their explorations. The American expedition under Lewis and Clark reached Oregon and laid eyes on the Pacific on November 5, 1805. The expedition established winter quarters and a fort and spent the winter on the south bank of the Columbia River. They named the settlement of seven cabins and a stockade Fort Clatsop.

Lewis and Clark found the Northwest Indians good-natured and easy to get on with, but very sharp in trading. They were also addicted to petty pilfering, which made a constant vigil over supplies necessary. The Indians were exceptionally skilled in navigation; were expert canoe craftsmen.

Indian Woman a Guide.

No story on Oregon is complete without mention of Sacajawea, the faithful Indian woman, and her husband, Chaboneau. Sacajawea acted as guide, interpreter and good-will factor with the Lewis and Clark expedition. Handicapped by having to carry her papoose on her back, this Indian woman accompanied the Americans all through the three-year journey. Of all the States traversed and helped to open, Oregon is the only one which has expressed its gratitude to this faithful woman by erecting a statue in her honor. In one of the parks in Portland a monument stands to the faithful Sacajawea, who helped break the way to the Pacific.

Permanent settlement in Oregon was first made in 1834 by American Protestant missionaries to the Indians. Most famous of these missionaries was Marcus Whitman, who is regarded as the real opener of the Oregon Trail. He recrossed the mountains and plains in 1842-43 and returned with wagons. The final reward of the brave Whitman was to be murdered in 1847, together with his wife and 12 others, by the Cayuse Indians, who destroyed the mission.

Derivation of Name.

The name of Oregon is said to be derived from an Indian word, "Origan," "River of the West," which the Indians of the Mississippi headwaters used. John Carver, of Connecticut, published a book in 1778, in which he used the name "Origan," correct as it was spelled then. The syllable "gan" occurs in several Indian dialects in the sense of "water," as in Michigan.

Nicknames of this State are "Beaver" and "Webfoot," the latter pertaining to its rainy climate.

Oregon was made a Territory in 1848. With reduced limits it was admitted to the Union as a State in 1859, being the thirty-third in order of admission. It is the ninth in size and ranks thirty-fourth in population (953,786 in 1930).

THE name of the capital, Salem, was transplanted by the New England missionaries. The early history of Salem is romantic, with years of trade with China, the East Indies, Africa and South America. However, the modern Salem has a thriving coastwise trade in prosaic coal and ice.

"Alis volat propriis," ("She flies with her own wings") is the State motto. The State flower is the Oregon holly grape, a plant peculiar to the region.

For accurate information, courteously and promptly produced, on anything in connection with Oregon, we recommend Mrs. Helen Beelai (*), of Portland, who is employed in Senator Steiwer's office. Mrs. Beelai is a graduate of the University of Oregon.

Post Staff and Harris & Ewing Photos.

These two typical young Oregonians possess enviable talents and hold responsible positions with the Government. Miss Margaret Leona Stauff, of Marshfield, has a secretarial position in Procurement Division, Treasury. Miss Stauff is a leader in music circles on the Pacific Coast and has traveled alone in Europe, "off the beaten path, to see what it was like beyond the guide books." Edward C. Kelly, of Medford, is counsel at PWA. Significant of his high qualifications is the fact that he was graduated from high school when only 15 years old. He is a graduate of the University of Oregon.

Prominent Oregonians.

Among the prominent Oregonians in high Federal office is Charles Rogers Arundell, of Portland. Mr. Arundell was formerly in charge of public lands of Alaska in the General Land Office, Interior. He is now in his second term on the Board of Tax Appeals.

Dr. Edward Dorris McAlister, of Eugene, prominent in American scientific circles is now with Division of Radiation and Organisms, Smithsonian Institution. Dr. McAlister has published numerous scientific articles and is a member of the American Physical Society and other honorary groups.

Artist and traveler, Miss Pherne B. Miller, of Eugene, is one of the most efficient and popular employes at Farm Credit Administration.

PORTLAND has a distinguished son here in the person of Calvin I. Kephart, an official in Bureau of Formal Valuation Cases, Interstate Commerce Commission. Three important titles are his. He is a major in the Q. M. Reserve, U. S. A.; holds a Ph.D. degree from American University and is an attorney. Dr. Kephart's other degrees are B. S. in engineering (with honors); LL.B., LL.M., D.C.L. and B.C.S.

KEPHART

In addition to Dr. Kephart's talents in engineering and law, he is a writer and poet, having had numerous pieces published in various papers and magazines. He married Miss Olga Ahlson von Zweigbergk, of Portland. They have four children.

Still a leader in the Oregon State Society is Miss Vella Alberta Winner (*), of Portland, one of its organizers. Miss Winner is director of publicity for the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the largest organization of its kind in the world.

Clearing House To Aid German Payment Urged

Speed of Debt Settlement Would Depend on Total of U. S. Purchases.

New York, June 23 (AP).—Establishment of a German-American clearing house for settling debts is being discussed here unofficially as a result of the Reich 6-month foreign debt payment moratorium.

The initiative would have to be taken by the U. S. Government, it is presumed here, but cooperation of American importers and German exporters would be necessary.

The public also would be obliged to cooperate to insure success of the clearing house, especially those elements which have pressed the Nazi boycott.

The recent moratorium was proclaimed, it was stated by Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, because Germany's export trade has dwindled and she has been forced to meet heavy reparation payments.

Accumulation of gold and foreign exchange to meet reparations and pay for imported goods is based on the amount of goods Germany can sell to foreign nations, the bank stated.

A German-American clearing house at a chief import point such as New York would collect dollars from Americans purchasing German exports, under the proposed arrangment, and the dollars would be applied by the Government against German obligations held here.

The German producer who sent the goods to America would be paid by the German government in Reichsmarks, the German government collecting its money in the form of canceled obligations owed the United States.

The rapidity and volume of payments by Germany on the U. S. debt would thus depend entirely on the amount of goods purchased by Americans from Germany.

15 Candidates For Governor In Four States

South Scheduled to Hear Heated Campaigns in Summer.

Columbia, S. C., June 23 (AP).—Fifteen candidates are shelling the hustings in four Southern States with only a quartet of gubernatorial offices to divide among them.

The majority, eight of them, are after the South Carolina job, with keen interest in the fight between the veteran firebrand, Cole L. Blease, and young Olin D. Johnston for the heavy textile mill vote upstate.

Economy in government, the old campaign standby, is as full of vigor as ever. Everybody, everywhere promises taxpayers that, if they will only elect this particular candidate, their worries of government expense soon will be over.

Actions and personnel of highway boards or commissions also are coming in for the usual lambasting by the outs and defense by the ins, with liquor, a dead issue in the South for many years, again raising its head in two States.

Old S. C. Custom.

The South Carolinians already have started their county-to-county campaign, an odd custom under which all candidates travel together and all speak at designated places on the same day. With eight out for governor and many minor State officials fighting for their posts, the speaking takes about all day.

Blease, former Governor and former Senator, who shocked the country when Huey Long was still in short pants by shouting "to hell with the Constitution," has dropped many of his bombastic ways and taken a cue from Al Smith with a "let's have a look at the record." He points with pride to his previous terms.

Johnston, Spartanburg lawyer, who was runner-up to Gov. Ibra C. Blackwood in the last contest, again is promising to fire the highway department from top to bottom and, a graduate of a textile mill college, is battling Blease where lies the greatest strength of both.

Four candidates, Lieut. Gov. James O. Sheppard, Tom B. Pearce, Wyndam Manning and H. Kemper Cooke, have thrown prohibition into the race by advocating legislation for sale of liquor, if the people desire.

Our candidates are Dr. L. B. Owens, former mayor of Columbia, and C. E. Sloan, of Greenville, the "mountain lion" of the Blue Ridge Foothills.

Interest in the Georgia race has centered in attacks of Judge Claude Pittman against Gov. Eugene Talmadge. The North Georgia jurist, who approves of practically nothing the Talmadge Administration has done, says the Governor, who threw out an unfavorable highway board at the point of bayonets of the State militia, has interfered with the highway situation by imposing his own will on the board; has issued too many pardons and failed to pay the teachers.

Governor Denounced.

He has particularly denounced the Governor for his opposition to certain policies of President Roosevelt, his criticism of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and his calling Washington a "mad house."

Pittman claims Ed A. Gilliam, Atlanta attorney and third man in the race, is a "stalking horse" for the Governor, while Gilliam, denying the charge, is calling for prohibition repeal and attacking the Governor on his record.

Talmadge has not started an active campaign, but was expected to base his plea for reelection on reduced utility rates, cheaper automobile tags, proposed divergence of highway funds and a promise to get the State out of debt in two years.

The only quiet spot on the Southern front is Arkansas, where neither Gov. J. Marion Futrell nor his opponent, former State Comptroller Howard Reed, has opened his campaign.

In Tennessee, where the Democratic McAlister-Pope contest is becoming something of a habit, Gov. Hill McAlister again is opposed by his old political enemy, Lewis S. Pope, Nashville lawyer.

They were rivals in 1928 when both were eliminated. Neither ran in 1930, but returned to the wars in 1932. Pope lost, took his case to the executive committee, lost again, and entered the general election as an independent only to lose the third time.

Both promise strict economy in government, both are drys and chiefly differ on the method of making constitutional changes.

Tennessee is one of the few States in the South where a Republican is taken seriously. The party has five candidates out for Governor, C. N. Frazier, of Camden; John E. McCall, of Memphis; William H. Clark, of Jonesboro; Waynes Maddox, of Huntington, and Howard B. Shofner, of Nashville. Some are expected to withdraw.

Tennessee gets the jump on the others by holding primaries of both parties on August 2. Arkansas votes August 14, and South Carolina August 28, while Georgia, which takes its campaign speeches and barbecue together, is in for a lot of eating before balloting on September 12.

Increase in Veteran Insanity Is Reported

Chicago, June 23 (AP).—What they described as a "rapid increase" in insanity among former service men concerned leaders of the American Legion's rehabilitation activities as they met today for a regional conference.

Wales Bids Thirties Farewell; Anniversary Just Another Day

London, June 23 (AP).—Life of a new kind in the eyes of the public began at 40 today for the Prince of Wales.

Though it was not easy for the world to realize from his appearance, the cold figures of the calendar showed that the heir to the British throne is no longer a "boy prince charming" in his thirties.

On his fortieth birthday the world's most famous bachelor still seemed as far away from marriage as ever, and there was not even a rumor that he is engaged.

The gradual dying out of these engagement rumors gave strong support to a statement made four years ago by a close member of the prince's entourage to the effect that he is likely to be a bachelor king.

The prince spent the day quietly, putting in the morning at Fort Belvedere, his residence at Sunningdale, and lunching with King George and Queen Mary at Windsor Castle. Family birthday gifts accompanied the luncheon.

Greetings from heads of governments and other persons were received by the hundreds.

The prince gave no public indication that this birthday anniversary is any more than just another June 23.

He is still slim and lively and his restless energy is not diminished in any degree.

D. C. Merchants Are Welcomed By U. S. Fleet

Boosters Get Two Hours of Deep Sea Fishing Off Virginia Capes.

(By a Staff Correspondent.)

Aboard S. S. Southland, Hampton, Va., June 23.—Sleek greyhounds of Uncle Sam's scouting fleet and a squadron of Navy planes greeted the 125 members of the Washington Merchants and Manufacturers Association this morning as this steamer sailed into Hampton Roads on the twenty-third annual booster trip of the organization.

The battleships and cruisers are among those reviewed two weeks ago by President Roosevelt. They arrived at the Roads a few hours before the Washington party.

As the Southland sailed toward Old Point Comfort beach, flags on the mast of the scouting fleet's flagship, Indianapolis, under command of Vice Admiral Edward H. Campbell, ascended in a salute of welcome. After a short stay at Old Point Comfort, the Southland headed for the Virginia Capes, where the business men experienced real ocean sailing, with two hours of deep sea fishing.

Competition was keen in the fishing contest between George W. Offutt, chairman of the District Liquor Control Board, and William A. Van Duser, director of traffic, guests with the party.

Dusk took the party into Chesapeake Bay for a night of leisurely cruising, preparatory to arriving in Annapolis Sunday morning.

Time will be allowed in the Maryland capital for a tour of the Naval Academy and attendance at church.

The remainder of Sunday will be spent in further cruising in Chesapeake Bay and the return to Washington will be started Sunday night.

Due to a few delays, the merchants were unable to carry out their schedule as originally planned. One of these delays was caused by members of the party being late in returning from a visit to Norfolk.

The delay forced elimination of visits to the battleships. A visit to the Navy's new airplane carrier, the Ranger, also was canceled.

Vice Admiral Campbell, after giving his official welcome to the Washington merchants, was host on board the Indianapolis to Gov. Peery, of Virginia, members of his staff and official delegations from Newport News, Norfolk, Hampton, Portsmouth and Phoebus.

N. Y. Civil Service Hits Lehman Economy Plan

The resolution, adopted unanimously, charged the Governor "coerced the State Legislature and compelled it to pass the Ripper bill, resulting in the discharge of 1,200 Civil Service employes and the reduction of the salaries of 12,000 others in New York City."

Benefits Boost Farm Income

AAA Payments Provide Prewar Prices for Commodities.

Benefit payments under AAA were responsible for one-fifth of the increase in purchasing power of the farmer in the first period of the agricultural experiment, according to an analysis revealed yesterday by L. H. Bean, economic adviser to AAA.

He said the farmers' purchasing power increased 28 per cent up to April as compared with the first four months of 1933, whereas for the country as a whole the increase was 22 per cent.

"The prices of the seven basic farm commodities averaged 51 per cent of the prewar level in March, 1933, and 76 per cent of the prewar level in May, 1934," Bean said. "However, when benefit payments are added, the average price on the domestically consumed portion for the cooperating producers in May, 1934, was 100 per cent of the prewar level, as compared with 66 per cent in May, 1933, and 51 per cent in March, 1933."

She has given no indication as to the time she intends to stay at the lake resort.

First Indian Nurse Gets Navajo Post

The first full-blood American Indian public health nurse has gone to work among her people, the Bureau of Indian Affairs disclosed yesterday.

She is Miss Margaret Sangster, a Navajo, who recently finished her public health study at the Lillian Wald social service school in New York. The nurse was assigned to one of the new Navajo community centers being developed in the Southwest by Indian Commissioner John Collier.

Born on the Navajo Reservation, Miss Sangster was educated in an Indian boarding school and then graduated in nursing from a Los Angeles hospital. Wishing to work among her own people, she came East and took training in public health work.

U. S. Educators Will Convene Here Saturday

R. Haycock Heads Group Directing 72d Annual N. E. A. Convention.

Washington's public school teachers this week will prepare for the opening Saturday of the seventy-second annual convention of the National Education Association, which will bring to the Capital leading educators from every State in the Nation.

Heading an executive committee in charge of activities for the six-day meeting is Robert L. Haycock, assistant superintendent of the District schools. Assisting him are Edith L. Grosvenor and Garnet C. Wilkinson, as vice chairmen, and Dr. Elmer S. Newton, Frank C. Daniel, Seldon M. Ely, Dr. Harold E. Warner and Grant Lucas.

Plans for a reception to Jessie Gray, of Philadelphia, president of the association, have been made by a committee headed by Miss Grosvenor, who also is an association State director. With the Virginia State branch of the association as co-host, the reception to Miss Gray will be held July 2 at 9:45 p. m. in the Mayflower Hotel, social headquarters for the convention.

In the reception receiving line will be George F. Zook, United States Commisisoner of Education; Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of District schools; Miss Gray, members of the staff of the association and officers of the District division. Music will be furnished by the Army Band under the direction of Capt. Kendall J. Fiedler.

Centers at which convention delegates may meet for social purposes have been set up in Washington Auditorium, where the general convention sessions will be held; in the Mayflower and in the headquarters building of the association at Sixteenth and M streets northwest. A Washington teacher will be on duty at each. Establishment of the centers has been the work of Freda Egbert, chairman of the committee on general hospitality. Assisting her were Mary E. Draney, Charles Foster, Bessie K. Lacy, Paul E. Lutz, Anna J. Houston and Mrs. Maud F. Wayman.

The facilities of the clubhouse of the Washington branch of the American Association of University Women have been extended by Mrs. Howard G. Nichols, president. The dining room, writing rooms, reading and rest rooms will be available throughout the meeting and tea will be served there July 2 from 4:30 to 5:30 p. m.

Exhibits demonstrating teaching methods have been assembled and set up in several of the District's public schools by a committee headed by Frank C. Daniel. Phases of the educational field, from kindergarten to commercial, home economics, academic and art in the junior and senior high schools are covered in the displays. On the exhibit committee with Mr. Daniel are:

A pre-convention drive to enroll Washington teachers in association memberships, a prerequisite to convention attendance, has been completed by Paul E. Lutz, chairman of the membership committee, and Ethel Prince, Thomas Ferry, T. C. Parkman, Miss E. M. McCubbin, Mrs. L. R. Heathcock and Mrs. L. B. Chew. Several District schools reported 100 per cent membership.

Poison-Gum Trail Leads to Charge of Attempting Murder

Sacramento, Calif., June 23 (AP).—A warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Virginia McKenzie charging attempting to murder was telegraphed today to Portland, Ore.

District Attorney Neil McAllister accused Mrs. McKenzie of an attempt to poison Mrs. Georgia McKenzie, her two children and Mrs. G. A. Mosher, her mother, with chewing gum.

Mrs. Virginia McKenzie is the wife of R. B. McKenzie, a former Sacramento contractor, and Mrs. Georgia McKenzie is his divorced wife.

Four sample sticks of gum were found on the porch of Mrs. Georgia McKenzie's home here, three weeks ago. Examination disclosed sufficient poison in the gum to have killed a dozen persons.

McAllister said Louis Humbert, owner of an automobile camp here, identified Mrs. Virginia McKenzie as the woman who, when she occupied a cottage at the camp, was seen to be dusting a white powder on pieces of gum.

McAllister declared he had also learned several court actions have been fought over the $75 a month McKenzie must pay his former wife for support of their children.

Earl H. Spence New President Of Hotel Group

Southern Association Hits NRA Control in Resolution.

Recording its support of the American Hotel Association's efforts to free hotels from direct NRA control, electing officers for another year, and banqueting in the Mayflower, the Southern Hotel Association wound up a three-day convention here last night.

The association's dissatisfaction with the hotel code was voiced in a resolution indorsing American Hotel Association activities.

Earl H. Spence, of Greensboro, N. C., was elected association president. Kenneth Hyde, Roanoke, Va., was chosen first vice president; William Devendorf, Asheville, N. C., vice president; John Cator, Charlestown, S. C., vice president; Richard K. Young, High Point, N. C., treasurer, and Harry C. Thomason, Greensboro, N. C., secretary.

Headed by Sidney Banks, of Virginia Beach, retiring president, the following were elected to the board of directors: W. E. Kockett, Richmond; O. W. Donnell, Greensboro; I. Bugg, Durham, N. C.; F. F. Barringer, Columbia, S. C., and J. Mason Alexander, Greenville, S. C.

Farmer "Clocks" Terrapin's Speed At 1.2 Feet a Day

Woodstock, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Robert Clarke, a farmer living west of Woodstock, believes he has solved the age-old question "How fast does a terrapin travel?"

In 1911 Mr. Clark caught a terrapin on his place, and in order that he might identify the animal if seen again he marked its shell.

Several days ago, while plowing, Clarke saw a terrapin. He picked it up and on his back was a mark identical to the one affixed in 1911.

Clark began figuring on the distance the terrapin had traveled in 23 years. He measured a bee-line distance from the point where the terrapin was first seen and where it was recently found. It was 987 feet; or, figured on an annual basis, Clark estimated the terrapin had traveled but 47 feet a year, or about 1.2 feet a day.

District Guards Select Camp Site

First Encampment Due Near Caverns.

New Market, Va., June 23 (Spl.). The first encampment of the District of Columbia National Guard in the Shenandoah Valley will be held at Shenandoah Caverns July 6 and 7, it was announced yesterday by Hunter B. Chapman, president of the caverns corporation.

Maj. Walter W. Burns, U. S. A., and Capt. Leroy S. Mann, of the 260th Company, Coast Artillery, D. C. National Guard, left Shenandoah Caverns yesterday after choosing a site on Caverns Hill.

The battalion, equipped with anti-aircraft guns, searchlights and motorized artillery unit, will stage several demonstrations during their encampment.

Hagerstown Cuts Rolls of Jobless

Hagerstown, Md., June 23 (Spl.). Unemployed on the reemployment bureau rolls have been reduced during the last month, Brewer L. Stouffe, in charge of the Hagerstown bureau, reported.

There is a shortage in some types of skilled labor, Stouffer reported, due to calls from out-of-town concerns. These include skilled airplane mechanics, glass tube construction workers and blue print experts.

Start of an extensive building program here this week likewise has taken scores of carpenters, bricklayers and other skilled construction workers off the lists. Stouffer predicted a shortage of skilled labor by midsummer, with $500,000 in construction work scheduled.

Woman Decrees Nude Girls In PWAP Art Stay Undraped

Southern Towns Turn Up Amusing Incidents for Art's Sake.

The issue whether two little girls, permanent residents in the Fine Arts Building of a Southern university, should remain unclad, as they are, or be given dresses, has been arbitrated by a woman staff member of Public Works of Art Project.

She ruled against the dresses.

The arbiter is Ann Craton, who was back in PWAP headquarters at the Treasury yesterday after a five weeks' inspection trip through Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia and South Carolina. Coordination of the functions of Federal relief agencies, which are now winding up the project, and regional art committees was the primary purpose of the tour.

Settling this particular outbreak of an ageless controversy—Are art nudes immodest?—was only incidental.

The little girls are part of a large mural, which aroused the circiticism of outraged faculty members and townspeople because they were au anturel. Serious consideration was being given to having the artist endow the cherubs with concealing frocks when Miss Craton arrived.

Argues With College Head.

She went directly to the university president and argued art's case. He said he was relieved to be assured they were all right by someone from Washington. So the girls will not be burdened with drapery.

Another humorous incident befell the coordinator when she reached a Mississippi gulf town, population 1,500. Seeking out the mayor, she found him in his feed store.

After listening to Miss Craton's self-introduction and explanation of her visit, the mayor gave his overalls a hitch, walked to the doorway and hollered across the street to several members of the town council loitering on the sidewalk:

"Hey, this ladys says we got muriels in our school."

The "muriels," which the city fathers had scarcely noticed before, are appraised by Miss Craton as being among the outstanding native art works in the South. They were painted by three brothers, residents of the little village.

Prophets without honor in their own bailiwick, the brothers were downcast when commencement arrived and no official notice was taken, no formal compliments were paid their masterpiece.

A Heretic, Too!

In a South Carolina village Miss Craton was approached by a women's group who told her in horrified piannissimo there was a heretic amongst them. A young woman, and on the PWAP payroll at that, who was telling her sister artists Michelangelo was only so-so.

"She asks the other artists to tell her what they think of Michelangelo," Miss Craton was told. "When they describe his genius, this awful woman delightedly shouts, 'Hooey! He was only a craftsman.'"

Miss Craton painted a dismal picture, keeping the figure, of art prospects in the South now that the Federal program of encouragement is practically over. Impoverished painters, now that Uncle Sam no longer is their patron and paymaster, are going back to barter in order to live. A painting for a sack of potatoes, a bust for the doctor's bill.

Clubs Promote Sales.

Clubs have been organized, under guidance of the regional art committees, to promote sale of their works. But the response so far has been very weak, says Miss Craton. Neither are the States and cities attempting seriously to follow the Federal Government's example in sponsoring and encouraging.

On the tour Miss Craton met all PWAP artists in the States visited, viewed all their works and contacted all relief administrators with the aim of having as many painters kept at work as possible on their small weekly dole.

Tomorrow she will leave for New York, where 800 artists were on the Federal pay roll when the project was in full sway. There she will make a report to Edward Bruce, director, and receive instructions on extension of the field tour. She is expected to continue westward to the Pacific Coast, coordinating art and relief activities as she did in the South.

Germans Celebrate Return of Veteran, Missing 19 Years

Ortelsburg, Germany, June 23 (AP). The return of Wilhelm Zapka, listed among the World War's missing for more than 19 years, was marked by happy festivities here today.

Balked in his attempt to escape from Russia, where he was taken prisoner in 1915, Zapka failed for many years to communicate with the German foreign office. Letters he wrote home did not reach their destination.

In today's ceremony the burgomaster erased Zapka's name from the war memorial in the nearby village of Montwitz in the presence of the whole community.

Two State Jobs For One Man Held Illegal

Alexandria Liquor Store Manager Gets Ruling on New Post.

A new angle developed yesterday in the Alexandria school board situation when Albert V. Bryan, attorney for the Commonwealth, in Alexandria, handed down an opinion in the case of Emmett Lawler, a member of the school board, who has recently been appointed manager of one of the liquor stores in the city.

Mr. Lawler had requested the Commonwealth attorney for an opinion in the matter, and the reply states: "In my opinion you could not act as a member of the school board while serving as manager of the government store. My reason is that section 786 of the Code of Virginia provides:

"'No State officer, except a notary public, no city officer, no member of council, or any officer thereof, shall during his term of office be chosen or allowed to act as a school trustee.' A manager of a government store under the alcoholic beverage control act is, in my opinion, a State officer."

Mr. Lawler and Arthur M. King were elected members of the Alexandria school board by a 1-vote majority on October 24 last, to succeed Orlando H. Kirk and Dr. John T. Ashton, whose terms expired and whose reappointments were urged by many civic, fraternal and patriotic organizations in the city.

Alexandria has two liquor stores. Mr. Lawler was named manager of the store at 423 King street.

All Rainmakers Are Fakers, Says Weather Bureau Chief

Noise, Radio, Warfare, and Sand Are Useless, Humphreys Insists.

The weather man looked exasperatedly at a hill of letters telling President Roosevelt how to break the drought and announced:

"No power on earth can make it rain."

All the ideas on how to produce rain—and they are innumerable—just produce so many good laughs at the United States Weather Bureau. W. J. Humphreys, meteorologist to whom most of the well-meaning suggestions are referred, is getting fed up with them.

Battle Idea "Wrong."

The popular notion that noises, such as are made by the detonation of cannon or dynamite, can shake the sky loose of its moisture burden is entirely fallacious, Humphreys said. Against the Weather Bureau's advice, the Government once tried out the idea in a drought-afflicted part of Texas. It didn't work.

Another common theory associates rain with battle. That, also, is wrong, Humphreys declared. To the rain-soaked troops of 1914-18 the idea seemed reasonable. Many thought the constant thunder of artillery was blasting the sky open. Humphreys said it was not. Plutarch, in his "Lives," called attention to the fact—Humphreys said it was coincidental—that rain often occurred after great battles, and listed three theories to account for this:

1. The Olympian gods, outraged by man's conflicts, sent showers to cleanse the gory earth.

2. The clash of swords on shields, cries of the wounded and other sounds of battle "shocked" the clouds into opening and pouring forth.

3. Mass evaporation of blood and sweat produced rain.

When it comes to warfare as a rain maker, Humphreys is a pacifist.

Citizen Blames Radio.

A patriotic citizen of Akron, Ohio, recently wrote the President suggesting that all this radio broadcasting was causing the drought. The letter was referred to Humphreys, who replied:

"The idea has often been suggested and the converse also, namely, that radio brings entirely too much rain and causes floods. Evaporation is a process that consumes a very large amount of heat and radio does not produce a measureable amount of heat. Neither does radio cool the air."

From Detroit came the suggestion that rain could be coaxed out of the sky by: 1. Sprinkling dry ice on clouds. 2. Building large oil fires. The first idea is about a century old and isn't worth a darn, Humphreys said.

The second is correct, scientifically, but it would be "impracticable and prohibitively costly to build a fire big enough for this purpose."

Others Also Worthless.

Other rain-making ideas, all worthless in Humphreys' opinion, include:

Sprinkling clouds with electrified sand.

Boring holes in the sky.

Spraying dust in the air.

Blood-letting (practiced at one time by Australian natives).

Abuse of idols and images.

Imitative tableaux. Once in Esthonia three men climbed trees. One was equipped with a torch to stimulate lightning, another with a kettle which he beat in imitation of thunder, and the third with a small sprinkler. This was to demonstrate to the gods what was wanted.

Schools' Head In N. Y. Joins Film Clean-up

Character of Youth Must Not Be Undermined, He Tells Will Hays.

New York, June 23 (U.P.).—The head of the largest school system in the world tonight backed up the growing protest by Catholic, Jewish and Protestant spokesmen against objectionable motion pictures.

In a letter carefully avoiding such words as "immoral," "salacious" and "indecent," Dr. Harold G. Campbell, superintendent of New York city schools, authorized Dr. John S. Roberts, associate superintendent in charge of visual instruction, to inform Will Hays that New York's school system "is determined that the character of its children shall not be undermined by inferior motion pictures."

The letter followed by a day a decision of the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America to urge upon Protestant consciences the boycotting of suggestive pictures, thus reinforcing the mandatory stand taken by Roman Catholic bishops at Cincinnati and the action of the Central Conference of Jewish Rabbis.

Dr. Campbell's mention of Hays, motion picture "czar," also followed a statement by the latter that action had been taken by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America "to amend its system of self-regulation."

"It Ain't No Sin" Due To Be Rechristened

Hollywood, June 23 (AP).—Paramount studios announced today they are considering a change in the title of Mae West's latest picture, "It Ain't No Sin," before it is released.

A decision on the question probably will be reached Monday in New York. If such a change is made, it was explained, the release of the film will be delayed several days.

The word "It" in the film title is "perhaps ambigious," the studio said. The studio said church agitation for "clean films" had nothing to do with the proposed title change.

Agents Capture 3 Moonshiners

Hagerstown, Md., June 23 (Spl.). Federal agents continued to round up alleged moonshiners in Washington County this week, with three more persons apprehended.

Martin and Arthur Smith, father and son, Chestnut Grove, were held in $1,500 and $1,000 bail, respectively, yesterday for Federal court action by United States Commissioner D. Angle Wolfinger on charges of possessing articles used in the manufacture of liquor. Agents testified to finding a still and barrels of mash at the Smith home.

Melvin Jones, Chestnut Grove, also was held for a hearing before Wolfinger on the same charge. Jones' place was raided earlier in the week.

Fredericksburg Plans Mosquito Elimination

Fredericksburg, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—R. E. Burgess, of the United States Department of Health, assigned to District 3 of the Virginia Emergency Relief Administration, has established headquarters here to study the mosquito problem.

Mr. Burgess will have charge of community sanitation projects throughout the district. It is hoped to wipe out danger of malaria infection by spraying oil and digging drain ditches.

Tydings Denies He Wants to "Get" Ritchie

Rise of Bitter Feeling Is Seen as Killing All Compromise Hopes.

Baltimore, June 23 (Spl.).—Senator Millard E. Tydings, from his home in Havre de Grace, issued a statement today denying that he was "out to get" Gov. Ritchie, as was charged by the Governor.

"I am glad that Gov. Ritchie has confirmed the fact that several months ago I implored him to run for the United States Senate instead of a fifth term as Governor," said Senator Tydings.

"At that time," he continued, "I tendered the Governor my support for any candidate for office of Governor running on the ticket with him. This should put an end to the ridiculous yarn that I wanted to get control of the party from Gov. Ritchie.

Not "After" Him.

Furthermore, it makes ridiculous any story that I could have been 'after' a man whom I offered to support for the United States Senate, and whose candidate for Governor I likewise offered to support. I think these facts pretty well speak for themselves and need no further comment."

The clash between the State's two leading Democrats began yesterday when Mr. Tydings issued a statement revealing a confidential conference between himself and Gov. Ritchie last February.

Mr. Tydings said that at that time he told the Governor it would mean defeat for the Democratic party if he, Gov. Ritchie, sought a fifth term.

Gov. Ritchie last night replied to the first Tydings statement, declaring it was his belief that the Senator made it clear he was not after control of the State, but was after Gov. Ritchie himself.

Ritchie's Statement.

He said: "It is true that there was an interview between Senator Tydings and myself last February, which I understood from him at the time was to be so very confidential that he requested me not to reveal it. However, as Senator Tydings has now referred to the interview himself, I feel free to say this much about it:

"While the Senator insisted he was not after political control, he made it equally clear that he was after me, but he was willing to support a good candidate selected by me, provided it was not myself, and he added that in making such a selection Mayor Jackson need not be considered.

"I saw no reason why the next Democratic candidate for Governor should be selected by me, subject to the veto of Senator Tydings. This would have given Senator Tydings the viritual naming of any candidate, and I think the candidates should be selected by the Democratic voters at a Democratic primary as the Maryland law provides.

"Naturally I have not agreed with Senator Tydings on his proposal."

With such feeling between the Tydings and Ritchie camps, and with equal feeling between these camps and those of Mayor Howard W. Jackson and Dr. Charles L. Conley, Democratic leaders today saw no hope of a party compromise ticket.

Radcliffe Is Attacked By Worcester Paper

Pocomoke City, Md., June 23 (Spl.).—George L. Radcliffe, Democratic candidate for Governor of Maryland, was condemned to the realms of a political outcast in an editorial appearing yesterday in the Worcester Democrat, local weekly newspaper.

Published in the heart of "Radcliffe country," the paper, which has always been indentified as a supporter of Gov. Ritchie, made it plain that it would continue to support the Governor.

In speaking of what it termed the "Tydings-Radcliffe Rebellion," the editorial declared that if Ritchie were nominated in the September primaries, "all the Ritchieites will show themselves good sports and loyal Democrats, while the Radcliffe supporters will prove renegades from their party and throw the State into the Republican ranks."

"A tyro in the political game should see that the struggle on hand is only a gigantic effort of Tydings to swing the Ritchie leadership into his own camp," the editorial continued.

"This move of his should fool no one into believing that he has only the good of the party at heart. If he is so imbued with the spirit of party welfare, why shouldn't he do some of the sacrificing himself?

"Mr. Tydings is claiming that Mr. Radcliffe is most acceptable to Mr. Roosevelt. We do not want the interference of high Federal authority to influence our elections."

Worcester County, as well as Somerset County, on the west, and Wicomico County, on the north, have indorsed the Radcliffe movement.

Veteran, 87, Ends Life After Wounding Matron

Atlanta, June 23 (AP).—Mrs. Mary D. Goudelock, superintendent of the Georgia Confederate Veterans' Home, was critically wounded today by an 87-year-old inmate, who later killed himself.

The aged former soldier, J. A. Blount, who came to the home in 1928 from Decatur County, had been in a feeble mental condition for some time, officials said.

Robert B. Starke was appointed assistant trial justice.

Mt. Rainier Fee Report Asked After Audit

Payments to Judge, Five Policemen Prior to Oct. 2 Sought.

John Deuver, recently installed member of the Mount Rainier town council, has demanded on the floor of the council meeting an accounting of disbursements to the judge of the local police court and five of the town's policemen prior to October 2, 1933.

Deuver pointed out that the audit of town funds, just completed, credits $1,859.85 to their fees since that date, but says nothing of the amount paid these officials during the first half of the fiscal year.

The audit, however, does declare "the total amount of fines and forfeitures collected and deposited in the general town fund prior to the ordinance of October 2, 1933, was $1,818.70."

This, Deuver says, was the only surplus for this period and that no mention is made anywhere in the auditor's report of any total amounts received or amounts deducted for fees.

Ordinance Follows Writ.

Mount Rainier, the scene of recent bitter controversy over charges that the town is operating a "traffic light racket," passed the ordinance last October 2 after the American Automobile Association filed a writ of certiorari in the Prince Georges County Circuit Court.

The writ was filed to restrain the police court judge from accepting fees exclusively in cases of conviction and refusing them in cases of dismissal.

At the succeeding meeting of the town council the members were informed by Bird H. Dolby, counsel that, although Mount Rainier had originally had an ordinance providing that all police court fees be paid into a police court fund, from which peace officers were to be paid, the copy of the ordinance had been lost.

Another ordinance to this effect was then passed.

$3,068 In Receipts.

The auditor's statement, prepared and signed by John E. Parsell and J. Harrison Miller, show the grand total of receipts from fines, forfeitures, and costs received by the police court during the fiscal year amounted to $3,068.85.

According to a statement printed on tax bills during past years, these receipts for the fiscal year 1929-1930 amounted to only $347.75, and in 1930-1931 to only $152.25. The traffic lights were installed in 1931.

The salary of the chief of police, Eugene Plumer, is not affected by the fees as he is paid from the General Town Fund.

The town audit, according to a member of the town council, includes the following figures:

Receipts and disbursements for the Police Court Fund during the period October 2, 1933, to May 2, 1934:

Receipts:
Fines, Forfeitures and costs	$3,109.50
Disbursements:
Expenses and fees to Police Justice and town officers	1,859.85
Surplus	1,249.65
Add overdeposit made December 6, 1933	.50
Amount deposited in General Town Fund	1,250.15
Total amount deposited prior to October 2, 1933	1,818.70
Grand total for fiscal year	$3,068.85

Wife Charges Mate Stole Rent Money; He Is Sent to Jail

Charles Town, W. Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Robert Staubs, a resident of Harpers Ferry, W. Va., was tried before Justice J. D. Walker here last night on charges of petty larceny and possession of bootleg whiskey. The charges were brought against Staubs by his wife, from whom money was stolen.

The arresting officer testified that Staubs had been in trouble the greater part of the time while Mrs. Staubs testified that her husband worked, though irregular, and had contributed not over $1.50 to the support of their family of several children during the past 12 months. Staubs was charged with stealing the rent money his wife and children had saved.

Justice Walker sentenced Staubs to serve 60 days and to pay a $100 fine on the charge of possession, and 30 days and $10 fine on the larceny charge.

3 Counties Begin Harvesting Barley

Yield in West Virginia Exceeds Expectations.

Martinsburg, W. Va., June 23 (Spl.).—Harvesting of the barley crop was started this week in the producing sections of Berkeley, Morgan and Jefferson Counties. Continued hot weather which is rapidly ripening wheat and rye, and these harvests will be started the coming week.

The barley is turning out slightly better than had been expected. A below-average yield had been indicated. Although some barley fields are bare after the shocking, the majority are thickly shocked, and seemed well filled to the handlers.

Wheat crop indications continue about average, with enough spotty fields to bring down the average of some sections where a high yield is expected.

Wheat sold at 83 cents Friday at local elevators. AAA payments to those who joined the crop reduction program will add about 15 cents per bushel to the return to the producers.

Young People Talk Problems At Conference

D. C. Association Meets for Round-Table Discussions.

Westminster, Md., June 23 (Spl.). Discussion of present day problems featured sessions of the Young People's Conference of the District of Columbia Sunday School Association today.

Prior to opening round-table discussions, the Rev. Philip G. Murray, assistant pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, pointed out that major problems of today are "to think clearly on issues of modern life, to love one's fellowmen in terms of unselfish service, to carry into action one's convictions and to cultivate a finer faith in God."

A committee will meet tomorrow and adapt resolutions on problems discussed today.

Leadership Training.

Dr. J. S. Noffsinger, vice president of the Sunday School Association, addressed administrative officers and teachers this morning on "Leadership Training."

Dr. Noffsinger said "to know and to possess enthusiasm and inspiration" are the requisites of a leader, and stressed enthusiasm and inspiration as the most important.

"Knowledge is stressed too much," according to the speaker, who stated that a Sunday school teacher should "know God, know men and women and their needs, and know how to combine the two. Enthusiasm is necessary to do this."

Dr. Noffsinger said that "the greatest force in the world is love, and inspiration derived from love is greater than knowledge."

Leaders during the round table discussions were Ruth Stuart, Second Baptist Church; Nola Eaton, National City Christian Church; Evelyn Ballou, Petworth Baptist; W. G. Waldo, G. N. Dagger, Harry A. Councilor, Calvary Baptist; B. S. P. Doehrer, Rhode Island Avenue M. P., and Melvin M. Wertz, Hamline M. E. Church.

Group Conferences.

Group conferences and leaders of the administrative officers and teachers included: Administrative problems, E. B. Shaver, Metropolitan Baptist Church; senior, intermediate and young people's work, the Rev. T. E. Miller, pastor, First Baptist Church, Baltimore; primary and beginners' work, William S. Jones, vice president of the Sunday School Association.

Speaking on "Vocational Guidance," Norman A. Lufburrow, vocational-employment secretary, Y. M. C. A., Baltimore, told representatives that "interest" was the chief factor in choosing a vocation, and that a large percentage of the people are not fully adjusted to their employment because present conditions make it difficult to choose a vocation systematically.

Dr. R. Y. Nicholson, pastor of Rhode Island Avenue M. P. Church, principal speaker at the evening session, spoke on "Why I Believe in Jesus Christ."

A Young People's group, led by Elizabeth Jackson, Calvary Baptist Church, was adjudged winner tonight in a portrayal of Biblical events. Four groups participated in the presentations.

When District officials asked bids to provide a cow for the family, the lowest was that of the Noland Plumbing Co., for $1.98. The Noland firm bought Blackie (at a loss) from the N. Auth Provision Co. farm near Camp Springs, Md. Colored Health Work Attacked In Civic Talk Committee May Be Named to Obtain Better Conditions.

George W. Beasley, president of the Federation of Civic Associations, took under advisement last night appointment of a special vigilance committee of the federation with reference to health conditions among the colored population of 132,000. His action followed an address by Dr. W. J. Thompkins, recorder of deeds and former superintendent of the General Hospital in Kansas City, Mo., Friday night.

Dr. Thompkins scored both the Health Department of the District and the United States Public Health Service for neglect of health of colored children of pre-school age. He advocated establishment of well-baby stations in every community, pointing out the frequent impracticability of a colored mother with several children reporting to Freedmen's Hospital for clinical instruction.

Supervision in clinic and by colored nurses and doctors of the Health Department, he stated, is essential for all colored children from the pre-natal period up to 6 years of age, if rapidly increasing child mortality is to be checked.

"The District of Columbia," he said, "will continue to have an increasingly higher tuberculosis rate among both races if immediate prevention steps are not taken. It would have required only $50,000 last year to save the lives of 250 of the 500 colored babies that died here from lack of proper care, and expenditure of $100,000 for three years would decrease the rate to a point below that of cities of comparative population and climate."

Early symptoms of tuberculosis, Dr. Thompkins said, were disregarded by the Health Department here, and cases were not rated as positive until they had reached a well-developed state. As a consequence, he estimated, instead of the 2,300 cases rated as positive, there are actually 10,000 tuberculosis cases here, contacting approximately 100,000 of the urban population.

For one baby station in Southeast Washington," he said, "there is one nurse to take care of an area 1 mile square. It would be impossible for her to make an investigation of the territory in a month, and inspect the muddy culverts between the houses and other prevailing insanitary conditions. The fact that there are only 11 stations here, with only 11 District nurses, whose equipment is dilapidated and inadequate in every particular, is a serious reflection on all agencies of Government. If the wind can blow germs from Dakota to Washington, as it did recently, certainly it may be expected to blow them from neglected colored areas to Chevy Chase and other localities better cared for."

The federation committee, to be appointed, was directed by that body to make inquiries into the attitude of such men as may be considered for the position of health commissioner here, and to seek to commit them to the policy of upbuilding the department by appointment of colored assistants, physicians in child hygiene, in the tuberculosis department and in the department of child pathology."

Mrs. Ray was selected as chairman of the Fair Committee to take charge of the club's exhibit at the Marlboro Fair late next fall.

The guests of honor were the officers of the Prince Georges County Federation of Women's Clubs.

Chicago U. Permits 'Cribbing' At Tests, But It's No Bargain

Questions Are So Worded That Use of Books Is No Help.

Chicago, June 16 (AP).—Cribbers had their day at the University of Chicago recently.

All rules were called off as 530 students reported for the first "open book" examination under the university's new plan of study.

Text books, notes and even cuff scribblings could be carried to the examination room and used as freely as desired.

The professors also gave warning the questions would be so worded that "the student who thoroughly understands the subject would not be penalized because he forgets a detail, while the student who does not have a thorough understanding could not pass by hasty perusal of his texts and notes."

Sample Question.

The examination covered philosophy, history, religion, art and literature. Here is a typical question:

"One of the most significant political movements of modern times has been the rise of nationalism. Language, religion, natural geographical boundaries, government, a common historical tradition, are all factors in nationalism. Yet none of these factors is in itself sufficiently important to explain the growth of nationalism. Give one example of a case where:

"A common language has not united all its speakers into a single national state.

"A national state has been formed without a language common to all its citizens.

Awaits Comparison.

"A religion has remained international in character.

"A nationality has been achieved without a national religion.

"A national state has been formed without national geographical boundaries."

Dr. John M. Stainaker, of the university's board of examinations, is awaiting results on the "open book" test so he may compare them with standard examinations.

J. P. H. Mason, Fairfax County Pioneer, Dies

Former Captain of Boat on Potomac River Was 85 Years Old.

He was born in Tamworth, N. H., and went to Fairfax County with his parents when only a year old. They made their home with John Mason, an uncle, who at that time was the owner of Woodlawn, the historic Nellie Custis estate.

Mason was at one time a captain on the Mary Washington, an excursion steamer on the Potomac, but most of his life was devoted to dairy farming.

He is survived by a daughter, Miss Ethel Mason, and four sons, Dr. Lyle Mason, of Washington; the Rev. Philip Mason, of Fork Church, at Doswell, Va.; Woster Mason, of Toledo, Ohio, and T. Bentley Mason, of Accotink.

Rites for Two In Family Held

Young Gun Victim and His Grandfather Are Buried Together.

Waynesboro, Pa., June 23 (Spl.). Double funeral services were held in the Reformed Mennonite Church here today for Jacob E. Miller, 82, and his grandson, Arvine Hixon, 20, of Massillon, Ohio, who was accidentally shot and killed by a companion Thursday.

Mr. Miller died at the home of his daughter at Roadside, near here, the same day his grandson was killed.

Hixon was shot by a gun in the possession of a friend, William Eckroate, 20, of Massillon.

According to relatives here, Eckroate was on his way to hunt groundhogs with a .22-caliber revolver when he met Hixon. Eckroate told police they sat down to talk and he laid the gun on his lap. Later the two youths started to get up. Eckrote asserted that the gun suddenly exploded, the bullet going through his right hand and hitting his friend in the forehead.

Early Patents On Streamline Trains Shown

Air-Conditioning Device Also Perfected Years Ago.

Chicago, June 16 (AP).—The streamlined, air-conditioned trains that flash over the rails at more than 100 miles on hour were visioned in a couple of Civil War-time inventions never put to use.

Away back in 1855, J. R. Barry, of Philadelphia, took out a patent on a cooling system for railroad passenger cars. But it wasn't until nearly three-quarters of a century later—1929—that the first air-conditioned train sped over American railroads.

In 1865, Patent Office records show, S. R. Calthrop, of Roxbury, Mass., took out papers to patent a streamlined railroad car. But not until a few months ago did cars of the type first conceived by him make their first appearance on railroads.

Lapse Explained.

The reason for the lapse of time was explained by Charles L. Howard, assistant general counsel for the Western Railroad Association.

"Barry and Calthrop took out the first patents in their field and were far ahead of their times," he said. "For many years following their days, comfort and speed of travel were not the important things. It was only necessary that we be moved from place to place without loss of life and limb.

"Today it is different. We demand, in addition to safety, the utmost comfort and a mile or two a minute speed, and we are getting it. Barry and Calthrop planted the seeds for air-conditioning and stream-lining, but it took the opportune moment and skilled engineers to cultivate the seeds to the successful growth they have attained."

Wind Resistance.

In his application, Calthorp cited that speed was retarded because of wind resistance, and added, "to diminish this atmospheric resistance is the object of my invention."

The speed he believed attainable was not estimated, but from drawings it resembled closely the modern bullet-shaped train.

Barry's application stated how he "invented a new and useful machine for effectively ventilating and cooling railroad cars, omnibuses, stages and other closed vehicles, and for ventilating and cooling public and private buildings, in whole or in part; steamboats, steamships and sailing vessels."

Barry's system was pulleys attached to the wheels of a train, which in turn operated fans and water wheels revolving behind a box packed with ice, and then sending the cool air through a tube.

Fete Tonight Honors Delta Phi Epsilon

Foreign Service Group Will Elect Officers Tomorrow.

More than 300 delegates and alumni attending the eighth biennial convention of Delta Phi Epsilon, original National foreign service fraternity, will be guests tonight at a banquet in the Admiral Hotel, 1640 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Speakers will include Senor Manuel Gonzalez-Zeledon, of the Costa Rican Legation; Dr. William S. Culbertson, former National president of the fraternity, and Dr. William F. Notz, dean of the school of foreign service at Georgetown University, retiring president, who will preside.

Other prominent guests will be M. Alez Broz, counselor of the Czechoslovakian Legation; Edward L. Bacher, head of the foreign department, U. S. Chamber of Commerce; Dr. Arnold Spanhoofd, head of the language department, Georgetown School of Foreign Service, and Prof. Richard S. Harvey, former Georgetown professor and president of Harvey Preparatory School.

Election of officers will feature the final business session Monday. The fraternity decided yesterday to limit membership to American citizens and voted down foreign expansion. It was decided, however, that the scope of the fraternity should cover a wide field of international activities.

An alumni luncheon in honor of the delegates at the National Press Club, a sight-seeing trip to Mount Vernon and the convention dance at the Rossdhu Castle Club, Chevy Chase, were sponsored yesterday by the host chapter, Eta, of George Washington University. Alpha, of Georgetown University, also is assisting in caring for those attending the session.

No Profits Yet On Va. Liquor

Board Cites Big Outlay on Stocks; Receipts Are $425,829.

Richmond, June 23 (AP).—It is possible that Virginia localities may get a slice from the legal liquor profits this year, but A. B. Clarke, spokesman for the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, said today that the board thinks the chances are pretty slim.

From March 22 to June 14, ABC gross receipts amounted to $425,829, while in the same period it spent $793,314.95 for hard liquor stocks and $103,830.90 for wines. It was pointed out that a great initial expenditure was necessary to provide stocks for the State stores, which are being opened at the rate of about three a week, and that until May 15 no store was in operation.

In Richmond, where five stores now are in operation, four of them since May 15, the average gross income has been approximately $9,500 per store week. The board figures on an average 10 per cent net profit.

In Norfolk, the second city in which stores were opened, the two stores have averaged approximately $8,100 per store week, gross profit.

The law provides that the localities are to participote in the profits only after the State uses $1,675,000 for general fund budget balancing purposes.

Under the best estimates, Mr. Clarke said, the net profit during the first year will reach no more than $1,500,000.

Toll of a series of traffic accidents in Washington and vicinity yesterday afternoon and last night included injuries to two men and a boy and death of another man injured in a previous accident.

Walter Jones, 59, of 318 Third street northwest, injured on June 14 when struck by an automobile near Seventh and F streets northwest, died in Emergency Hospital.

Police said Jones was hit by the auto of Claude E. Kite, 30, of Riverdale, Md. Kite will be summoned to testify at a coroner's inquest tomorrow.

Knocked down by an automobile on Thirteenth street near Girard street northwest, Clarence Wright, 84, of Baltimore, was taken to Garfield Hospital in an undetermined condition yesterday.

Wright was hit by the machine of Benjamin Pendleton, colored, 47, of the 700 block of Morton street northwest. Pendleton was not held.

Physicians said Wright suffered painful back injuries. Because of advanced years he was admitted to the hospital for observation.

James Whitlock, 29, of Boston, Mass., escaped serious injury yesterday when his automobile overturned on the Baltimore boulevard near Hyattsville, Md. Whitlock told police he fell asleep while driving.

A motorist brought him to Sibley Hospital. He was treated for minor lacerations and bruises. Whitlock said he had been driving all night.

Raymond Vit 4, of 325 C street southeast, is in Providence Hospital with serious injuries received yesterday when he was knocked down by an automobile near Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

George Wells, colored, 31, of the 800 block of Rhode Island avenue northwest, driver of the machine, was held by Fifth Precinct police on charges of operating a car with bad brakes.

Raymond received severe lacerations, bruises and possible internal injuries.

Three Seriously Hurt In Series of Crashes

Three persons were seriously injured and several received minor hurts in a series of traffic crashes in nearby Maryland yesterday.

Shelton Jenkins, of Bethesda, Md., was in Georgetown Hospital yesterday in a serious condition as a result of a three-car crash shortly before midnight Friday at Wisconsin avenue and Oliver street, Chevy Chase, Md.

A car operated by Jenkins was in collision with a car operated by Allen S. Pattison, prominent Washington patent attorney, of 1852 Monroe street northwest. Pattison was making a left turn from Wisconsin avenue into Oliver street and Jenkins was going north on Wisconsin avenue. A third car, operated by Elmer Cosgrave, of Bethesda, crashed into the two cars.

Norman Russ, of Bethesda, a passenger in Jenkins' car, was lacerated on the face and bruised. He was treated at Georgetown Hospital. Jenkins' injuries included a fractured ankle and possible internal injuries. Mrs. Pattison was shaken up, but did not require hospital treatment.

Two men were injured seriously last night on the Frederick pike near Rockville, Md., when their automobile left the road and crashed into a telephone pole.

The injured men, Lewis C. Miller, 23, and Richard Goyens, 20, both of Silver Spring, Md., were taken to the Montgomery County General Hospital by the Rockville Rescue Squad.

Miller, said by police to be driver of the car, was treated for concussion of the brain and a sprained arm. Goyens was treated for a badly lacerated ear, cuts on the head and shock.

Miss Virginia White, 203 Cockerille avenue, Takoma Park, Md., was injured yesterday when a car in which she was passenger, operated by Paul William Taltamus, 21, of Takoma Park, was in collision with a parked truck in the 200 block of Maple avenue.

Miss White was taken to Washington Sanitarium. She was treated for bruises, cuts, a sprained thumb and shock and later was removed to her home. Taltamus was charged with reckless driving.

Joyous Throngs Initiate Takoma and Banneker Swimming Pools

Post Staff Photos.

Crowds Attend Opening of 2 Public Pools

Sun and Free Admission Cooperate to Make Successful Starts.

A blazing sun and free admission cooperated yesterday to give the new Takoma and Banneker public swimming pools auspicious openings. Nearly 2,000 men, women and children initiated the CWA projects within half an hour after dedicatory services ended.

At the Takoma tank, part of a recreation center still under development, 1,500 residents of this suburban section attended the dedication program.

Speakers were C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks, who also served as master of ceremonies; W. H. Seaquist, president of the Manor Park Citizens Association; Mrs. Mary L. White, president of the Takoma Park Citizens Association; D. Stewart Patterson, representing the Citizens Association of Takoma Park, D. C., and Thomas S. Settle and Claude Owen, representing the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade, respectively.

Exhibitions of fancy diving were given by Marie Duvall, John Broadus and Robert Knight, District A. A. U. champions. Music was provided by the U. S. Marine Band under direction of Arthur Whitcomb, second leader.

At the conclusion of the exercises, the two Takoma pools, one for adult swimmers and the other for beginners and children, were thrown open free until 6 p. m. Approximately 1,200 children and 100 adults took to the water almost immediately.

The program at Banneker, colored pool and recreation center near Howard university, was held in the forenoon and attracted about 300 spectators. However, more than 400 free patrons had taken plunges within 30 minutes after the dedicatory exercises ended. Here, too, exhibitions of fancy diving were one of the features.

Both swimming pools will be operated throughout the summer, daily and Sundays, with children admitted free between 10:30 a. m. and noon except on Saturdays and Sundays. They will open at 10 a. m. and close at 10 p. m.

Taking a Vacation? U. S. Parks Advised

Transportation Cost Low, Cammerer Declares.

Whether you go by train, plane, auto, bus, horseback or tandem bicycle, you simply must visit one or more National parks this summer, Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, sales talked yesterday.

"If it is a question of money alone, a journey to the West Coast by train, or auto, taking side trips to a number of the parks and monuments, may be made for an unbelievably small outlay for transportation," said Director Cammerer. Then continuing:

"On the way out the traveler would be in Rocky Mountain National Park the third day after leaving Washington. From there, to California, where, with a couple of short side trips, he could visit three National parks and one National monument.

"On returning from the coast, the tourist would stop off at Grand Canyon National Park to view the colorful depths of its canyon, and on getting back to Washington, would find that he spent about $115 for actual train fare."

Cammerer also sang the praises of Mesa Verde National Park in southwestern Colorado and Carlsbad Caverns in New Mexico. The latter is noted for its big room, which is nearly a mile long, 600 feet wide and 300 feet high.

Colored Group Forms Anti-Nazi Association

Perry W. Howard, colored attorney, reported yesterday rapid growth of a national organization of prominent colored men and women in opposition to the Nazis and Nazi propaganda. He has been named to head the movement, and has associated with him J. Finley Wilson, grand exalted ruler of colored Elks.

The organization for the present, it was stated, will contact conventions and assemblies of colored people throughout the country in opposition to Naziism, at the same time forming local and State organizations. These, it is expected, will meet here later in the year, in national convention.

Extinguished

Virginia's Supreme Court Bans Dump Fires.

J. H. Houser, operator of a dump in Arlington County, lost his long fight yesterday to establish his right to burn trash on the dump.

Affirming the decision of Judge Walter T. McCarthy, of the circuit court, the State Supreme Court denied a writ of error sought by Houser.

The dump is located along the Oil Plant road in plain view of the Nation's Capitol. Arlington officials and civic leaders, who for years have opposed buring dumps in the county, were well pleased with the decision.

Company Asks Bankruptcy to Save Its Assets

Commercial National, Inc., Fears Loss if Bank Forecloses.

Anticipating the plans of Robert C. Baldwin, receiver of the Commercial National Bank, to apply to the District Supreme Court for authority to foreclose on large collateral loans, the Commercial National Co., Inc., an offspring of the bank, yesterday filed in the District Supreme Court a petition asking that it be adjudged a voluntary bankrupt.

Through Attorney Ralph D. Quinter, the company showed that its assets were superior to its liabilities. However, in a forced sale such as was feared, the assets would be bought in at auction, it was thought, for far less than their actual value.

The Commercial Co., organized to make loans on real estate, suffered a blow when the bank closed. Shortly afterward a receiver was appointed by the court and a reduction in the liabilities of the company has been made through assignment of various trusts to creditors.

Despite the solvency of the company, Mr. Quinter stated, it was feared that a forced sale of the collateral notes it now holds would wipe out vast equities which belong to it. The colalteral, it was indicated, was to have been bid in "at much less than its value" and it was to forestall this that the bankruptcy petition was filed by Quinter, he said.

D. C. Aid Flouts Politics "Ban"

Howsley, Law Official, Goes to Texas on Connally's Election Campaign.

Flaunting the hallowed precedent that District employes should not participate in political campaigns, Assistant Corporation Counsel Andrew M. Howsley has taken a leave of absence to aid Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, in his quest for the Democratic senatorial nomination.

Howsley, legal adviser to the liquor control board, is a Texan. He has been in office only a few months, having been sponsored by Representative Thomas Blanton (Democrat), Texas.

Howsley was appointed on the direct recommendation of Corporation Counsel William W. Bride. Blanton later championed the cause of Bride in his fight to retain his job. The campaign against Bride was staged by Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to President Wilson, who finally succeeded in ousting Bride.

The jobs in the corporation counsel's office are supposed to be nonpolitical, but so far there has been no objection raised by the Commissioners to Howsley's activities.

Officer Fires When Attacked in Ashton, Md.

George Havercamp, of Ashton, Md., was shot three times in the leg last night by Sergt. Guy L. Jones, of the Montgomery County Police, when he is alleged to have attacked the policeman while the latter was attempting to serve a warrant charging criminal assault on a minor child.

Sergt. Jones had relieved another policeman detailed to wait for the man. The sergeant attempted to serve the warrant, he reported, when Havercamp charged at him and told him he was going to kill him.

After the shooting Havercamp was taken to Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Spring, Md., where his condition was said to be not serious.

Hunter, the father of three children, shot himself so severely in the jaw that it was believed he never again would talk.

His commitment to the Marion Hospital was ordered following agreement between his attorney, Clarence R. Ahalt, and Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas.

When he recovers, Hunter will face trial for the two slayings.

Better Housing Conditions Are Urged for D. C.

Senator King Declares Officials Should Use Powers.

Employment by District officials of all their authority under existing law to bring about better housing conditions in the National Capital was urged yesterday by Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of the Senate District committee.

"The Commissioners can, I believe, do much to speed the end of disreputable alley dwellings and other old buildings which are eyesores and unfit for habitation," Senator King said. "They have pretty broad powers under the health, police and sanitary laws now in effect."

His proposal will be embodied in a letter which will be sent Commissioners on Monday, Senator King said.

Preparation of a broad program of housing legislation for the future also was proposed. Attention of both the Commissioners and the District sub-committee named to study reorganization and improvement of the District government will be directed to the utilities commission report prepared by James Ring on housing conditions in the National Capital. This report contended that housing was a matter of primary importance to the Government and should be dealt with through a special regulatory commission with broad powers.

Meeting of the reorganization sub-committee will be held this week, Senator King said. Senator Robert P. Gore (Democrat), of Oklahoma, is chairman. The other two members are Senators Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, and James Couzens (Republican), of Michigan. Senator Couzens has left the Capital and is not expected to return before fall.

William A. Roberts, people's counsel, and Daniel J. Donovan, District auditor, will be asked to attend the sub-committee meeting, Senator King said. They have been engaged for several months in a study of District municipal machinery and have submitted a partial report of ten volumes to the Senate District Committee. Their recommendations will be embodied in a final volume.

Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, ranking minority member of the District Committee, recently advanced a proposal similar to that made yesterday by Senator King. As a result of the Capper recommendation, the Commissioners referred the question to Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman for study and report.

Falls Church Split Ordered by Court

Citizens in Arlington County Urged Move.

Acting on petition of 91 of 123 qualified voters, Judge Walter T. McCarthy, of Arlington County Circuit Court, yesterday authorized that portion of Falls Church lying within the limits of Arlington County to withdraw from the town corporation and come under sole jurisdiction of the county. The portion of the town not affected by the order lies in Fairfax County.

Mayor L. P. Daniels, who opposed the petition, said an appeal will be taken to the State Supreme Court of Appeals.

Those seeking the transfer said the schools and the health department of the county are superior to those of the town and that the water system of Arlington County is betted suited to developments in that section than that of the town. Arlington County is installing a sewer system while a separate system for the town is said to be very uncertain.

Seabrook-Bowie Road Contract Is Awarded

Relief Workers Here Eligible For Pay Raise

McCarl Rules They Also May Get Annual and Sick Leaves.

Employes of Federal relief agencies in the District are made eligible for salary increases under a ruling by Comptroller General McCarl, which was announced yesterday by the District Commissioners.

Modifying the recent order of Lewis Douglas, budget director that workers in emergency bureaus shall be placed on "temporary" status July 1, McCarl in another ruling held they shall be "emergency" rather than "temporary" employes and therefore entitled to annual and sick leaves. Temporary workers in no Governmental branch receive leave.

Several thousand employes here will benefit by the decisions, McCarl's pay increase ruling conforming with new economy legislation permitting promotions if they be made within regular appropriations.

Suggested Pay Raises.

The Commissioners had submitted the following list of suggested pay increases for District relief division workers:

District supervisors, from $1,800 to $2,400 a year; case supervisors, $1,500 to $1,900 and $1,620 to $2,000; social workers, from $1,014 and $1,620 to $1,320 and $1,800; superintendent of commodities distribution, $1,500 to $1,800; deputy disbursing agent, $1,620 to $1,800.

Assistant accountant, $1,014 to $1,620; statistician, $1,500 to $2,100; superintendent of mechanical service, $1,320 to $1,800; secretary, $1,200 to $1,620; stenographers and clerks, $1,014 to $1,440; clerks, typists, addressograph operators and telephone operators, $912.60 to $1,260; janitors, $862.16 to $960.

In a letter to McCarl, which led to his decision, the commissioners said relief has become a "major municipal problem" here and $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 is being disbursed annually. Salaries have been so low many efficient relief workers have had to quit the service, they said.

Boosts Effective July 1.

Increases will be permitted to start from July 1, beginning of the 1935 fiscal year.

In passing on the question of leave, McCarl acknowledged PWA, NRA and other workers in emergency units are on temporary status in that their appointments are limited to the next fiscal year, but pointed out they will be retained until the duties of their respective agencies are terminated, which may not be for several years.

Employes who change from "indefinite" to "emergency" classifications on July 1 will not lose leave accumulated to date.

Maryland Road Plans Pushed

$1,810,058 Is Available Under Hayden Act for Highways.

Plans are going forward in Maryland for the employment of the $1,810,058 State highway fund authorized by Congress under the Hayden-Cartwright act, signed by President Roosevelt last June 18, it has been announced.

Several highway projects, to be built with the aid of Federal appropriations, have been proposed by the State roads commission. Among these is the proposed "super highway" from Washington, skirting Baltimore, to the Pennsylvania line.

The funds, according to the Department of Agriculture, under whose direction lies the disbursement of the money, is immediately available for allotment to construct projects on the Federal aid highway system and its extensions into and through cities and on important secondary roads.

The law requires that, in the absence of satisfactory reasons to the contrary, no less than 25 per cent of the apportionment to any State must be applied to secondary or feeder roads, including farm-to-market roads, rural free delivery roads and public school bus roads.

Cunningham Is Beaten by Bonthron

Princeton Lad Nips His Rival in Last 150 to Win by 6 Yards.

Four World Marks Set as Stanford Takes N. C. A. A. Meet.

MEMORIAL COLISEUM, Los Angeles, June 23 (AP).—The race was not to the swift, but to the strong today, as Stanford University won the thirteenth annual National collegiate track and field meet marked by the triumph of Bill Bonthron, of Princeton, over Glen Cunningham, of Kansas, in a 4:08.9 mile.

The Indians scored an amazing total of 63 points to 54 7-20 for the University of Southern California, in the place position, and 47 for Louisiana State University.

Stanford picked up 28 points in the weight events, 16 in the discus and 12 in the shot-put. The winners won only one first place, the discus, by Gordon (Slinger) Dunn, but John Lyman was second in the shot-put and third in the discus and the Indians picked up 35 other points here and there, seconds in the pole vault and javelin adding vital counters.

BONTHRON.

Southern California, too, had to be content with one first place, on Al Olson's big broad jump, while Louisiana State, the defending champion, although it could do no better than show, grabbed off four firsts, the sensational Glenn Hardin winning two, the 220-yard hurdles in record time and the 440-yard dash in faster time than it has been run in the 12 previous N. C. A. A. meets.

The other two firsts by the Louisianans were scored by Jack Torrance in the shot-put with a performance better than any recorded world mark, but not so good as a previous effort of his waiting to be recognized, and by George Fisher, who won the 120-yard high hurdles, to give the Tigers the best performance of the day in first places.

Wins by 6 Yards.

Bonthron's defeat of Cunningham in the mile was one of the most sensational episodes of the day. The Princeton lad nipped the Kansan in the last 150 yards and won going away, at least 6 yards separating the pair at the finish. Bonthron reversed a decision of a week ago at Old Nassau when Cunningham set a new world's record of 4 minutes 6.7. Bonthron's time of 4 minutes 8.9 seconds, was better than Cunningham's N. C. A. A. record of 4:09.8 last year, and better than the recognized world record.

Cunningham, after the grueling mile, had nothing left for the half, some 40 minutes later, and did not finish among the first six. Charlie Hornbostel, of Indiana, won the 880 handily.

The Hoosier took a tip from Bonthron in the mile and suddenly shot ahead of the famous jayhawker on the last turn. Glenn did not have enough stamina left to make it a battle from that point on.

Records Are Broken.

Listed records went by the board all afternoon as almost perfect weather conditions enabled the athletes to put forth their best efforts. Four world's records were smashed and five N. C. A. A. marks were bettered and one tied.

Application for only one world's record will be made as a result of the meet since the other performances were not up to applications already on file.

Oddly enough the record for which world recognition will be asked only tied a previous N. C. A. A. record for which no application had been made. Glenn Hardin ran the 220-yard low hurdles in 22.7. This equaled a performance by Jack Keeller, of Ohio State, in 1932.

The fleet Hardin ran the 440-yard

Londos-Browning $100,000 Gate Seen

New York, June 23 (U.P.).—Jacques Curley, the veteran wrestling promoter, who has been known to worry in his bland way about getting people to buy tickets to his shows, is having a new sort of worry in connection with Monday's heavyweight championship match between the Jims—Browning and Londos.

Curley has been besieged with requests for locations in the early pews and he's fresh out of such. The gate, Curley believes, is certain to pass the $100,000 mark which would beat the all-time record by some $10,000. Gotch and Hackenschmidt drew $90,000 worth of customers in 1911, but $80,000 is the best since that time.

Wood Downs Shields for Net Title

Win Boosts Cup Hopes; Lott Urges Stoefen Be Substituted.

LONDON, June 23 (AP).—With victories on conservative days over America's first and third ranking players in the championships of London at the Queen's Club, Sidney B. Wood, jr., today appeared to have established himself as the chief American hope to win back the Davis Cup this year.

The stylish stroking New Yorker, Wimbledon champion in 1931, gave one of the best exhibitions of his life as he overpowered Frank X. Shields, No. 1 player, of the United States, and his cup teammate, 11—9, 6—0, in the final. Yesterday he defeated Lester Stoefen, third ranking American, 2—6, 18—16, 6—4.

WOOD.

British experts were unanimous in acclaiming him, and Fred Perry, leader of the English team, which will defend the cup against the interzone winner, said of Wood:

"That's the man we must beat to keep the cup."

Continues Fine Record.

By his victory Wood continued a fine American record in the Queen's tournament. Vincent Richards, big Bill Tilden and Wilmer Allison preceded him as champion, while twice before Americans were finalists without playing off for the title, Tilden and Frank Hunter in 1929 and Stoefen and Ellsworth Vines last year.

America lost in three other divisions of play today. Dorothy Andrus, of Stamford, Conn., was defeated by Jacqueline Goldschmidt, of France, 5—7, 6—3, 6—0 for the women's singles title and with Mme. Jung Henrotin, of France, lost the women's doubles final to Collete Rosambert, of France, and Mrs. P. D. Howard, of England, 6—2, 3—6, 8—6.

Wood and the Davis cup captain, Richard Norris (Dick) Williams, were defeated in the semifinals of men's doubles by C. E. Maleroy, of New Zealand, and K. C. Ganbar-Dower, of India, 3—6, 6—4, 10—8.

Meet Collins, Wilde.

The victors meet Ian G. Collins and F. H. Wilde, of new English Davis Cup pair who defeated Stoefen and George M. Lott, jr., America's Davis Cup combination yesterday, for the title.

The Stoefen-Lott defeat had repercussions today when Lott asked Capt. Williams to send out an "S O S" for John Van Ryn or William Allison to come over and play doubles with him.

Lott is convinced that he and Stoefen, despite the fact they are United States indoor and outdoor doubles champions, are not the best combination.

Williams declined to commit himself.

"I still have an open mind on the make-up of the team" he said, "and there is a month before we must meet the European zone winner for the right to challenge England."

New York A. C. Wins Meet; 4 Records Fall

New York, June 23 (AP).—In a meet that established four new district records—one of them the fastest American 5,000 meters since the 1932 Olympics—the New York Athletic Club again won the Senior Metropolitan A. A. U. championships at its own Travers Island field today with an overwhelming total of 100½ points with three events to be decided tomorrow.

Joe McCluskey, former Fordham star now wearing the winged foot insignia, authored the one outstanding record revision of the day when he distanced his teammate, John Follows, by 30 yards to win the 5,000 meters in 14:54.8, 26 seconds faster than the mark Follows made in the same meet last year.

Tommy Tailer Regains New York Golf Crown

New Rochelle, N. Y., June 24 (AP).—Tommy Tailer, representing the Piping Rock Club, today regained the Metropolitan Amateur golf title he held two years ago when he defeated the defending champion, Mark Stuart, of Fox Hills, 5 and 4, in the final match at the Wykagyl Club course.

Peacock Takes Crown; Beats Caldwell

Is One Over for 33 Holes, Leading All Way in Maryland Final.

By Dave Herman.
(Post Staff Correspondent.)

ROLLING ROAD GOLF COURSE, Catonsville, Md., June 23.—Roger Peacock, Indian Spring's 23-year-old golfing ace, shot 33 holes in only 1 over par here today to defeat Ernie Caldwell, of Hillendale, 4 and 3, and retain possession of the prized Maryland State Amateur Championship.

The curly-haired Washingtonian conquered Baltimore's most formidable player to win the title for the second consecutive time. He triumphed by dint of superior work with his irons and putter that enabled him to assume an early lead over Caldwell, cling to it tenaciously and beat off his rival's challenge on the stretch.

PEACOCK.

Peacock has the distinction of being the only District golfer to capture the Maryland crown. He is the second player to win it twice, Charlie McCourt, Baltimore public parks star, having turned the trick some seven years ago.

Shoots 3 Birdies.

After scoring a 72, 2 over par, in his morning 18-hole round, Peacock burned up this tricky course in the afternoon, pounding old man par into defeat for the remaining 15 holes, with the aid of 3 sparkling birdies.

Peacock ended the battle in a whirl of scoring power that left Caldwell virtually helpless. Two up and five to go, the Indian Spring star rammed home a 15-foot putt for a birdie 3 on the fourteenth and climaxed the match on the 167-yard fifteenth by holing another 15-footer for a birdie deuce.

Shooting the kind of golf that characterized his play in the 1933 Maryland event at Indian Spring, Peacock went into the lead on the third hole, which he won with a par 3 to Caldwell's 4. He became 2 up at the fifth when Caldwell was short with his second and 2-putted for a 5. Roger captured the sixth with a 5, 1 over par, as Caldwell was guilty of 3 putts. Both halved the 478-yard seventh in birdie 4's and the Baltimorean jammed a 10-footer smack into the cup on the ninth for a birdie 3 to cut down Peacock's lead to 2 up. Peacock found a trap on his drive and wound up with a 5.

Gets Deuce on Tenth.

Caldwell plunked a 10-footer into the hole on the short tenth for a deuce to beat Roger's 3, but Peacock turned on the heat on the next two holes.

Peacock lost the thirteenth by overshooting the green with his second, won the sixteenth when Caldwell was ditched on his second, and lost the seventeenth to

Springsteel Is Victor; Equals Track Record

Rockingham Park, Salem, N. H., June 23 (AP).—Running a front race all the way, S. W. Labrot's 5-year-old Springsteel today equaled the track record to capture the Granite State Handicap, $10,000 added inaugural feature of the New Hampshire Breeders Association, from a dozen other speedy rivals.

This roan gelding crossed the line a length and a half in front of Willis Sharpe Kilmer's Dark Winter, and Tick On, favored in the betting with Mr. Khayyam, took third with four lengths to spare.

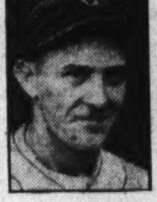
Hildebrand Pounded Out by Four-Run Attack in First Inning.

NEW YORK, June 23 (AP).—One short, sharp burst of hitting in the first inning gave the Yankees a 6-to-3 victory over the Cleveland Indians today in the fifth and deciding game of their series.

The Yanks lashed out against Oral Hildebrand in that first frame, drove him to the showers before a man had been retired and scored four runs. The rest of the way they just breezed along behind the effective pitching of young Johnny Murphy.



HILDEBRAND.

Earl Combs, the first man to face Hildebrand, socked a triple over Earl Averill's head. Jack Saltzgaver sent a roller down the third-base line and beat it out for a hit while Combs scored. Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig drew passes, filling the bases, and Myril Hoag singled into left, bringing in two more runs.

That was enough for Hildebrand and Thornton Lee replaced him. Lee let a run score when he threw wild past third trying to head Gehrig off on Bill Dickey's sacrifice, but he settled down after that misplay and pitched well. He gave only five hits over the eight inning route.

The Yanks scored again in the

Carnera Sees Movies Of Title Bout—In Tears

NEW YORK, June 23 (U.P.)—They set up a movie projector in Columbus Hospital today and Primo Carnera, propped up in his cot, learned how he looked when he lost his world's heavyweight championship to Maxie Baer last week.

The experience was scarcely less happy than the one of actually losing the title, and Carnera's eyes were filled with tears when the lights were turned on after the showing.

Soon after the first round of the movies was on the screen Carnera startled the friends and nurses in his room:

"Look! There goes my foot!" he exclaimed. "I could have put him away if it was not for that foot.

"Look at Baer grin, the big Smart Alec!"

As the eleventh (and last) round was being shown, Carnera gave his version of his now famous conversation with Referee Arthur Donovan.

"I didn't say 'I quit,'" Carnera said. "I ask Donovan to make Baer quit sticking his thumb in my eye and I ask him to make Baer close his hands."

"Look at me go down," Carnera continued. "Baer does not knock me down, I fall. I fall again. Look at Baer grin, the big smart Alec. He called me names."

The lights on again, Carnera pointed ruefully to his foot. "That big hunk of baloney cost me the fight, not Baer, the big smart Alec."

Carnera was asked what names Baer called him. Carnera nodded toward the nurses.

"The mother superior is present," Primo said. "I can not tell you now."

He was asked if he did not think it was "nice" for Baer to have called on him yesterday. "Oh, yes, very, very nice—the big smart Alec."

Ed Thorp Is Dead; Noted Grid Leader

Port Chester, N. Y., June 23 (AP). Ed Thorp, noted football authority, died today at the United Hospital. He collapsed in the locker room of the Winged Foot Country Club, Mamaroneck, on Saturday, June 9.

Thorp had come to the club with friends, and as he was preparing to go to the first tee slipped to the floor. He was taken to the United Hospital, where he had been under the constant care of physicians.

Death was caused by a cerebral hemorrhage.

Mrs. Thorp was at his bedside when he died.

Thorp was the brother of Tom Thorp, former Columbia football star. He had long been regarded as one of the outstanding football referees in the East.

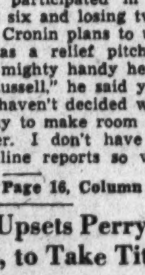
Pitcher Kline Joins Nats Today

Acquisition From A's by Waivers Causes Uniform Trouble.

By Frank H. Young.

PITCHER BOB KLINE'S acquisition by the Nats, from the Athletics via the waiver route, was good news to Manager Joe Cronin and the Nats, but it caused a load of grief to Assistant Trainer Frankie Baxter. Kline reports to the Nats this morning, and yesterday Baxter was instructed to have a uniform ready for him.

"What to do? What to do?" moaned Baxter, running his hands through his thinning hair, for Kline is the Primo Carnera of baseball, as regards size. A search of the Nats' locker room failed to find a uniform anywhere near Kline's size and Baxter suggested they cut him a uniform from the infield covering.



KLINE.

President Clark Griffith vetoed this idea, but came up with one of his own. "Try Spalding's," he said, "maybe they have a white uniform of some kind that he can climb into until we get some made for him." And so Sixth Assistant Secretary Calvin Griffith, jr., phoned Spalding's.

Gets Weaver's Old Suit.

"Yeh," said Manager Cy McDonald, "I think we can fix him. We've got a new suit we made up for Big Jim Weaver just before the Washington Club canned him back in 1929. If the moths haven't eaten it up, I think Kline can get into it." So the newest Nat will be bedecked in livery of half a decade ago when he makes his debut here today.

Although Kline comes here on waivers, President Griffith had to pay more than the waiver price for him. Under baseball rules, if only one club claims a player, the team wanting to get rid of him may dicker with the claiming club. So Connie Mack, being a good friend of Griffith's, held him up for more than the regular $7,500 waiver price, probably for $10,000. With the A's, Kline participated in 20 games, winning six and losing two.

Manager Joe Cronin plans to use Kline strictly as a relief pitcher. "He'll come in mighty handy helping out Jack Russell," he said yesterday. "No, I haven't decided who I will ship away to make room for Kline on roster. I don't have to decide until Kline reports so will

Haas, 18, Upsets Perry, 10 and 8, to Take Title

New Orleans, June 23 (AP).—In one of the most amazing upsets of the Dixie season, Fred Haas, jr., slender 18-year-old New Orleans boy, today smothered the veteran Sam Perry, of Birmingham, 10 and 8, to win the Southern amateur golf championship.

The Louisiana State University freshman applied the pressure early in the match. Shooting the first nine holes in one over par, the youngster had Perry 4 down. Fred's only error came on the seventh hole where he missed the green with his approach. However, this was not costly, as his 5 was good enough to win. Haas went 5 up on the eleventh, then starting with the fourteenth won four straight holes.

Allison Defeats Bell For Delaware Title

Wilmington, Del., June 23 (AP).—Wilmer Allison, Austin, Tex., second ranking National tennis player, defeated Berkeley Bell, New York, defending champion, 7—5, 10—8, 6—2 today to win the Delaware State men's singles tennis championship.

Mrs. John Van Ryn, wife of the former Davis Cup player, of Philadelphia, won the women's singles championship, defeating Mrs. Marion Jessup, of Wilmington, 6—1, 3—6, 6—2.

Schulte Crashes Fence, But Is Revived After Great Catch.

Stone's Two Homers in Finale Fail to Erase Big Detroit Lead.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor, The Post).

THEIR pitching horribly mangled by the Tigers in the first game yesterday, the Nats came back for more in the second game and were mangled some more. If that second game had been a prize fight, they'd-a stopped it in the first inning when the Tigers mauled Monte Weaver for six runs.

Boiled down to cold figures, the Nats lost the first game, 9-6, in ten innings, and the second, 8 to 6, in the regulation nine, but matters were getting so bad in that second game that what was left of the 18,000 in the stands gave voice to a ripe, red razzberry in the eighth inning when Johnny Stone lifted a homer over the right-field wall.

Kuhel Breaks Ankle.

The Tigers literally added insult to injury in the late afternoon. After Joe Kuhel, the first injured Nat, had been dragged off the field in the eighth inning of the first game with a broken ankle suffered in a second-base slide, and after Fred Schulte crashed into the center-field fence head first in the tenth inning with a thud that was heard on Capitol Hill, Fred Marberry, an employe discharged by the Nats two years ago, came back to taunt them with an eight-hit performance in the second game. Marberry had a two-hit game in his possession for seven innings.

KUHEL.

The Nats were in a sorry plight in that first game after they made a last ditch rally in the ninth to tie the score and send the game into extra innings, which was tantamount to defeat according to past performances this season which has seen them play 13 extra inning affairs and win only two.

Crowder Pounded Hard.

Joe Cronin entrusted that first game to the keeping of Al Crowder in the tenth and the Tigers left Crowder flatter than a steam-rollered pancake, slamming out five hits after two were out to place the game beyond recall.

Between games, the Nats were greeted with the cheerless news that Kuhel was taken to Georgetown Hospital, would be on crutches for at least a week, and unable to play for perhaps a month.

The first inning of that second game started out like a continuation of the Tigers' tenth inning of the first game. Six straight hits they smacked off the hapless pitches of Monte Weaver, who survived the inning only by the grace and patience of Manager Joe Cronin.

Gerald Walker started it all with a single to left. Then Goose Goslin

Bonsoir, Odds-On Favorite, Wins Charles Town Feature Race Before 6,000 Crowd

Gelding Wins In Feature Contest

Palumbo Rides Choice to Wire Ahead of Sun Alley.

Doc Conner, Schley B. Take Daily Double Which Pays $10.

By Walter Haight
(Post Staff Correspondent).

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., June 23.—Bonsoir, a half-brother of Gallant Fox, gave away from 5 to 17 pounds to his rivals here today and ran off with the Alleghany Handicap, the 6½-furlong feature race. The son of Sir Gallahad III and Bonnie Etolle scampered across the finish line 4½ lengths in front of Sun Alley and Golden Vein. The three others in the field were strung out along the stretch.

The eight-race program drew a crowd of some 6,000, and they stayed to play more than $50,000 in the mutuels. A large portion of those present held tickets on Bonsoir, the gelding being backed down to a $2.80 mutuel, the shortest price on a winner during the meeting.

Bonsoir Wins Handily.

As the race was run, Bonsoir was entitled to every nickel bet on him. Sam Palumbo had the mount and he lost no time in hustling his charge to the top. From that point to the finish, Bonsoir was rated along and passed the judges with something in reserve. Sun Alley was closest to the leader throughout the running, but had his hands full winning the place money from the fast-closing Golden Vein.

C. G. Overcash, owner of Bonsoir, won his second purse of the day when Henry Edwards rode Chaterfol to victory in the fifth race. The son of Chatterton proved the longest mutuel of the day at $19.20. His was another front-running effort. Fusco, the favorite, was bumped by Ann V. L. on the backstretch and knocked to last place.

Daily Double Pays $10.90.

A pair of public choices teamed to produce a $10.90 mutuel in the daily double. There was Doc Conner, which scored an easy victory in the first, and Schley B., which barely got up to nose out Nay Nay in the third.

Arras, Bokie B. Bright Bird and the Gen also accounted for purses. Aella lost a nose decision in the second when Palumbo loafed in the closing stages of the race and Arras came through on the rail to win.

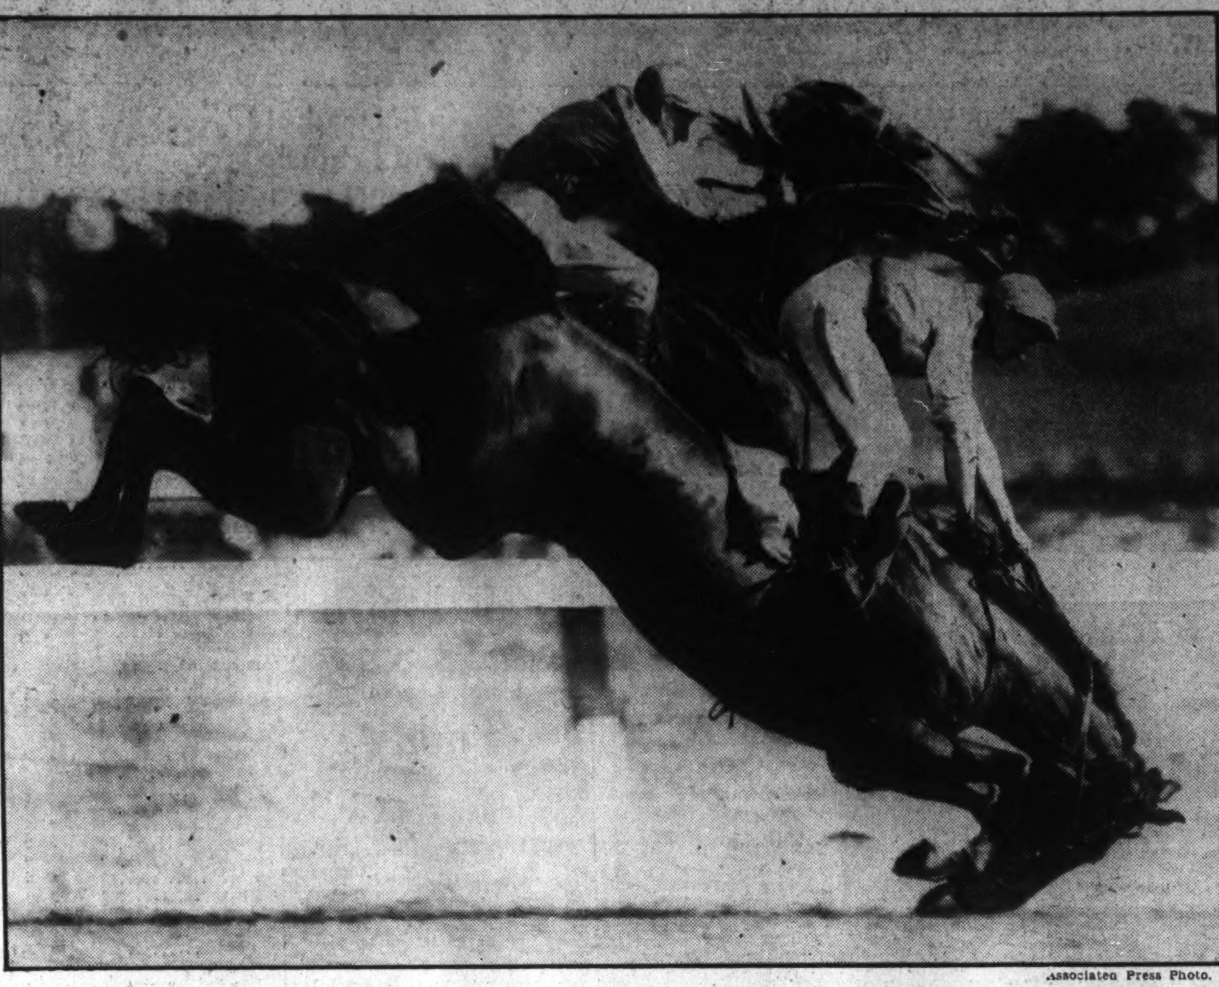
Hold Your Horses—and Your Breath, Too



An Australian steeplechaser takes a tumble on the Melbourne track. The falling horse is seen at the beginning of a complete somersault after taking a hurdle while his jockey, R. McInnis, prepares to jump for it. Both horse and rider miraculously escaped injury.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DOC CONNER, $5.60, $3.20, $2.20; GLISK, $5.00, $2.60; TALOMOND, $2.40.

DOC CONNER, away well, had good speed to take command at once, was rated in front for the entire distance, saved ground throughout, and was in hand at the finish. GLISK, a forward factor from the start, could not match the speed of the winner, but closed well. TALOMOND, slow to find her best speed, moved up quickly on the final turn and closed stoutly. CAPTOR, always well up, was used up trying to catch DOC CONNER and tired. BUSY IKE, fractious at the post and breaking from the outside, was never a serious threat.

SECOND RACE—Five furlongs. Purse, $250; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:11. Off at 3:16. Winner, Mrs. H. Deture's ch. h. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARRAS, $7.40, $3.40, $2.40; AELLA, $2.80, $2.40; UNFAIR, $4.80.

ARRAS, taken back from the early pace, secured racing room on the inside in the stretch and, closing very fast, was up in the final strides. AELLA had good speed to take command, drew out into an apparently safe lead in the stretch, but Palumbo appeared overconfident and did not get the best out of his charge until too late. UNFAIR, a forward factor from the start, closed well. MAZYNIATA raced evenly, but could not better her position. WAR GENERAL dwelt at the break.

THIRD RACE—Six and a half furlongs. Purse, $250; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:42. Off at 3:44. Winner, J. P. Bowman's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SCHLEY B., $3.80, $2.80, $2.60; NAY NAY, $2.80, $3.20; BABY CHINK, $8.30.

SCHLEY B., reserved from the early pace, moved up quickly between horses on the far turn, wore NAY NAY down in the stretch, while bearing in slightly, and was up in the final stride. NAY NAY had good speed to set the pace, was well rated in front and, saving ground, just failed to last. BABY CHINK, rated off the pace and racing on the outside, closed well. FLYING START, slow to find his best speed, made up ground at the end. WILD BLONDE had early speed, but stopped. MISS PATCHES could never get up. WHIRRY stopped.

FOURTH RACE—Six and a half furlongs. Purse, $300. Alleghany Handicap. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:08½. Off at 4:13½. Winner, C. G. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BONSOIR, $2.80, $2.60, $2.40; SUN ALLEY, $3.60, $3.20; GOLDEN VEIN, $3.60.

BONSOIR had good early speed to take the lead in the run for the first turn, was rated in front for the balance of the race, and drew out easily in the stretch to win with speed in reserve. SUN ALLEY, unable to match the speed of the winner, saved ground throughout and held on well. GOLDEN VEIN, slow to settle into his best stride, moved up quickly when called on and closed well. BARCELONA PETE, a trailer in the early part, closed a good gap. SCOTTY DON had a flash of speed.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $250; claiming. The Bramell. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good for all but Voco from gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:39. Off at 4:41. Winner, G. C. Overcash's ch. g. (4), by Chatterton—Pola Negri. Trained by E. Brinning. Value to winner, $200; second, $35; third, $15. Time, 0:24 2-5, 0:49, 1:14 4-5, 1:41 3-5, 1:49.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHATTERFOL, $19.20, $9.40, $5.40; ANNA V. L., $10.40, $5.80; VOCO, $6.20.

CHATTERFOL, away quickly and having good speed, was sent to the front at once, was rated on the rail for the entire trip and had speed in reserve. ANNA V. L. had good speed from the start, crossed over sharply on FUSCO on the front stretch, was rated off the pace of the leaders and closed stoutly. VOCO, unruly at the post, broke in the air, gradually moved up on the final bend and closed with good speed. FUSCO was racing forwardly on the rail when bumped by ANNA V. L. and forced back to last position. He moved up gradually thereafter and closed stoutly.

SIXTH RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $250; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start poor from gates. Won handily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:07. Off at 5:11. Winner, G. A. Reier's b. g. BRIGHT BIRD had good speed to take command at once, was rated in front throughout, saved ground on all turns, and had speed in reserve at the finish. GRAND ROX, rated off the early pace, closed stoutly. BURLEIGH had good speed, made a bold challenge to reach BRIGHT BIRD on the far turn, but was tiring at the end. MUSKODAY, away poorly, closed a huge gap.

BOKIE B. went to the front going into the first turn, drew out easily on the back stretch, and was never menaced to win easily. BLESS HER HEART gradually improved her position and closed stoutly, but was no match for the winner. ROZELL, slow to find her speed, closed with a rush in the last quarter.

HELEN'S ALIBI had good speed to set the pace, saved ground throughout, but could not withstand the challenge of the winner. ROYAL LASSIE, reserved in the early stages, closed with good courage. McDONALD H., sluggish in the early part, raced in spots. DO TELL could never get up.

10,000 Cheer Rose Cross' Victory

Growler Finishes Second, Singing Wood Third in 46th Dwyer.

AQUEDUCT RACETRACK, June 23 (AP).—Rose Cross, sturdy black son of St. Germans—Red, Red Rose, owned by Mrs. Charles S. Payson and Mrs. Thomas V. Laughlin, ran the most impressive race of his career when he won the forty-sixth running of the Dwyer Stakes in little more than a gallop before more than 10,000 cheering fans here today. Favorite at 11 to 10, the colt led H. W. Maxwell's Growler across the finish line by a half a dozen lengths. Mrs. J. H. Whitney's Singing Wood, 8 to 5 second choice, was a tired third, another two lengths behind. Cleves and Carry Over, coupled with Growler as the trainer Fitzsimmons entry, were fourth and fifth, respectively.

Rose Cross, in picking up $4,090 for his efforts ran the mile and a half distance in 2:32 over a track that had dried out to fast condition following overnight rain. Crusader holds the track record of 229 3-5.

Coucci Rides Winner.

Silvio Coucci was brought back from Detroit especially to pilot Rose Cross and the little Bronx Express had a simple task, as it turned out, his mount running as if much the best. Singing Wood, under 121 pounds, was conceding each of his rivals 5 pounds. An added touch of rivalry helped stimulate interest in the race, Mrs. J. H. Whitney being the sister-in-law of Mrs Payson, who is the former Jean Whitney.

A good start saw Carry Over going to the front to set the early pace Singing Wood and Rose Cross followed, while Growler was not as far back as is his custom. At the far turn Singing Wood was sent into a clear lead by Bobby Jones, but Coucci also began his move with Rose Cross and the latter rapidly gained ground around the bend. After turning for home, Rose Cross quickly demonstrated his superiority by sailing past the Withers winner and opening up a wide advantage. He just galloped the rest of the way, with nothing to fear. Growler had no trouble picking up the faltering Singing Wood in the last furlong.

Pimlico Stake Race Purses Increased

Overnight Events Money Also Is Boosted for Fall Meeting.

BALTIMORE, June 23 (AP).—Increased purses for both stake races and overnight events at Pimlico track during the fall meet were announced today by M. L. Daiger, secretary of the Maryland Jockey Club.

In the Riggs Handicap and the Walden Handicap, feature races of the meeting, the purses were raised from $5,000 to $7,500 added each In the two secondary features, the Baltimore and the Pimlico Handicaps, the purses remain at $2,500 added.

Graduated Purses.

A system of graduated purses is to be installed in place of the straight $800 purse in the overnight races.

In two races each day, the purse will be $600. In three others, the purse will remain at $800. In one flat race and in the Steeplechase event, the purse is to be $1,000. On days when there is no stake offered, a $1,500 purse will be offered as a feature attraction.

The total of purses for the 13-day meet, which starts October 31 and ends November 14, is $106,300.

July 4 Marathon Entries Accepted

Ten-Mile Event Will Be Part of Celebration.

The annual 10-mile marathon, for the championship of the District, held under A. A. U. auspices, again will be part of the Fourth of July celebration this year, Richard S. Tennyson, assistant supervisor of municipal playgrounds, has announced.

The race is under the joint sponsorship of the Takoma Park Citizens Association and the Public Playground Department. Starting at the railroad bridge on the Mount Vernon highway, and winding through the streets of Washington, it will terminate at the Takoma (D. C.) Playground.

Bill Agee, of the Stonewall Democratic Club, of Baltimore, and winner of the event since 1929, again is favorite of the field.

John C. Post, chairman of the race, is being assisted by a large committee. Entries are being accepted at room 313, in the District Building.

Three Outstanding Fight Cards Scheduled in Capital's Busiest Boxing Week

Von Reedon Faces Al Gillette

Pair Feature Hunt Club Program Tomorrow; Seaman on Card.

Joe Knight in Main Bout of Legion's Initial Fistic Venture.

BARRING intervention by Jupiter Pluvius, the mills of the local fistic gods will grind often and exceedingly fine this week, with three shows scheduled.

The Riding and Hunt Club will start the week right tomorrow with a 32-round card headed by Charley Von Reedon and Al Gillette, Wednesday night the American Legion will dedicate its new arena at Fifth and Florida avenue, northeast, with a "natural" between Joe Knight and Henry Firpo and Friday Joe Turner injects an outstanding bit of class into the situation with a bout between Al Foreman and Pete Sarron.

Von Reedon, the transplanted Floridian who now dedicates his time to punching a typewriter for Uncle Sam and punching noses for local promoters, is facing one of the best club fighters in the ring in the person of Al Gillette, the New York powerhouse. Gillette has fought three times for Johnny Attell at the Ridgewood Grove Arena in Brooklyn, twice against Frankie Covelli, who holds a decisive win over Von Reedon. Gillette won one and lost one to Covelli, which gives some indication of what Von Reedon may expect.

Seaman in Semifinal.

The Riding and Hunt Club semifinal between Al Rigonne and Sammy Seaman, a couple of bustling bantamweights, may annex top honors from the Von Reedon-Gillette embroglio. Rigonne dropped a disputed decision to Billy Landers two weeks ago in a bristling six-rounder and Seaman, the Pacific Coast champion, made a creditable showing against Flyweight Champion Midget Wolgast in the final Portner's show.

Matchmaker Charlie Swan seems to have captured an outstanding natural in the Joe Knight-Henry Firpo bout which is to head the American Legion's opening card Wednesday. Knight, a southpaw, is famed for the deadly wallop he packs in his portside mitten, while Firpo is a terrific right-hand puncher. Knight reached within pushing distance of the top last winter in a championship bout with light heavyweight title holder Maxie Rosenbloom. Slapsie Maxie emerged with a decision, but the referee who officiated at the contest was roundly criticized and drew an indefinite suspension as a result of the furor that greeted the award.

Tough on Southpaws.

Firpo is bad news to southpaws. He has twice beaten Georgie Nichols, former N. B. A. champion, who is a left-hander.

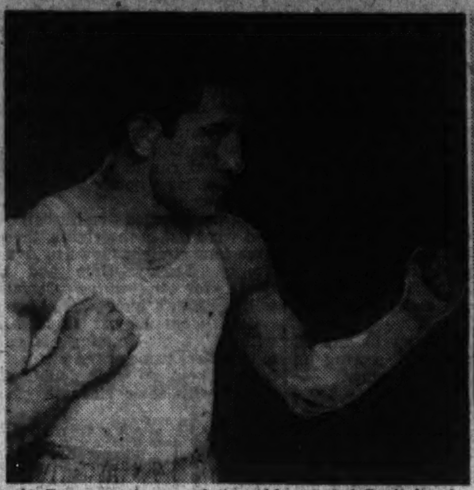
Joe Turner deserts the heavyweights for his class card at Griffith Stadium Friday, headed by Al Foreman, twice winner of the Canadian lightweight championship, lightweight champion of the British Empire, holder of the Lord Lonsdale belt and a ranking boxer in the featherweight, junior lightweight and lightweight divisions. Foreman's opponent is Pete Sarron, the Birmingham beak bruiser, who has become established as the best drawing card in and about Washington.

Well Known Here.

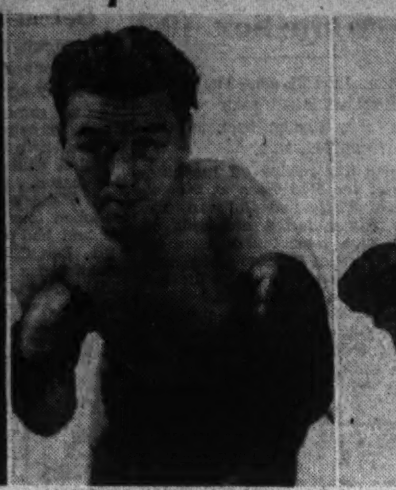
Foreman is well known to Washington fight fans of 1925-1926, who recall his technical knockout win over Andy Bowen and his quick disposal of Goldie Ahearn, then one of the leading featherweight contenders. He is a knockout artist with sufficient ring lore and generalship to enable him to maneuver with the best. One of his greatest claims to fame lies in his "whippet punch," a short, straight, right-hand delivered from the chest in a peculiarly puzzling manner.

Sarron has met and defeated most of the best the Portner's promoters were able to import for him, while the Alexandria abattoir was headquarters for local box-fighting. He twice held former N. B. A. Champion Tommy Paul to draws and dropped a very close decision to Freddy Miller, present N. B. A. featherweight title holder.

Trio of Headliners on Capital's Fistic Menu for Week



Al Foreman, former fistic pride of the Capital, who returns to local ring wars next Friday at Griffith Stadium, where he meets Petey Sarron. Foreman is the British lightweight champion.



Al Gillette, New York featherweight, who has been cast for the main bout at the Riding and Hunt Club tomorrow night against Von Reedon.

Joe Knight, the Nation's second-ranking light heavyweight, who will battle Henry Firpo, of Louisville, at the new American Legion Arena's opening show on Wednesday.

Around the Ring . . .

By Bill McCormick.

THE burning desire on the part of fight fanatics to see masses of protoplasm yclept "pugilist" rendered inert by knockout punches being what it is, it behooves the local promoters to take carefully into their consideration the Messrs. Tony Galento and Harry Serody, a couple of soporific swingers in the heavyweight and lightweight divisions, respectively.

Not that old dyed-in-the-wool Phineas F. Phightphan won't forsake his armchair any night in the week to see two waltz kings play pitty-pat with overstuffed mittens—no, sir. But the casual attender at programs of pugilism must be lured out by visions of seeing human hulks laid end to end on the canvas with gratifying thuds. Otherwise, the casual attender will remain comfortably ensconced in an easy chair, flanked by mint juleps and a low wave-length radio.

Tony Galento, he of the beer-barrel belly and 120-proof wallop, apparently is destined to best gratify the sadistic desires of the fight fans here. Never before in the history of local lambasting has a figure so appealing to the average fight fanatic popped into the ring. His murderous punching is only half of it.

Like Max Baer, of the Max Baer of publicity, he appeals to the spirit of adventure within the breast of Phineas F. Phightphan. A fighter who trains faithfully, follows all the storybook rules and never steps off the straight and narrow lane—presumably the only course for a successful fisticuffer—is all right, in the opinion of your average fight fan—if he has the wallop. If he hasn't, he's a sissy. But a fighter who tosses all the storybook rules out of the window, does just as he darn pleases and still has the old wallop—there, my friends, is indeed a man!

Such a one is Galento. Training rules mean no more to him than split infinitives to a boxing writer. At least 15 of those 220 pounds he lugs in the ring with him for every contest are excess baggage. For the most important bouts he is liable to consider a hair cut, shave and manicure, interspersed with frequent libations of beer all the training needed. And then, more likely than not, he will drag his 220 pounds through the ropes and knock into every known variety of tail spin some aspiring young heavyweight of the Horatio Alger type, who has deviated not one whit from the written rules for becoming a successful fisticuffer.

Street-corner fighting, always against almost insurmountable odds, is his favorite occupation. He wound up his training for the shellacking he gave Marty Gallagher, who had trained long and loud, by drinking ten bottles of beer!

Small wonder that he appeals to Phineas F. Phightphan, who is, at heart, just that kind of a reckless adventurer.

Between Rounds: The Boxing Commission won't sanction mixed bouts . . . otherwise we might have seen Pete Sarron and Kid Chocolate in action for the featherweight title at Griff Stadium . . . Goldie Ahearn should lower the ring lights at his Riding and Hunt Club . . . and increase their power . . . Joe Turner should not allow so much resin to be sprinkled on the canvas at Griffith Stadium . . . it blows off into the eyes of those who have paid fancy prices for ringside seats . . .

Answers.

J. T., jr.: Properly trained, Galento would stand a very good chance of flattening Primo Carnera if he also were instructed in avoiding Da Preem's enervating clinches. Whatta battle that would make—the man who walks like a mountain vs. the man who walks like a beer barrel!

R. O. B.: Sorry, I can not see Reds Barry as a fighter. Under the rules of the District Boxing Commission, he can not win a fight. The rules say a boxer shall not slap—and that's all Barry ever has done. But it must be admitted that he can befuddle many a better fighter with his unorthodox style.

H. R., Chicago: Primo Carnera gave no indications of having an injured ankle in his fight with Max Baer. We have only the diagnosis of his own personal physician as to the extent of his injuries. Personally, I believe the injuries, if as serious as painted, were received in the tenth or eleventh round—not the second, as claimed.

Peacock Takes Golf Title in Maryland

Defeats Caldwell in Final, Shooting 33 Holes in One Over Par.

Caldwell's par 3 after meandering into a trap on his tee shot.

Two up at the end of the morning round, Peacock saved himself a half with Caldwell on the nineteenth with a fine second shot out of a ditch. On the twentieth hole, Peacock fired his second from an awkward stance on the side of a hill, his ball struck the trees and dropped into a ditch, costing him a 5, Caldwell winning with a 4. Roger became 2 up by taking the twenty-first with a par 3, and his putt from 3 feet for a birdie on the twenty-second rimmed the cup and danced out. Roger made a great second from atop a bunker on the twenty-third for a half in 4, took the twenty-fourth with a par 4, when Caldwell's second landed in a bunker, and his try for an eagle on the 478-yard seventh hit the back of the cup and wiggled out. Roger halved the hole in birdie 4's as Caldwell ran down a 12-footer after being trapped on his second.

Halves Hole in Par 3.

Rounding the twenty-seventh, Peacock was 3 up. The Washington boy was laid a stymie by Caldwell on the short twenty-eighth—a peculiar stymie considering it was Caldwell's drive—but chipped over his rival's ball and halved the hole in par 3. Some one stepped on Peacock's tee shot as it lay in the rough on the twenty-ninth and Roger's iron second to the green was weakly played. He finally blew a 2-footer to take a 6 and lose to Caldwell's 5. They halved the next two holes and Peacock smoked out his opponent with birdies on the fourteenth and fifteenth.

Peacock missed few greens during the day, and was in only three traps in the morning and none in the afternoon. Caldwell scored a 73 for the morning round and was two over the afternoon.

The play-off for the medal between Hickman Green, of Argyle Country Club, Washington, and Caldwell, who tied with 150 on Wednesday, will take place tomorrow at 2 p. m.

Millers Carry National City League Title Hopes in Game With Printers Today

Close Games Foreseen in Section B

Independent Co-Leaders Face Hard Task; Store Title at Stake.

Benning Meets Unbeaten Mt. Rainiers in Prince Georges League.

THE pennant hopes and aspirations of the pace-setting teams in the several Sunday leagues of The Washington Post Sandlot Baseball Association will again be subjected to the fire and onslaughts of the numerous strong contending nines in the weekly tests of survivorship today on ball fields throughout Maryland, Virginia and the District.

National City.

The spotlight in the National City League will be focused on the Miller Furniture-Union Printer battle on the East Ellipse. The hopes of the Miller team for first-round honors in Section B hinge on the outcome of this game, unless Griffith Blue Coals and Dor-A, tied for leadership with the Furniture nine, suffer upsets at the hands of Rinaldi Coalmen and Warwicks. Joe Porter or Harry Milburn will pitch for the Millers.

St. Joseph's has already clinched Section A laurels for the initial round of play, but this fact has detracted little interest in its battle with the strong Pig 'n' Whistle Club on the South Ellipse. A great rivalry has sprung up between these teams during the past decade, and plenty of action is promised any time they play each other.

D. C. Independent.

Ross Jewelers and Capital Heights, coleaders in the District Independent League, encounter formidable obstacles in the Kenilworth and Grace A. C. These young teams have been playing at a fast pace during the past three weeks. They have been getting good pitching and have been hitting the ball hard. Whether they can continue at this gait against Spencer Usilton and Austin Pohl, the league's best pitchers, remains to be seen. Postal A. C. engages Mount Rainier Grays in another outstanding attraction.

Department Store.

Paul Messink's Hecht Store team, which all but had the first-half title firmly in its grasp, has its last opportunity to gain in Department Store League this morning against Palais Royal on the South Ellipse. Kann's, in the meantime, will be playing Lansburgh's on the adjacent Ellipse, and in the event of a loss for Hecht's and a victory for Kann's these two teams and Palais Royal will be tied for first place. Messink or Johnny Wolf for Hecht's and Bob Wallach for Palais Royal are the probable mound rivals.

Prince Georges.

First place in the Prince Georges County League is also at stake as Benning A. C. stacks up against the undefeated Mount Rainier A. C. on the latter's field. The success of Benning's challenge rests on the shoulders of young Joe Sullivan, former Eastern High star, whose sterling pitching has kept his team in the running.

Colmar Manor faces Stadium A. C. on the Benning field at 3 o'clock in another title-bearing game. This is the feature of a double-header with Sigma Alpha Kappa facing the Anacostia Eagles at 1 o'clock. An interesting hurling duel looms between Witt, Manor's ace, and Hienie Newman, star of the Stadiums.

Northern Virginia.

Mayor Harry P. Davis, ardent baseball enthusiast, will toss out the first ball as the Manassas Team makes its debut in league competition against Clarendon Business Mens Association. Manassas will present a strong line-up, which includes Ike Driefuss and Jack Kidwell, former St. Mary Celtic players.

In the revised schedule, Ballston meets White Haven, and Fort Myer makes its initial appearance against Herndon Market in the other Section B attractions. Park Lane travels to Middleburg; Fairfax journeys to Falls Church and McLean plays host to the Arlington A. C. in the Section A contests.

Montgomery County

Evelyn Lynch, former star of the widely heralded Bloomer Girls Team, has been added to the roster of the Cabin John Team in an effort to bolster the team's pennant chances. Miss Lynch is a player of exceptional ability and is expected to play first base for Cabin John against Wheaton on the former's diamond.

With the return of Windsor, fastball pitcher, Wheaton is quite confident of upsetting Cabin John, as is White Haven in its battle against the league-leading North Washington. A close hurling duel between Harry Best, of Bethesda, and Meiklejohn is anticipated this afternoon, when these clubs meet at Bethesda in the other league game.

wait until tomorrow (Sunday) before making up my mind." The chances are, however, that Outfielder Gus Dugas will be the "goat" and that he will be returned to the Albany International Leaguers.

Rogers Hornsby and his St. Louis Browns open a four-game series against the Nats this afternoon. The scrappy Mound City team is just as scrappy as ever, but finds victories coming harder than they did earlier in the season and the Nats hope to pick up where they left off before the Tigers hit town and take at least three of the four games. Walter Stewart, the southpaw obtained from the Browns during the 1932 off-season, will do the flinging for the natives, with Buck Newsom probably opposing him.

hit a single to center. Then Charley Gehringer hit a single to right. Then Bill Rogell hit a double to right. Then Hank Greenberg hit a single to left. Then Ray Hayworth hit a single to left. Then Marvin Owen hit into a force play. Then Fred Marberry hit a double to left. The Tigers had their six runs for the inning by the time Fox popped out.

The Tigers had upped it to 8-0 by the time the Nats got around to scoring, Goose Goslin's triple accounting for a run in the second inning.

Thereafter the Nats could only make it close. They picked up a run in the sixth and then got three in the eighth when Stone bashed a homer over the right-field fence, Manush doubled, Cronin doubled and Kress singled to reduce the score to 8-4. It was 8-6 in the ninth when Stone smacked a second homer over the wall, with Bluege on base and thus ends the story of the first game.

Myer Starts Rally.

The Tigers were within one pitched ball of winning that knock-down-and-drag-out first game back in the ninth inning when Vic Sorrell had a 4-3 lead, two out, none on base, and a three-and-two count on Buddy Myer. Then the Nats got obstreperous and tied the score in a last-ditch rally, when they might have saved themselves the awful ignominy in the Tigers' tenth.

Myer met Sorrell's pitch coming through the slot and smacked a single into right field. Johnny Stone bashed another single to right that put Myer on third with the tying run, and then Heinie Manush justified his standing as the league's leading hitter by banging a third single into right that tied the score at 4-4.

A hit by Cronin at this juncture would have avoided the catastrophe in the tenth, but no hit was forthcoming and the Nats went back to the field to meet their doom.

Before relating how Crowder was knocked loose from those five runs in the tenth, let me tell you how the Tigers took a 1-0 lead against Al Thomas in the first on singles by Fox and Cochrane, how Cecil Travis put the Nats back in the ball game in the fourth inning by slamming his first homer of the season over the right field wall with Cronin on base, and how the Tigers came from the rear with a three-run uprising in the fifth when they were specializing in triples and home runs.

Goslin Hits Homer.

Fox started it all with a triple against the center field fence and with one out Goose Goslin rammed a homer that was still rising when it cleared the right field wall. Then Thomas pitched another triple to Charlie Gehringer, and the Tigers had their third run of the inning when Rogell drilled a single into right.

The Nats knocked a run off this 4-2 lead in the sixth when Travis doubled and Moe Berg singled and with Jack Russell allowing the Tigers only one hit in a four-inning relief shift, the Nats squared matters in the ninth, but they couldn't get by the tenth.

Crowder had two out when the landslide arrived, robbing Fred Schulte of the hero's mantle. Schulte had just gone back against the fence head first to make a desperate stab of Goslin's liner as his dome struck the barrier with a crash that was heard in Bladensburg, but he held on to the ball as he fell. He showed no signs of life until the Nats rushed out to determine the extent of his injuries. They found the ball tightly clenched in a death-grip in his bare hand. Stunned only, he rteurned to the game.

And then, with two out, the explosion occurred. Gehringer popped a double into short left, and Rogell scored with a single to left that Manush grabbed up behind shortstop, but Gehringer reached the plate ahead of Heinie's feeble throw. Crowder couldn't get anybody else out. He walked Greenberg, Walker pushed a double to right, he walked Owen, and Pitcher Auker singled to right. Fox singled for the fifth hit of the inning, to drive in the fifth run.

McColl finally got the side out when Cochrane popped to Cronin.

The Nats' counter-rally of two runs in the ninth was obviously waste motion.

Boston, June 23 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox continued their winning streak today, turning back the Chicago White Sox, 10-2.

Fifteen hits rattled off the bludgeons of the Red Hose at the expense of Tietje and Gallivan. The White Sox collected nine hits off Welch, who went the distance for Boston. Four of Chicago's hits came in the fourth inning when the losers' two runs were scored.

The Red Sox won seven out of the nine games they played this week, and they have taken 15 out of the last 21 games played.

Pirates, Behind French, Defeat Braves, 4 to 0

Pittsburgh, June 23 (AP).—The Pirates moved back into first division today by defeating Boston in the final game of the series, 4 to 0. Larry French pitched in old-time form, allowing but five hits, to score the first shut-out for the Corsairs this season.

L. Waner's play featured. He walloped four hits in five times at bat and had 10 put-outs in center field. Earl Clark, Boston outfielder, established a world record May 10, 1929, when he had 13 chances, 12 put-outs and one assist in a nine-inning game.

The Pirates gathered 13 hits off Ed Brandt's delivery, scoring in each of the first three innings.

Murphy pitched five-hit ball until two were out in the eighth, then he gave four straight blows to Averill, Trosky, Sammy Hale and Bob Seeds for the three Cleveland tallies. Hale's blow was a double.

Ruth went to bat three times without a hit, running his string to 20 hitless turns at the plate. The Indians kept up their double play record with their eleventh of the series.

Cubs Win, 5-4, Over Giants In Ninth

Take Three Out of Four in Series; Bush on Slab After 22 Days.

CHICAGO, June 23 (AP).—The revived Cubs took another slash at the world champion Giants today, drove across a ninth-inning run after having three early leads wiped out and took the final game of the series, 5 to 4.

The league leaders departed with only one victory in the four-game set, and had a margin of only 3½ games over the third-place Chicago Club.

Kiki Cuyler's third hit of the game scored Chuck Klein from second with the winning run after two were out in the ninth. Klein reached the halfway station as the result of a two-base wild throw by Relief Pitcher Al Smith, who had come in to do the elbowing in the ninth after Hal Schumacher had given way to a pinch hitter.

A's, Browns Split; Foxx Pounds Two

Philadelphia, June 23 (AP).—The Athletics and St. Louis Browns today split their second double-header in as many days, the A's capturing the opener, 4 to 2, and dropping the nightcap, 6 to 2.

Bill Dietrich's four-hit twirling and Jimmy Foxx's seventeenth homer of the campaign were features of the Mack attack in the first contest.

Foxx also hit a circuit clout in the second game, but the A's, generally, were unable to do much damage to George Blaeholder's delivery in the nightcap.

Sarazen Is 6-1 Favorite to Take British Open Starting Tomorrow at Sandwich

4 Americans To Compete In Event

Shute to Defend Title; Mac Smith, Kirkwood Also Entered.

Observers Believe Par or Even Three or Four Above Will Win.

SANDWICH, England, June 23 (AP).—It looks like the four American entrants against the field in the British open golf championship starting Monday over the Royal St. George's course.

It is a small but mighty array—Denny Shute, defending his 1933 title; Gene Sarazen, who preceded him on the throne; MacDonald Smith, a contender although never a titleholder for more than 20 years, and Joe Kirkwood, the naturalized Australian who can make a golf ball do tricks everywhere except in a championship and sometimes there.

"I think we have a 50-50 chance to come through," Sarazen told the Associated Press, after he had shot a 74, two over par, in a high wind.

"I am well satisfied with my game and I'm confident I'll give a good account of myself. Mac Smith also is going great and you know he must be confident or he wouldn't have made the long trip over here.

"Shute still is below his best form but he was a way off his game in a couple of tournaments just before last year's open and then suddenly 'got right,' tied Craig Wood and won the playoff. Kirkwood is a dangerous player any time, any place."

Sarazen lists A. H. Padgham, Henry Cotton, Percy Alliss and Archie Compston as the leading British threats to regain the title no Briton has won since 1923.

Sarazen himself is the choice of the bookmakers at 6 to 1, with Padgham second.

The Royal St. George's course, over which the championship proper will be played, following the qualifying rounds Monday and Tuesday, is in fine shape despite the recently broken drought.

The winds, however, play queer tricks and, like St. Andrews, Sarazen says "It's a new course every time you play it."

Most observers believe that par or even three or four strokes above 288 will win. Walter Hagen won here in 1928 with 292 and the course has been little changed since then. Sarazen was runner-up that year.

Baer's 'Big 3'

Loriman, Ancil Hoffman and Dempsey Helped Him in Climb.

Editor's note: The author has finally managed to get himself untracked, and so this is the last of a series of six articles on the career of Max Adalbert Baer, the heavyweight champion of the world.

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, June 23 (Spl.).—Yes, this is finis to this series, and, of course, only the beginning for this amazing man. For we still know nothing about him. If, through the story of his birth and upbringing, his environment and his early training, we understand a little better whence he came and why he has done some of the things attributed to him by legend and actual report, we still do not know whence comes his ability to entertain, to dance and sing, act in the pictures, read lines over the radio, say the right thing at the right time, indulge in swift repartee, and, too, if he feels so inclined, behave very much like a man of the world. He clowns when clowning is in order, and when it is likely to bring him financial return either in valuable publicity or in drawing power. When he is off among friends he acts accordingly.

Man of Different Moods.

He played golf the way we all do, happy over good shots and blashphemous over bad ones. He was studious and reserved over his contract bridge and played hands with skill and imagination although his training was over with for the present. He drank but one alcoholic drink the entire day, a Tom Collins, after the golf game, and didn't finish that. He ate moderately for lunch—a club sandwich, some green salad and iced tea. He smoked cigarettes. He was just one of a pleasant party of four men out for a man's day of relaxation at the Country Club.

Now, all this was acquired—had to be acquired. It was certainly not the same Max Baer who made his first entrance into New York with 28 trunks, a 16-cylinder car, with a chauffeur and a secretary-dietitian, who put up in a suite at the Hotel Plaza costing $27 per diem, who lunched around town wearing striped trousers, cutaway and top hat, who oversubscribed and oversold himself at the rate of about 115 shares in a company that owned only 100. How quickly these big champions learn.

Three Men Aided Him.

Three men helped Baer on the way up. The first is J. Ham Lorimer, his first manager. The second is Ancil Hoffman, his present manager, a shrewd, wide-awake, kindly fellow to whom Max will always be a child to be watched and guarded and protected as much as it is humanly possible to protect a man not only against the thieves of the world, but against himself. And the third is Jack Dempsey who has no official capacity in the Baer menage, but who is the most important.

You will note here three curious trilogies in Baer's life, both male and female, and almost exact parallels—three women in his love life, three men in his fistic life. Ham Lorimer, the first manager; Ancil Hoffman, the older man who takes care of Baer, and Jack Dempsey, the inspiration. Dempsey can make Baer do things that nobody else can because Baer admires Dempsey so. He admires Dempsey's ability to handle himself in any company, to be a complete and well-loved man of the world.

Dempsey promoted Baer's three most important fights, his two twenty-rounders with Paulino Uzcudun and Levinsky—and, by the way, Baer is the only modern heavyweight champion to have boxed two twenty-round fights—and the explosive show with Max Schmeling. Dempsey has taught Baer a lot of boxing and fighting. But, above all, he came at a time when the boy was spiritually anchorless and drifting, and gave him a mark to shoot at. Baer wanted to be like Dempsey. And to do so, he first had to win the heavyweight championship of the world. No fighter ever had a better managerial combination. The steady, watchful, level-headed Hoffman and the restless, firebrand Dempsey.

Well, there is your full-grown Baer, prize fighter, actor, radio man, dancer, singer, lover, family man, good-time Charley, equally at home in a night club or golf club, a professional eccentric and probably the fighter with the greatest flair for publicity that ever lived. The queer things he used to do and say because he didn't know any better are now controlled and exploited for his benefit. There is much more to this amazing personage, in his life and rise, than I have been able to tell in a short series. But I hope I have been able to give you a hint as to the person who inhabits that remarkable athlete's body.

A field of more than 200 marksmen is expected to vie for the various titles. The British double-target system will be employed this year for the first time.

City of Washington Doubles Final Today

Ralph McElvenny and Tom Charest and Tony Latona and Axel Gravem will clash this afternoon at 2:30 for the City of Washington doubles championships on the courts of the Columbia Country Club. Latona and Graven raised their stock several points by eliminating Dooley Mitchell and Tom Mangan, No. 2 seeded pair, last week.

Hotchkiss Cup To Baltimore Netmen

Wins All Three Doubles to Eke Out Victory by 5-4 Count.

THEY had a place all dusted off in the trophy room of the Columbia Country Club yesterday for the Hotchkiss Cup, but the space is still empty today.

Virtually snatching the beautiful trophy from under the collective noses of the Washington team, a group of fighting Baltimore tennis players cooly turned what had been generally conceded a Washington victory into a smarting 5-to-4 defeat, allowing it to carry off the cup, emblematic of the team championships of Norfolk, Richmond, Baltimore and Washington, for the seventh time in the 14-year history of the event. The matches were held on the Columbia courts.

Prior to yesterday's play, the two cities were tied with six victories apiece. Washington eliminated Richmond, winner of the 1933 championship, 9 to 0, Friday, and Baltimore overwhelmed Norfolk, 7 to 1.

Clean Up in Doubles.

Apparently unruffled at the prospect of Washington needing but one more win to clinch the title at the conclusion of the singles, in which Baltimore won but two of the six matches, the visiting team settled down to the task of taking all three doubles matches and went through with it with complete success.

While the ultimate result was not decided until the conclusion of the final match of the day in which Bert Rawls and Eric Jacobsen, of Baltimore, defeated Nelson Spottswood and Ed Baker, 6—4, 6—4, it was back in the last singles match between Tom Mangan, Washington veteran, and Dr. John Howard, former Princeton tennis captain and Maryland State champion, that the Washington hopes received their greatest jolt.

The slightly built Johns Hopkins physician, in administering a 6—2, 2—6, 8—6 defeat to Mangan, No. 1 man of the Washington team, exhibited the best tennis of the day against an opponent who was hitting with all his customary capabilities.

Mangan Ties Score.

In the crucial third set, Howard jumped to a 4-1 lead only to have the Washington veteran bring it to 4-all. the visiting player won his service in the next game but Mangan deuced the score at 5-all in the tenth. Howard blew his own service when his game suddenly fell off completely, but came back to make it 6-all by outvolleying Mangan on two vital points.

Finding his net game particularly effective, the Baltimore player continued it in the next two, taking Mangan's service in the final game through the aid of a double-fault, match point coming after a long rally in which Howard finally aced his opponent on a sharply-angled volley.

Harrison and Gulli Ranked No. 1 in National Bowling

JOE HARRISON.

LORRAINE GULLI.

TWO Washington bowlers for the third consecutive year were accorded the honor as king and queen of the duckpin drives last night when the National Duckpin Bowling Congress voted Joe Harrison and Lorraine Gulli the No. 1 ranking shooters of the country for the 1933-34 season after reviewing the records of over 50,000 National competitors.

Miss Gulli fairly spread-eagled her field to retain her laurels for the seventh straight year, while Harrison, the popular captain of the world record-smashing Occidental Restaurant team, supplants Ollie Pacini, the Capital's foremost Italian shooter of Northeast Temple.

While the complete city rankings have not been made, Harrison undoubtedly will receive a unanimous vote from the committee of the Washington City Duckpin Association.

Nick Tronsky, considered without a peer, again tops the honorary list due to lack of league competition.

To another District roller, Mrs. Catherine Quigley goes the honor of being the most valuable team bowler. Ray von Dreele, of Baltimore, was given similar recognition. A brilliant run of 1,674 games without a miss is the achievement of Mrs. Quigley, who has rolled 972 in the Washington Ladies League since 1922 and 702 games in the Ladies District League since 1927. She is a member of the Beeques and Columbia teams.

Following are the rankings as announced by George L. Isemann, secretary of the congress:

Horse and Rider

By Marian May.

ONCE upon a time the exhibitor-dealer could sell a show horse by using as his main argument the theoretical victories of the horse at Madison Square Garden, Devon, Chicago, Toronto, Punktown, Goofus Corners, &c. In fact, time was when every horse for sale had won a blue or two at the National Horse Show, according to his fond owner. Such distinction was parallel to the case of one's ancestors coming to this country on the Mayflower. There could be no question as to the intrinsic value of a National Horse Show winner, no matter how funny looking, any more than the aristocracy of a fruit peddler whose forbears had received their first sight of this land from the polished decks of the proud Mayflower.

A Good Example.

For instance, Mr. O. Skinnem, manager of the stables of Skinnem, Skinnem & Skinnem, Inc., wants to get rid of Big Blunder, a clumsy hunter bearing all too close a resemblance to a camel in conformation as well as disposition. Mr. Wood B. Ribbongrabber comes to Mr. Skinnem to buy a sure winner for the big circuit this season. Big Blunder is led out. Mr. Skinnem fondles the bony frame of the clumsy beast with eyes sparkling with the pride born of a desire to drive a hard bargain, and advances the information that Big Blunder won the Gus Gumdrop Conformation Hunter Stake last year at the National Horse Show at the Garden, and a lot of grand championships at obscure shows. As every one-time purchaser knows, Mr. Ribbongrabber is supposed to enthuse to the point of slapping down several grand and considering himself darned lucky to get such a rare bargain. And if he does so, he is likely to be a very disappointed Mr. Ribbongrabber at the end of the season if he has not given away Big Blunder long before then.

Almost equally as nauseating as Mr. Skinnem is the exhibitor—dealer or otherwise—who makes post entries in horse shows for malicious reasons. After the entries close, he gets up a list and studies it carefully. During the show, he watches the progress of the classes. Upon the approach of a class in which he thinks he can clean up, he runs to the judges' stand and enters a bunch of horses, usually making a clean sweep of the ribbons.

New Regulations.

The mischievous actions of Mr. Skinnem and the post entry expert are over, the Horse Show Association of America has decreed in new rulings to be in effect at recognized shows a week from today. For the protection of the exhibitor, the association is compelling owners to register every show horse with its true name, the owner's name, and an accurate record of prizes won. A book containing the records of all registered show horses will be distributed each January, and registration numbers must appear opposite names on the programs of horse shows. The association has also drawn up a regulation which will make post entries extremely inconvenient in classes which do not specify that post entries will be permitted.

In formulating the registration rule, the association had to overcome two big objections. The Kentucky Saddle Horse Breeders' Association claimed that it should not be necessary to register horses twice, since nearly all pure-bred horses are already registered in the stud books of their respective breeds. In answer to the Kentucky Saddle Horse Breeders' Association, the American Horse Show Association amended the ruling as follows:

Meet All Objections.

"Upon application to this association any horse registered in the accepted stud book of its respective breed will be considered as complying with the requirements of this rule without payment of further fee."

To the objection that the breeder would not care to go to the expense of registering young stock which he will withdraw from the show ring if it does not do as well as expected, the association made the following amendment:

"Any horse not registered may be shown at not more than three shows upon payment of 25 cents listing fee at each show . . . After three 'listings' such a horse must be registered."

The other ruling specifies that post entries, unless it is stated in the catalogue that they will be accepted, may be received only after the unanimous written consent of the exhibitors in the class and the payment of three times the stated entry fee.

By Jean Monk.

ONE of the most interesting features of salt water fishing is the ebbing and flooding of the tides. And although the subject of tides among fishermen and fishing editors is the one perennial topic of much talk and sometimes a little discussion, seldom is anything of an enlightening nature ever released for publication on the subject.

We tell our readers that the tides will be high at stated hours and moments at certain well-known or popular fishing grounds. The tides are also low at those places at certain hours and moments. It is assumed, apparently, in giving the high tides that fish bite only when the tides are highest.

But those tide tables which give only the times of high tides do not, as a matter of fact, give the high water periods but only the moment when the tide is the highest. At that moment, however, the tide starts falling (ebbing) again; so that, what such tide tables really give is the period (half of it to be calculated) of falling water, ebb tide. And that isn't what those tables intend to give.

To give the periods of high water it is necessary to state the hour and the moment when the water will be the lowest, all the way out; for, it is at that moment that it starts rising and it will continue to rise for the next 6 or 6½ hours.

Another point salt water fishermen ought to know is that tide predictions issued by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, from which all fishermen's tide tables are compiled, give the times of high and low water by the shore only. The times of change of current offshore is another subject.

It's like a long freight train making a horseshoe bend, the engine representing the tides and the caboose the currents. If the train is very long the engine will pass the caboose on its way back. The tides rise and fall (flood and ebb) with remarkable accuracy offshore as well as by the shore. But the current, being so swift and swept on by, such a volume of water (all the water in the bay) does not spend its strength, hence does not change from flood to ebb or from ebb to flood for 3 to 4 hours after the tide has reached its highest or fallen its lowest.

Many of us have had the experience of fishing in the bay out from a certain point, following very religiously our pet tide tables and being disappointed. The tide at Herring Bay, for instance, was high at 12:53 this mornnig. It was high again at that place at 12:20 this afternoon.

Fishermen who went to Herring Bay early this morning might have calculated that ebb tide would be well under way by 4 o'clock when they planned to reach their fishing grounds. And when they lowered their lines they found that the tide was still running flood, and more than likely it continued to do so until 4:30 or 5 o'clock. And then these fishermen probably said someone slipped up on his tide predictions.

But someone didn't slip up. It was high tide at Herring Bay by the shore this morning at 12:53. But the current out in the bay being so extensive, so voluminous and so heavy, could not arrest, alter, stop its momentum until about 3½ or 4 hours later, and that was 4:30 or 5 o'clock. (The mistake is made in publishing the time when the tides will change by the shore instead of publishing the times when the currents will change on the fishing grounds offshore.)

By 4:30 or 5 o'clock ebb tide had been running several hours—since 12:53—yet the current continued to run flood until it could bring itself to a standstill and start back down the bay with the falling tide. It's like an automobile forced far up an incline by its own momentum after the ignition has been turned off.

And once this current got started back down the bay after finally coming to a standstill, it was 4:30 or 5 o'clock. And at that moment the boat swung around, the fishermen cast out on the other side and —the tide had changed! Which means that the tide was all ready half out but the current had just now changed.

The reader, therefore, will find that The Washington Post's Fisherman's Tide Tables have been prepared with all this in mind, and that the tides (currents) will run as indicated 2 miles or more out in the bay opposite the places listed in the tables.

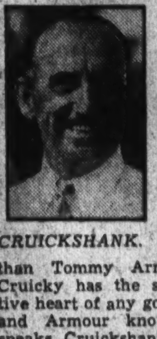
Bobby Cruickshank, Wee Scot From Richmond, Displays Skill in Exhibition at Kenwood Today; Pros Warm Up for P. G. A. Trials.

By Dave Herman.

IF you're interested in seeing the little man who almost won the National open at Merion in the flesh, spend a few hours this afternoon at Kenwood with Bobby Cruickshank, Richmond's dynamic professional. The wee Scot will team up with Bob Barnett, of Chevy Chase, against Al Houghton, the host pro, and Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional, the baby member of Washington's paid clan. Promptly at 3 o'clock the boys will start firing away, and Mr. Houghton will attempt to show his guests how easy it is to shoot 32s and 33s.



CRUICKSHANK.

Cruickshank will command a lot of attention from the gallery today. There is no cooler and more courageous shotmaker under fire than Wee Bobby, the little man from the land of heather, who lost to Bobby Jones in a blood-tingling playoff for the 1923 National Open, and finished in a three-way tie for third place in the Open a few weeks ago.

None other than Tommy Armour says that Cruicky has the stoutest competitive heart of any golfer in the game, and Armour knows whereof he speaks. Cruickshank lost this year's Open because too many fives decorated his card on the last nine. He was tied with Lacey and Cox at the end of 18, and was in front going into the final 36 holes. Everything broke wrong for Cruicky on that final 18, on the last five holes in particular. It was the old, old story of a good putter cracking at the crucial stages.

Plays Here Friday.

Cruickshank is here today for something else besides an exhibition match. He is here to learn more about this Kenwood course that has stumped the best, and probably will stump plenty of 'em Friday during the 36-hole sectional qualifying trials for the National P. G. A. championship. Cruicky qualified last year at Suburban. Houghton did, too. Houghton's 66-69—135 set a new record for the event. The P.G.A. proper is scheduled for Buffalo the latter part of next month. Barnett also wants a qualifying berth. Mackenzie is not a member of the P. G. A., and can not compete.

Also on the program this week is the District girls' junior championship at Congressional on Thursday and Friday. It will be a 36-hole tournament, and Virginia Pope, of Kenwood, will be called on to defend her title.

Few will participate in the tournament. We will have Helen Dettweiler, Virginia Pope, Virginia Williams and Betty Keeler as the chief contestants. Due to the small field, the junior has been a rather drab and colorless affair.

Beaver Dam is preparing for a royal turnout Wednesday, for its "field day." At least 125 women will converge on the course to compete for a raft of attractive prizes.

Miss Kincaid a Winner.

Ellen Kincaid, the young lady we ballyhooed not so long ago, has won her first important golf tournament. Ellen defeated Anne Hansen, 8 and 7, in the finals of the West Potomac championship. There is much glory in the 15-year-old girl's triumph, even though West Potomac is nothing more than a tee shot on eight holes, and a drive and a chip on the ninth. She won a championship Betty Keeler failed to win. And Betty Keeler, for your information, is the District women's public links champion. On her way to the finals, Ellen eliminated Hope Wilkinson, the defending champion. Betty lost in the semifinals. Of course, Betty is considered the better player of the two young girls, and the chances are that Miss Keeler would have spread-eagled the field had the tournament been played at Rock Creek.

From none other than Professional Roland Mackenzie comes the statement that Ellen Kincaid is a girl of promise in golf. Mackenzie's remarks were not prompted by the fact that he saw her swing her club a few times. He played nine holes with Ellen a few weeks ago at Congressional—the first time the little lady had traversed a real golf course. He saw her make every shot. He liked her swing, her courage, her determination. No, she didn't score very well, for Congressional is a long, long layout, and it was exceedingly long the day she played it. Well, Ellen mounted the first tee, and whacked the ball down the middle a good 150 yards. Her failure to get a single par for eight holes didn't feaze Ellen in the least. We remember how well she plunked her drive on the 178-yard ninth. Her shot finished a few feet from the right side of the green. Mr. Mackenzie was trapped. Ellen chipped nicely eight feet from the cup, and sank her putt—yes, for a par 3. Mr. Mackenzie took a 4, even as you and I.

A real golfing thrill came to Ellen.

The difference in the age of Miss Kincaid and Wimsatt is 44. Is golf a game for old folks or young folks?

Dr. Charles Cole, sr., superintendent of Sibley Hospital, celebrated part of his thirty-third wedding anniversary Thursday by playing nine holes at Kenwood. Dr. Cole—whose son, Charlie, jr., is the Kenwood club champion—came to the ninth hole needing his par 4 for a 39. He had a good drive and a good second. His chip was weak, and, try as he might, the good doctor could not sink his putt from 15 feet. His 40 included a birdie 4 on the 461-yard fifth that was the result of a spectacular blast out of a trap. But Dr. Cole's greatest shot of the day was his drive on the 350-yard seventh. It was straight as an arrow and traveled approximately 275 yards. It was what his traveling companions called "one of the longest drives ever seen on this hole."

A match between Dr. Cole and Sam Bond would be a good one. Whereas Dr. Cole played only nine holes Thursday, Sam Bond defied the sultry weather by shooting 36 holes. Bond was mighty proud of his birdie 3 on the ninth, a hole where there as a dearth of birds.

Cooper Directs Special Study

Conferences on Education Planned This Week by G. W. U. Expert.

Three conferences on education will be held under the direction of Prof. William John Cooper in the School of Education, George Washington University, from Tuesday through Friday.

Primarily designed for graduate students, but with admission available to a limited number of undergraduates approved by Prof. Cooper, the conferences will deal with school finance, the National survey of teacher education and vocational guidance.

These have been so scheduled that many interested persons who plan to attend the sessions of the National Education Association may come to the conferences before and after the association convenes.

The conference on school finance, for school superintendents and other interested persons, will be held from 9:40 until 11:30 a. m., and from 7:30 until 9:30 p. m. The conference on the survey of teacher education will be held from 2:10 to 4 p. m., and 7:30 until 9:30 p. m., and the vocational guidance conferences will be held at the same hours.

Welfare Institutions Plan Uniform System

A uniform system of financial and statistical reports for all welfare institutions will be discussed Tuesday at a meeting of heads of all District agencies. All of the welfare houses now have their own systems of reporting their conditions.

The purpose of the new system, according to Elwood Street, director of the Board of Public Welfare, is to be able to determine, at a glance, the work of each institution and the monthly cost.

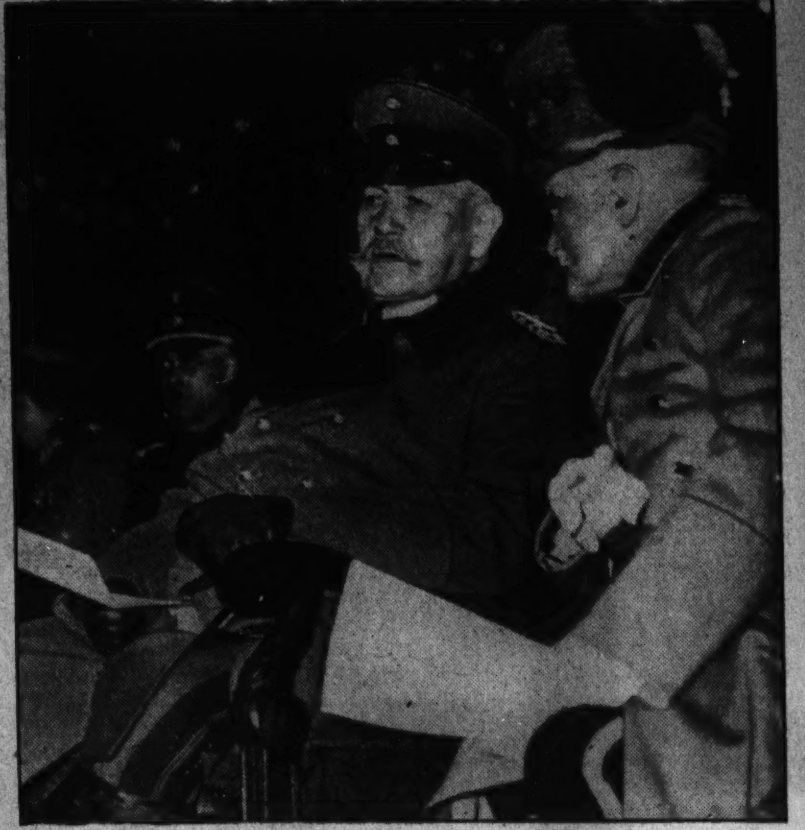
Nazi Charger Trembles as Stern Von Papen Applies the Bit



Could Nazi Chief Hitler's popularity crumble? Last week Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen (center) implied it might. In a public address he spoke scathingly of the Nazi regime of Hitler, who appears in a jovial mood.

Von Papen's was the first outspoken attack on the present German government. But it was quickly endorsed in a telegram from President von Hindenburg, regarded as one of those in favor of a monarchy.

Hindenberg Helps Rein in the Runaway

Popular Hysteria, Eagerness to Escape Results of the World War, Made it Till Now Impossible to Check Revolution.

By Kendall Foss.

Unbeknownst to most Germans a tremor went through the Third Reich last week which caused the swastika flag to quiver and its devotees to yelp.

Dashing Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen spoke his mind for the first time since he engineered Adolf Hitler's elevation to the chancellorship nearly 17 months ago. But only the early editions of a few papers got the speech in print before the censor awoke to his responsibilities.

Addressing students at old Marburg, the white hope of the aristocratic-liberal school inaugurated what may prove the beginning of the end of Germany's convulsive effort to escape from reality. The biggest story of the year and perhaps even of the post-war period begins to take shape. Barring red revolution in America or disappearance of the Bolsheviki in Russia, there is no event which would so profoundly affect history as the collapse of the Nazi revolution in Germany.

Of these three, only one is in the realm of likelihood.

Franz von Papen, slim, gray-haired, cultured, and aristocratic to the tips of his fingers, the embodiment of the best traditions of the old Prussian army, is a shrewd man and a first-class politician. When he warned his hearers at Marburg against the uncritical fanaticism of the radical wing of the Nazi party he was not uttering ideas novel to him and his group. Obviously he has been nursing these fears right along. The significant thing is not the content of his speech, but the fact Von Papen judged the time ripe for a public airing.

If Wrong He'll Soon Be Out.

He may have been wrong and if he was he will soon find himself outside looking in. But few men can be in a better position to judge the temper of the people and the real trend of ideas than Vice Chancellor von Papen, the intimate of President von Hindenburg and the confidant of the higher circles of the army.

Behind the Sturm und Drang of Hitlerism lies one central idea shared by an enormous majority of the German people. Release. Release from Versailles. Release from complex and painful but only partially understood economic laws. Release from the consequences of a venture rather gaily embarked upon in the summer of 1914 which ended so badly on November 11, 1918.

Some people prefer the word escape to release.

Von Papen is as devoted to this concept as Hjalmar Schacht, the elusive president of the Reichsbank, or Paul von Beneckendorf und Hindenburg, field marshal and President, or any other nationalistic minded German great or small. When it comes to that, former Chancellor Heinrich Bruening and the late Gustav Stresemann were also primarily actuated by this single aim: The restoration of the fatherland to a place in the sun in the shortest possible time. The methods have differed widely; the goal not at all.

When Von Papen persuaded his President to name Hitler chancellor on January 30, 1933, he was speaking as much in his role of a former cavalry officer as he was in his capacity as an ultra-astute politician. In his mind's eye he saw a wild and elemental force, too powerful to suppress, too imminent longer to avoid, too potentially valuable to his central theme to ignore. He saw himself astride a fiery steed, taming it to his will.

If he had any doubts of his ability to ride that snorting, pawing stallion, they were eclipsed by his dual realization of the damage the creature would do if left unchecked and of the load it could pull once it had been harnessed.

Von Papen has had a wild ride; now he is busy inserting the bit in a mouth totally unfamiliar with checks of any sort. It is anybody's guess what the immediate effect will be; it is likely that patience and skill will sooner or later quiet the runaway. If not, well, even more serious things are in store for a great number of people.

Mussolini discovered that the men who helped him make his revolution were not the ones who could help him maintain it. Stalin is equally well acquainted with this tenet of revolutionary philosophy. Von Papen appears to think it time Hitler advanced to this second stage of knowledge. Perhaps he is but cultivating seed Il Duce planted in dem Fuehrer's mind ten days ago in Venice

Hitler, it may be assumed, is ready for a change—if only he can figure out a way to make the transition from active to passive revolution without cutting his support from under him. To date his genius has shown itself most clearly in his skillful use of both ultra-radical and extreme conservative backing. So far he has avoided taking sides; probably he will have to soon.

His radical supporters have earned themselves the name of "National Bolshevists." Gottfried Feder, the father of the original Nazi economic program, is in this group and so is Alfred Rosenberg, the chief of the party's foreign office (in distinction to the Reich's official foreign office, still guided by the conservative Konstantin von Neurath). Richard Darre, Hans Kerri, Ernst Roehm and the redoubtable Paul Joseph Goebbels are likewise identified with the extremist camp. Their support is the S. A., the private army on whose shoulders Hitler rode to power.

On the other side, besides Von Papen and Von Neurath, stand Kurt Schmitt, minister of economics; Hjalmar Schacht of the Reichsbank, and probably Herman Goering, air chief and minister of the interior. Behind these men stands the Stahlhelm, the strongly monarchistic veterans' association.

Between the two groups rises Germany's grand old man, Von Hindenburg. Beside him, and a little below, stands Werner von Blomberg, general of the Reichswehr, and all or most of his 100,000 professional soldiers.

For nearly a year and a half the tide has set so strongly in Germany that none of the non-Nazi supporters have been able to do more than keep his head above water. Seeking to stem the pent-up emotional forces loosed around the Reichstag fire had proved suicidal too often. Many struck out downstream with powerful strokes, seeking a place among the leaders of the new day. Others coasted prudently along, biding their time, unwilling to give up hope of an ultimate return to rationality.

Hitler Critics Rumor Collapse of Regime

Economic Crisis of Titan Proportions Threatens a Germany Shorn of Her Exports and Cut Off From Raw Materials.

And quite a number sorrowfully accepted the flood, costly as they knew it to be, in the hope that it would shield Germany from what they considered a worse fate: Bolshevism.

As in time of war, the mass of people went mad. Individuals who found themselves out of sympathy had to decide upon their courses as best they could. Some were smart, some prudent, some quixotic. After a while they may gather the fruits of their several decisions.

The first to brave the storm are, evidently, the Junkers, led just now by Franz von Papen. The Social-Democrats have no organization left, the Communists are out of sight if not out of existence, the center parties have evaporated in the glare of a rampant National Socialism.

But the Junkers, who "never learn and never forget," are ready to try again. In Von Papen they have a man motivated not only by his fellow feeling for the old aristocracy, landed and urban, but one who is strongly exercised over the church fight. Von Papen is a devout Catholic, former publisher of the Catholic organ, the Germania, and once a power in Bruening's Catholic party, the Zentrum.

He is shrewd, agile, sincere. He is not particularly profound, but quick enough to catch the deeper implications his more philosophical colleagues discover and point out to him. If he is a little forgetful (witness the suitcase he left on the train at Pennsylvania Station, New York, which contained the papers to prove him too close to the German wartime espionage service for a scrupulously correct military attache) why, there are others now to remind him.

Believes in Divine Right of Kings.

He is, however, a convinced aristocrat, a believer in the superior ability of the well born, a subscriber to the divine right of kings theory in its modified version. In a world presently dedicated to various forms of the mass idea—the "forgotten man," the "dictatorship of the proletariat," the totalitarian state—he may lack a base broad enough to give real power. Certainly his cry is back to the familiar, not forward to the unknown.

An impending economic crisis of undisguisable proportions stares Germany in the face. Exports have gone glimmering, imports have had to be cut down to fit. This has produced a shortage of raw materials which at once threatens to wreck whatever of reemployment the Hitler regime has been able to accomplish. For German industry is fundamentally based upon the import of raw materials and the reexport of the same materials as finished goods.

A final and complete moratorium on foreign debt payments has been declared. Rumors questioning the continued stability of the reichsmark abound. Political isolation stares the Wilhelmstrasse down, bringing an ill-disguised regret over certain hasty steps such as resigning from the league and attempting to swallow Austria whole.

A well-disciplined press keeps most of these things from German readers. Foreigners have far more facts available if they do not have that imponderable factor, atmosphere, to aid them in forming judgments. Even so, certain things must be obvious to the attentive German reader.

He heard, for example, a great deal about the forthcoming plan to incorporate Austria within the bounds of the Reich. Some time has elapsed and he still has not read of the triumphal ceremony marking the end of the campaign. He heard, too, of the ten-year pact of nonaggression signed with Poland. If he is shrewd, he is wondering why. After all, recapture of the Polish Corridor used to be a very prominent feature of the Hitler prospectus. You don't suppose something has happened of which

Gen. Foulois' Case May Be Thrashed Out by Court-Martial.

By Harris B. Hull.

This is a story about the woes of Uncle Sam, the business man. It also concerns an unfortunate general, four years ago hailed as one of the greatest aerial tacticians in the world, now accused of "inefficiency," "violation of the law," and faced with a possible court-martial.

The account of the charges of "dishonesty" and "mismanagement" against Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the Army Air Corps, has been told and is fresh in the reader's mind. Undoubtedly, it is fresher than the story of his leadership in the great aerial force that swept over the country in the early summer of 1931 in the most impressive demonstration of mass flying America has ever seen, an unparalleled maneuver carried on without serious accident.

The Foulois case and the problems of the Air Corps have occupied thousands of lines of type during the past week. Only last Thursday night it was announced that ten planes will fly from Washington to Fairbanks, Alaska, and return.

Sympathetic observers believe that the successful completion of this hazardous mission will go a long way to disprove the charges that the operation of the Air Corps is "inefficient."

See Alaska Flight As Strategem.

Critics say that the Alaska flight is designed to divert public attention from the present Air Corps picture. Everything considered, no case of a public servant has created so much attention as the charges against the Army's first pilot, a man who flew with the Wrights and who is still actively at it. Let us inquire into the underlying principles of what promises to be the "Foulois incident."

The biggest customer in the world is the United States Government. Every branch of industry recognizes this and does everything possible to "sell" Uncle Sam, and to sell him large orders. The process isn't unlike the corner grocery store owner who puts his wares up on the counter in a prominent place when his prize customer comes into the store. It is done simply on a larger scale.

However, when Uncle Sam goes to market it is often the case that he can't find exactly what he wants. He has to order it. It must be built especially for him. In many cases no one else could possibly use the product but the United States Government.

In the purchase of large quantities of expensive materials there are two general methods, as every business man knows. One is to state the specifications of the goods that are wanted and ask for bids. In other words, you describe very accurately just what you need so that the product furnished by one company will be exactly the same as that turned out by a competitor. The bids are submitted by the respective companies for the business and as long as the product has been standardized it is simply a matter of picking the lowest bidder.

The second method is to make arrangements with one company to manufacture the goods desired. The dealings then are "negotiated."

Both of these methods of purchase have enthusiastic advocates. And these people are just as critical of the method they do not espouse as they are favorable to their own.

Competitive Bidding Called Fairest.

The advocates of competitive bidding state that theirs is the only fair way to obtain a product. It furnishes practically no chance for graft, they say, and is economical.

On the other hand, those who favor the negotiated system claim that theirs is the most satisfactory way to obtain efficient equipment. They state that it is not consistent to cut small expenses by competitive bidding for such specialized equipment as airplanes, for instance. And they add that in the negotiated system the contract can be awarded to the company which has researched, pioneered and developed the original idea to a point where it can be sold to the Government as a tangible product. To put out bids on the exclusive idea and product of any one company is inconsistent and unfair, they state.

There are two schools of business thought. In and out of the Government they have their supporters and their critics. And this is where the unfortunate general enters the picture.

Maj. Gen. Foulois is very definitely a member of the latter of these two schools. He believes that the negotiated contract is the way to buy airplanes for Uncle Sam's flying forces. He decries efforts to cut small costs by competitive bidding. And he defends the contention of the manufacturers that when they have built an experimental model of a fighting airplane, their company, and only their company, is entitled to produce it.

He believes so firmly in this method that he has gone ahead and bought flying equipment from the aviation industry on this basis. He has been told that his actions are in violation of law. But he states that "in the interest of the Government I have overlooked Army regulations and broken them hundreds of times, and I will break them again."

Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, chief of the Army Air Corps, is at present the center of a stormy battle that hinges on the manner in which the corps has awarded its contracts for materials. The man against whom charges of "mismanagement" have been made has long been a daring leader in the progress of American aviation.

That is the basis of the much publicized controversy between Gen. Foulois and the Rogers sub-committee of the House of Representatives Military Affairs Committee.

This article is not an attempt to defend Gen. Foulois, nor does it try to glorify his prosecutors.

But the thousands of words already printed in every newspaper are liable to convey the impression that the present chief of the Army Air Corps stands before the world as the sole defender of the "negotiated" contract.

In a recent speech in the House, Representative Ross Collins, of Mississippi, chairman of the War Department Appropriations subcommittee, stated:

Negotiation Idea Warmly Defended.

"Negotiation, however, in my judgment, can be so regulated as to minimize to the greatest extent humanly possible the opportunity for proceeding contrary to the public interests.

"There is no need to abandon the principle. I have studied this question for a number of years. I have met with it every year in the consideration of the War Department appropriation bill. My reaction is that if military and naval aviation is to advance and keep pace with development abroad, and to have incorporated in their design the latest knowledge, the only method is to buy the best plane of each particular type that has been brought forward at the time purchase is to be made. Such a plane essentially would be in the proprietary category and therefore would need to be acquired through negotiation."

But there is another phase of the Foulois case that, in a way, is deeper rooted than this discussion of contractual relationships between the Government and American industry.

It relates to the internal organization of the War Department, the part that each branch is to play in case of emergency. It involves the supervision and authority of the general officers over each individual service, in this case the Air Corps.

It is the contention of the general staff of the Army that the Air Corps is a supplementary force and must be under the close supervision of the line officers, if it is to accomplish its mission in warfare.

Air Corps experts, however, have contended that their service should be an individual unit. They state that it would function more or less by itself, especially if the cause arose to defend the boundaries of our Nation.

Critics See Alaska Trip as Effort to Divert Attention.

And these exponents of a divorced air organization have been successful to a certain degree. An Assistant Secretaryship of War for Aviation was created a number of years ago. This also was true in the Navy Department.

In the early days of the Roosevelt Administration this post of Assistant Secretary of War for Aviation was not filled, as was expected. And as a result the general staff of the Army came closer to the organization of the Air Corps.

Today the relationship between the Air Corps and the general staff of the Army is a very live issue. As a result of the recent criticism of the administration of the flying branch, the general staff feels a paternal and somewhat jealous interest to more closely supervise the activities of the fliers. Some unkind commentators have stated that the staff sees an opportunity to gain more control at this critical period. In return the Air Corps officers, realizing that they are under criticism, are fighting a stiff battle for the independence of their branch. In regard to this Gen. Foulois has said:

General Staff Paternal to Air Corps.

"The vital point that I am trying to develop is the necessity of having an independent Army Air Corps organization that can function efficiently outside of the present cumbersome general staff.

"For 20 years I have struggled consistently against the War Department general staff in my efforts to build up aviation within the Army.

"I announced to the chief of staff, in his office, several days ago, in the presence of the deputy chief of staff, that the steps they were taking at that time were the first real constructive steps, to my knowledge, in the past 20 years, that have been initiated by the War Department general staff itself.

"In saying this, I am criticizing the general staff system as now existing in the War Department. I am not impugning the integrity of any particular individual member of the War Department general staff.

"The general staff is made up of conscientious and intelligent men but made up chiefly of men who have been trained in the ground branches of the service 95 per cent of whom have practically no knowledge of aviation except what they have read out of books

"Army aviation is a practical and highly technical problem that must be developed and controlled by the practical airmen trained in practi-

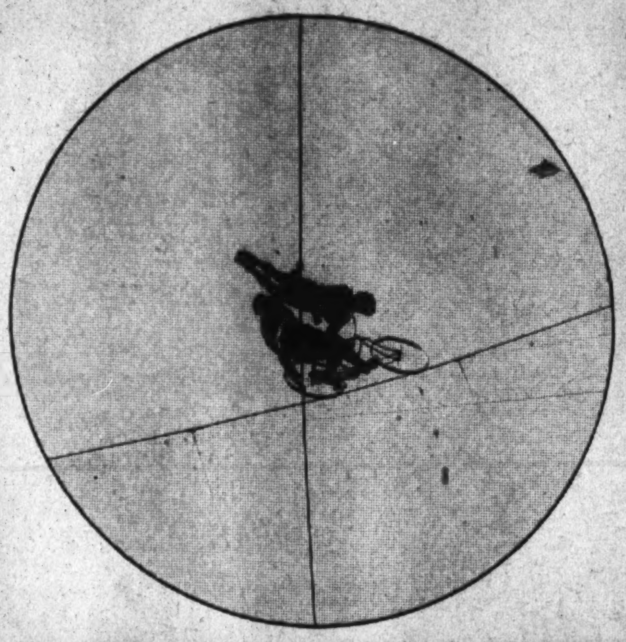
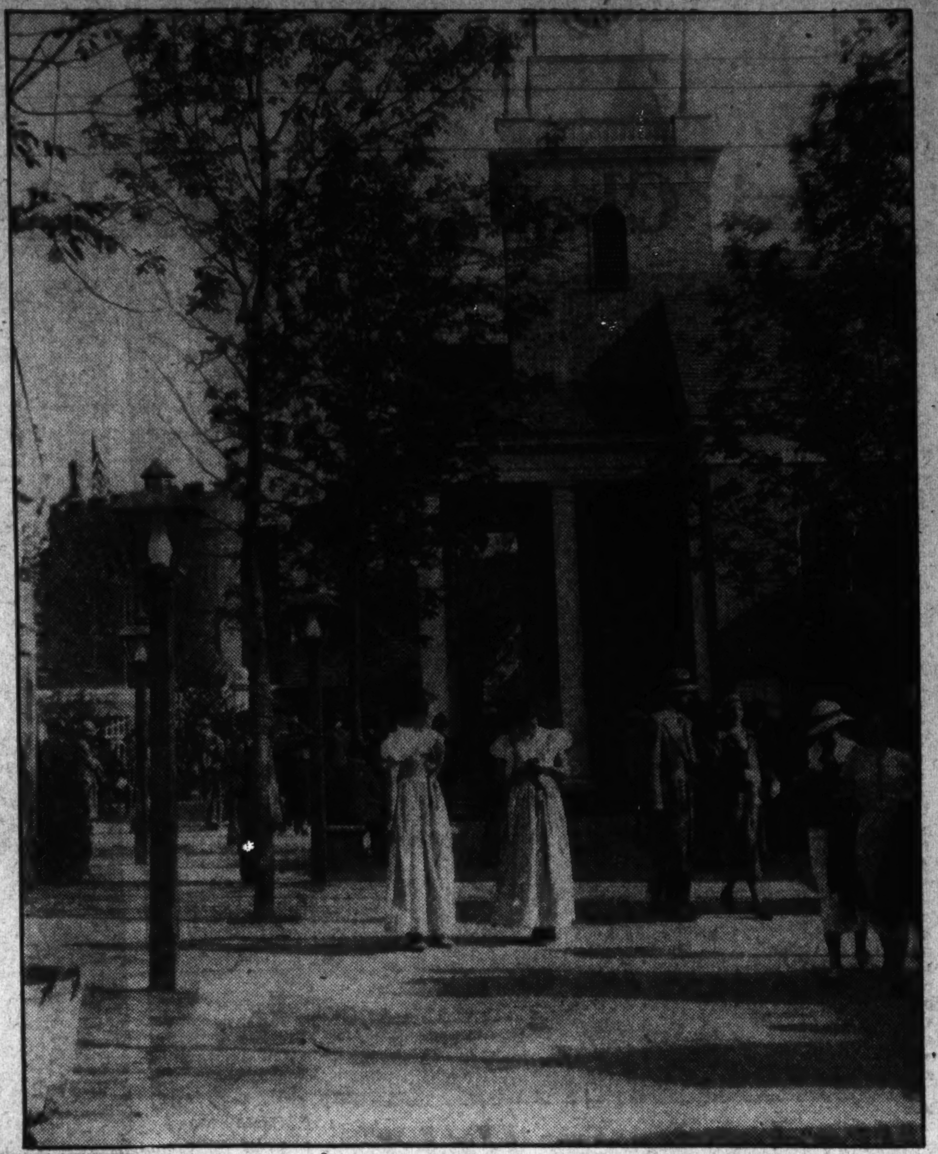
Business Boom Rides in Wake of Pilgrims to the World's Fair

Mr. Clapper, of The Post's National Bureau, while on a serious newspaper mission to the Middle West, stopped off in the city that has cornered A Century of Progress all for itself, and drew some interesting conclusions about Chicago and the fair. If what he saw was correct, this Nation should perhaps go in for a few more "centuries of progress" with as little delay as possible. And, in fact, imitations of the Chicago method of fighting the depression are in evidence everywhere.





The World's Fair is a first class depression combatter — and blues chaser. The huge crowd above in the lagoon ampitheater are but a handful out of the millions who have spent their money in Chicago in the past year. In the circle are high wire artists, showing the crowd a good time.

Machine Age Mecca Has Drawn Millions

But It's Only One Example of the Gold-Getting Projects That Localities Everywhere Are Using to Combat Hard Times.

By Raymond Clapper.

Chicago.—During the recent—and not entirely bygone—lean years, any number of States and cities have cast about for new ways of coaxing dollars into circulation. One object was to scratch up badly needed tax money. Another was to drum up trade for local business houses.

Arkansas has restored racing and put the million-dollar Oak View track at Hot Springs back into action after 15 years of virtuous but unprofitable idleness. The Legislature has eased up divorce statutes to draw the trade of prospective grass widows, which makes business for boarding house keepers and the lawyers. Racing has started up again in West Virginia, where the Shenandoah Jockey Club at Charles Town has revived the ancient sport. Texas held a grand opening of its new track at Fort Worth, with no less a patron than Postmaster General Farley as the first man through the turnstile. Agitation is on in Maryland to set up a lottery in connection with the popular turf industries at Pimlico, Laurel, Bowie and Havre de Grace. Louisiana's Legislature is considering reviving the old scandal-spattered Louisiana lottery in renovated and more pleasantly perfumed form.

The motive in all of this is to stir up new revenues and draw trade. When Senator Capper rose and blocked the bill to establish racing in the District of Columbia, Mrs. John Hay Whitney's plans for a $1,000,000 track went into the wastebasket and hot dog stocks dropped sharply. Boxing is being legalized in localities and no wonder. The gate at the Baer-Carnera fight was $428,370.17, not including the expenditure for railroad fares, hotel rooms, ginger ale, cracked ice and the other items of the expense accounts turned in by several thousand men who went to New York on business that week.

Lottery Has Big Bootleg Trade.

In trying to get his lottery bill through Congress last session, Representative Edward A. Kenney, of New Jersey, said the bootleg trade in lottery tickets and numbers runs to $1,000,000,000 a year, much of it going out of the country when it might as well be kept at home for taxes and stimulation of local enterprise.

In other words, people don't seem interested in buying locomotives, putting up office buildings and otherwise patronizing heavy industries. If they won't go into serious business the thing to do is to see if they will spend money to have some fun and the experiments which have been made show the vote to be in the affirmative.

Most notable of all these experiments is the Chicago World's Fair. Started by a group of Chicago citizens who began back in 1927 to plan it as the crowning show of the new era of prosperity, it was caught in the depression, but its sponsors went ahead anyway in the face of advice to drop it. Unexpectedly it has turned out to be a record-breaker in performance, a major source of business revival in this Chicago area. Incidentally, it is a medium also for providing an unparalleled combination of entertainment and education which has broken the monotony of existence for millions. And it has given them an undreamed-of glimpse into what modern civilization can be if it learns how to make full use of the marvels of scientific invention assembled in the brilliantly painted geometrical buildings along the front of Lake Michigan.

The Century of Progress International Exposition has gone into its second year, the first time anything like that has ever happened. In its first year it was an unexpected prop under recovery efforts in the Middle West. President Roosevelt, himself, said so. Its effects reach far back into the country. Take the railroads. They brought 4,000,000 persons into Chicago. That is a lot of people—equal to moving in the entire populations of Arizona, Delaware, District of Columbia, Idaho, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Utah, Vermont and Wyoming. Even Harry Hopkins hasn't suggested any transplanting jobs of that size. This tremendous travel meant using 25,000 extra coaches, employing 5,000 more railroad employes.

An even larger number, 5,000,000, came to the fair in their own automobiles and many others by bus and airplane. The number of new tires, the gallons of gasoline and oil, the chewing gum and sandwiches bought along the roadside hundreds of miles away by these twentieth century pilgrims as they journeyed to the machine-age Mecca can be easier imagined than ascertained. Nobody knows how many new suits of clothes, shoes for the children—who are the most enthusiastic fair visitors—new hats for the wife, and holiday cigars for dad have gone into the seeing of the fair by these millions.

As for Chicago business men and merchants, oh, boy! The gigantic Stevens Hotel, which had the look of an empty barn even during the Republican and Democratic National conventions in 1932, is running every elevator now. You can go into the lobby and be sure of encountering an old friend from a distant part of the country. The Palmer House bell boys, who got fat and sleek during the dull years, are worn down to a bone, lugging baggage. Chicago taxi drivers are so prosperous they're even getting polite. They always have change and what's more some of them will even thank you for a tip now.

Towns a Hundred Miles Away Benefit

Hot-Dog and Chewing-Gum Stock Soar Out of Sight in Communities Where They Were Never Known to Polite Society Before.

Mr. E. Ross Bartley, who served in Washington as secretary to Vice President Dawes, and now spends most of his time in the fair's administration building laying figures end to end for the fair's press agents, has it figured out that the average visitor last year spent $40 in Chicago during his three-day stay. The typical visitor dropped $4 of this on the fair grounds and the remainder around the city. Money goes further here than you might expect, for hotel and restaurant prices are about normal. You can even eat a good meal at ordinary prices on the fair grounds. Gyping, if any, is well concealed, and certainly the visitor who doesn't go out looking for trouble stands as good a chance of getting the right change back as he would in Washington's respectable F street shops.

Despite predictions that the Chicago fair's second year would be a failure, paid attendance thus far is ahead of last year. In the first 26 days of this season, up to Thursday night, attendance was 2,033,316, as compared with 1,939,884 for the same period last year. This year's records were jumped up by attendance of 407,000 school children on one single riotous day recently. Even so, the comparison is highly encouraging to the fair officials. This will be the first fair in this country to repay the sponsors, and considering that a good deal of overhead was paid off last year, the second season will have a far lighter load of expense to carry.

While it isn't exactly a free show, the visitor can for $21 visit every concession in the fair including a ride on every type of conveyance, an airplane flight and a cruise in the blimp at $3 each. But the visitor who wants to conserve his cash can pass up the Streets of Paris and the other pay concessions and after paying his 50 cents admission to the ground, spend the rest of his life looking at free exhibits which are, at least up until the cool of the evening, the most fascinating parts of this big show.

For instance, the first big building which is at the end of the Avenue of Flags, is the Science Building, the key exhibit of the fair, where they have managed to make science an entertainment instead of a classroom lesson. In the first place this building, as are all others at the fair, is a big geometrical structure, reflecting the spirit of an age of machinery with vast plane surfaces, walls of solid colors in brilliant reds, clear blues, orange, green, all modernist inside and out. At night they are lighted with rainbow colors of dazzling brightness.

Building in the Modern Spirit.

The architects decided that instead of building replicas of ancient Grecian and Roman buildings to house bright machinery manufacturing Fords and Chevrolets, they would attempt buildings designed to express the spirit of the modern era with the hope, no doubt, that some centuries hence promoters of other fairs would hark back and copy them as models of an American type, just as all previous fair promoters have gone to the classic age for their models. Some like it and some don't, but anyway it's different, and the modernistic chairs inside are deep cushioned, springy, and a lot more easing to "fair feet" than grandmother's horsehair-covered backbreakers.

In this Hall of Science the story of progress in geology, biology, mathematics, chemistry, physics and medicine are illustrated by moving apparatus, models and mechanical contrivances which the visitor may operate himself as an amateur Einstein. At the very entrance there is, however, a warning to the gullible—a row of perpetual motion machines which demonstrate the basic methods by which through the ages people have tried to get something for nothing, machines intended to turn out power without having any power put into them.

They would prove profitable study for a number of politicians, for they seem to work but don't. Each has a hidden motor inside without which the machine would not run except for a few minutes. Friction will stop the best of them. There's a thought for statesmen in those contrivances. One is a water pump which generates electricity to run the pump which is supposed in turn to run the generator.

With the perpetual motion misconceptions cleared away at the outset, science goes ahead with a free hand. You can see for your-

Plowing Under of Cotton Leaves Share Croppers to Starve

U. S. A. Indemnifies Owners of Plantations, Not Workers.

By Franklyn Waltman, jr.

For the economic, social, political and humanitarian aspects involved, perhaps the most interesting and important experiment in the Roosevelt "New Deal" program is the mighty effort now being made to reduce the production of cotton in order to raise its price.

Already a storm of controversy centers around the cotton crop reduction program of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. This program not only looms as an issue over which political battles this fall and in the years to come will be fought, but it has aroused the attention of men and women who have no interest in the rise and fall of political parties but care only for improving the condition of their countrymen.

Sociologists from all sections have been attracted to study the cotton program by charges that it has brought in its wake "sweat shop" and slum conditions on the cotton plantations, conventionally pictured as pleasant and comfortable.

Economic Issue Extremely Grave.

In the field of political science, interest centers on the truth of contentions that if the Nation adheres to the policy of "narrow nationalism" on which it is embarked and into which it is trying to mould the cotton planter, "the economic and social problems of the South will become so aggravated as almost to be placed beyond satisfactory solution."

Republicans in Congress labeled the Bankhead cotton control act—the spearhead of the crop reduction drive—"regimentation" and have predicted that the Roosevelt "brain trust" soon will endeavor to apply similar measures to other major crops. From the Democratic side of the Senate came the charge that the Bankhead bill was the opening wedge for an abandonment of our Constitutional Government and the establishment of a Fascist state.

To all of which Administration spokesmen reply that conditions in the cotton fields are no worse than they have ever been and that the benefits already outweigh any injustice; that the salvation of the South depends on a reduction in the cotton crop and continued control of production; that in view of world conditions a course of economic nationalism by the United States is inevitable; that "the shoddies form of regimentation existed when cotton was 5 cents a pound" and that the whole program means that less labor on the part of all will lead to increased economic security for all.

The challenge to this last contention is probably the most sensational of all aspects of this experiment. It is contended that the crop reduction program is being used to impoverish further the tenants and share-croppers of the cotton South for the benefit of landlords and large plantation operators.

The proportion of tenantry in the South is higher than for the country as a whole because cotton requires a large amount of hand labor in its production. The Administration spokesmen hold that cotton always has been a "slave crop" and will continue to be until a machine is devised for picking the white balls of fiber.

There are three types of tenants in the South—the cash tenant, or renter of land; share tenants, who turn over to the land owner one-fourth of the crop for the use of the land, while they supply the equipment, seed, work stock and their own food; and share-croppers, who usually contribute nothing but their own labor.

Peter Molyneaux in his pamphlet "What Economic Nationalism Means to the South," published by the Foreign Policy Association, defines a share-cropper in the following language:

"A cropper is an absolutely propertyless farmer. He is a farmer, who not only owns no land, but who owns no tools and no work stock. He cultivates the land of a landlord, who provides him with tools, work stock, and seed, usually with rations for himself and family, and with a shack for shelter. He seldom sees any money, is constantly in debt and he and his family, frequently including the wife and all the children able to do anything at all, work for little more than the rations provided by the landlord or the landlord's credit."

The latter is called the "doodle book"—the line of credit which the cropper has at the general store in the name of the landlord. Croppers customarily refer to those things supplied by the landlord as "furnishings."

Reduction of Crops Often Causes Eviction of Tenants.

Mr. Molyneaux estimated that in 1930 there were 729,200 cropper families in the cotton States, an increase of 35 per cent over the 1920 total. He divided this number between 338,800 white croppers and 390,400 Negro croppers. Together they represent about 3,650,000 men, women and children, Mr. Molyneaux explained.

Taking share-tenants and croppers together, the white families totaled 823,800, compared with 586-300 Negro families. Since there are approximately 2,000,000 cotton planters in the country, it will be seen from these figures that the majority are either share-tenants or croppers.

Thus when the AAA last year launched its program to pay $112,000,000 to cotton planters for plowing under one-fourth of their crops, or approximately 10,400,000 acres, the problem was complicated by the equities of share-tenants and share-croppers in the benefit payments. The benefits paid by the Government for cotton plowed up was intended to be divided according to the interests of landlord and tenant in the crop, but this was not specifically provided.

Croppers Suffering, Survey Reveals.

The League for Industrial Democracy assigned Prof. William Amberson, of Memphis, Tenn., to make a survey to determine the "social and economic consequences of the cotton acreage reduction program"—chiefly to the share-croppers.

Prof. Amberson and his associates made a detailed survey among 500 tenant and share-cropper families in Missouri, Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi, and obtained further data from transient farm families "now resident in the City of Memphis as a result of eviction or dispossession from the land which they formerly cultivated."

"The share-cropping population is

Plowing under a field of cotton—this is one of the answers to the shrinking world market for this foremost product of the South. It's a method that may save the owner of the cotton lands. But often it has driven the share cropper, or tenant farmer from his home, to starve. Yet such scenes as that pictured above are typical of the South today.

Flying Flivver Will Soon Be the American Family Machine—Vidal

Big Project Encourages Cheap Planes

Government Will Order Small, Safe Types.

These Will Be Adaptable to Needs of Amateur Fliers.

By Eugene L. Vidal.
Director of Aeronautics, United States Department of Commerce.

An entirely new type of airplane is being sought by the Department of Commerce for the use of its aeronautical inspectors. Invitations for bids specify that the airplane supplied shall feature simplicity and safety of operation, to a degree which probably can not be attained by any airplane now in production, as well as low maintenance and operating costs.

The craft which meets these specificatons will be inexpensive in operation. In fact, a leading reason for the department's decision to ask for bids on this type of airplane was the expectation that it would insure substantial economy in aircraft operations during the next fiscal year, and at the same time provide aircraft for all of the inspectors. The proposed planes will have substantially lower operating costs than have heretofore prevailed, and should actually result in an overall saving in allowances made to the inspectors for the operation of automobiles.

Comments on this invitation for bids have associated the proposal with the department's program for encouraging the introduction of a volume produced, low-priced airplane suitable for private ownership. The assumption that the two projects are related is entirely correct, but it would not be accurate to consider that the purchase by the Aeronautics Branch of these airplanes for inspectors will represent the introduction of the low-priced airplane. Rather, the purchase will constitute the first step in that direction, providing a design from which the advance to the low-priced airplane should be a simple and logical evolution.

Volume Production Is the Goal.

The low-priced airplane program, entered upon last winter, seeks to assist the aeronautics industry to undertake production of small airplanes on a volume basis which will result in a price low enough to be within reach of persons of moderate means. A circular memorandum sent to licensed pilots, mechanics and student pilots, asking if they would be interested in purchasing aircraft under these conditions brought a highly favorable response. Each person was asked also to state how many of his friends and acquaintances would be interested and the number of prospective purchasers reported in the replies to this question reached 60,000. Actually, the potential market is much larger than that. The questionnaire did not pretend to reach the many thousands of nonfliers who might find their opportunity to become airplane owners as a result of the program.

At the outset it was recognized that there would be difficulties in changing from custom manufacturing to quantity production. Under present conditions, the airplane is virtually hand made. Volume manufacture would entail the use of much machinery and new production methods. Such extensive changes would hardly be possible without some outside support for the industry.

Accordingly, we made application to the Public Works Administration for assistance and that agency, on December 28, 1933, announced an allotment of $500,000 to the Aeronautics Branch, Department of Commerce, for the development of an inexpensive, volume produced airplane model for private flying purposes. This amount has not yet been made available to the Aeronautics Branch for expenditure.

However, a definite beginning is represented by our invitation for bids on an airplane to be used by the department's aeronautical inspectors, despite the fact that this airplane probably could not immediately be put into production and offered at a low price for private ownership.

Some engineering development must precede the introduction of a real low-priced airplane. For wide popularity, the private owner airplane must be rugged, safe and simple. It should be as easy to operate as an automobile, eventually, and should be much closer to that objective at the outset than airplanes now commonly used.

Recent Progress Is Amazing.

In design of airline craft, progress has been amazing in the last two or three years. Their speed has been substantially increased, instruments, radio and accessories have been improved. But these developments are along another line from that desirable for the private owner airplane. Very high speed, delicate instruments calling for specialized skill and training, are essential for airline operation, particularly at night and under adverse weather conditions. They are desired, too, by private owners who are veteran pilots, but for the prospective owner of the projected low-priced airplane, who will be using his airplane only under favorable weather conditions, the utmost in simplicity is called for.

The requirements for the private owner are approximately those of the aeronautical inspectors. Inspectors need airplanes for their trips from airport to airport in the course of their duties examining aircraft and airmen for licenses, investigating violations of the regulations and accidents, and carrying out all of the functions of the inspection service that are performed in the field. In some respects, the airplane for an aeronautical inspector must give greater performance than the private-owner craft, but there is enough similarity that the achievements of designers and engineers with respect to the aeronautics branch airplanes can readily be carried over to a model which can be offered to the public at a price of less than $1,000.

The specifications sent to manufacturers set forth these requirements. Outstanding among features which the aeronautics branch is calling for in the design for official use are simplicity and safetly of operation. The requirements are that from the maximum nose up attitude which can be maintained with any and all settings of the horizontal stabilizer with full power, sudden loss of power and full upward movement of the elevator shall not cause the longitudinal axis of the plane to assume a nose-down attitude exceeding 10 degrees below the horizontal.

Also, with power on and power off and with any possible combination of settings of the horizontal stabilizer and elevator, full lateral control shall be provided and there shall be no tendency to side-slip or spin under these conditions. Further, the specifications set forth greater visibality requirements for pilot and passenger than the industry has heretofore been called upon to produce.

The planes are to have a landing speed of 35 and a top speed of not less than 110 miles per hour, and at cruising speeds the engines shall give 20 to 25 miles per gallon of fuel. They shall be capable of operating in and out of small areas and be sufficiently rugged as to be suitable for continuous flying duty.

Other specifications are a side by side or slightly staggered seating arrangement, with a closed or convertible cockpit; a cruising range of 300 miles against a 10-mile-per-hour head wind with pilot and passenger, and 40 pounds of baggage; all-metal fuselage; and dual controls with provision for readily making one set ineffective.

In taking off, the plane shall be capable of clearing an obstacle 35 feet high from a standing start 800 feet away. In landing, it shall be capable of being brought to a stop within 400 feet of a 35-foot obstacle which it has cleared, in a straight and fully controlled glide. On the ground, the craft shall be easily controllable and capable of being brought to a stop from a ground speed of 45 m. p. h. in 150 feet.

The engine may be cooled in any manner and may have any arrangement of cylinders, but shall have at least four cylinders. It may operate on the four-stroke or two-stroke cycle and it may or may not be geared. It shall not develop over 100 horsepower at rated speed. The engine will be required to pass all tests for a Department of Commerce approved type certificate.

The power plant shall require no servicing at less than 50-hour intervals, and shall be capable of operating on any good grade of aviation or automobile fuels and oils.

Some features to be incorporated in the department airplanes probably will not be required in the subsequent low-priced model. The engine in the inspectors' plane is to be 100 horsepower. Less power might be satisfactory for the private owner plane.

Also, the list of instruments called for includes fuel gauge, altimeter, oil pressure gauge, oil temperature gauge, compass, tachometer, bank and turn indicator, and air speed indicator. All of these may not be necessary as standard equipment in the production model. The Department does not anticipate that the airplane offered to the public will be a high performance airplane in terms of speed and maneuverability, but one that will excel in safety, simplicity and ruggedness.

Pleasure Ship For Amateurs.

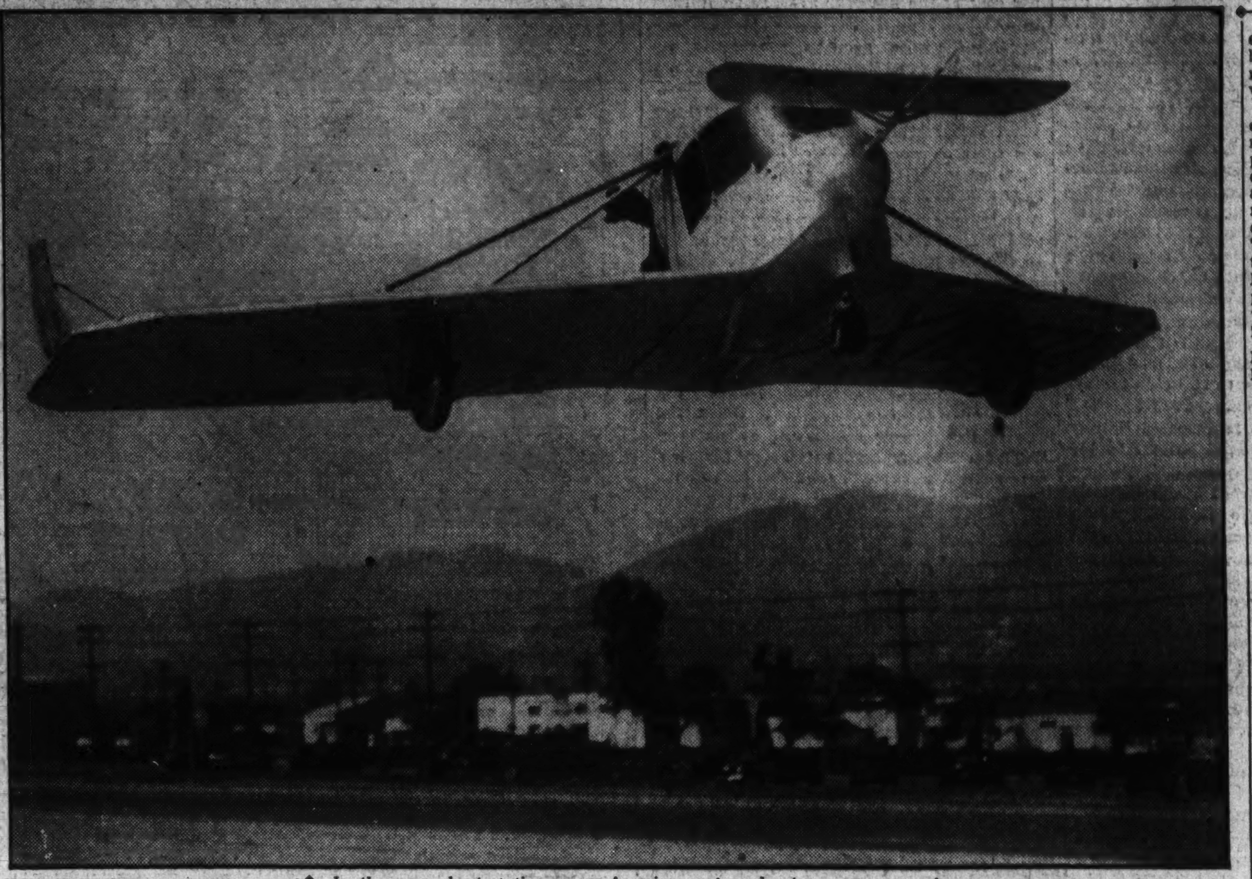
It will be an airplane which offers an opportunity for the general public to share in the pleasure of flying, and it will be definitely utilitarian as well, for many persons will find it possible to save much time by traveling in an airplane at 100 miles per hour, going by the most direct routes between cities and avoiding the traffic snarls that retard the progress of automobiles.

A beginner could learn to operate this type of aircraft in far less time than is now required for flight instruction because the landing and take-off requirements make for increased safety and ease of control.

Three things that are needed in an airplane for widespread use are low initial cost, low operating cost and utter simplicity of operation. All of these are taken into account in the specifications for the inspectors' airplanes.

Closely related to the low priced airplane project is the program of airport development and air marking initiated by the Aeronautics Branch and carried out by the Civil Works Administration. Last November arrangements were made for the use of unemployed labor and material for construction of landing fields. Since that time, some 1,040 projects have been undertaken, of which about 60 per cent represent new landing fields and 40 per cent improvement of existing airports.

Thus, the department is endeavoring both to provide an airplane for the private owner and to make available ground facilities for his use. Interest in private flying already is reviving. In a short time, this phase of aeronautics will take on a new importance and America will become a nation of pilots.



In the very shortest time now, Americans of moderate means may be flying about in their "flivver" planes. The new policy of the Aeronautics Division of the Department of Commerce encourages the manufacture on a mass production scale of tiny, safe, easy-to-manage planes. Above are three of the latest small plane models: Upper left, a Fairchild 24, with 90 h. p. Cirrus engine; upper right, a new plane of the Taylor Aircraft Co., and center, the "Whatsit," guaranteed not to nose-dive or tailspin, invented by Waldo D. Waterman, of Glendale, Calif.

Immense Dragnet Scrapes Sea for Dangers to Ships

By Ira L. Smith.

Unique and thorough methods used by the Federal Government to chart or remove hidden dangers to shipping in coastal waters of the United States virtually preclude a disaster such as overtook the 14,000-ton German liner Dresden last week from occurring near our shores.

The Coast and Geodetic Survey conducts operations designed to make navigators aware of the presence of submerged rocks and obstacles such as that which ripped into the Dresden's hull and placed the lives of 1,000 persons in jeopardy.

One phase of these operations, that of dragging great lengths of wire—some of them reaching a distance of more than 4 miles—through the water, verges on the spectacular, both in method and results.

From the rock-infested waters of the Maine Coast, all the way down the Atlantic Coast, around to the Pacific and up to the northernmost ship passages off Alaska, this wire-drag work has been advanced with utmost patience and care by crews of Coast and Geodetic Survey ships. Augmenting results of the constant chartings of known obstacles, by revealing the presence of previously unknown dangers, this work serves to provide major assurance to owners, crews and passengers of vessels operating in our coastal waters.

This unique "fishing" is tinged with all the romance that centers in activities dealing with wrecks of ships that long since disappeared from view. Frequently, the long wire, trailed along the ocean bed between two ships that move at uniform speed, catches on these submerged hulls which lie close enough to the surface to be dangerous but which defy detection by ordinary sounding methods.

Not only ships, but sunken airplanes which have plunged into coastal waters have been located by the survey crews.

In one instance, after two Harvard students left for a pleasure flight from the Boston municipal airport, their plane was seen to dive into the harbor waters off Bass Rocks. Protracted searches failed to locate the submerged plane and an appeal then was made to the Coast and Geodetic Survey to bring its wire drag apparatus into action.

The ocean floor around Bass Rocks presents difficulties in locating any particular object, as it is covered by projecting rocks extending several feet above the generally hard bottom. After a comparatively short search, the wire drag caught on the wrecked airplane and revealed its location.

This incident is cited by Coast and Geodetic Survey officials to show ability of the wire drag to find comparatively small objects which rest on the ocean bottom and in the path followed by vessels that might be wrecked if the obstacles were not found and removed.

"The problem of finding and locating these submerged dangers," states Capt. G. T. Rude, chief of the Survey's division of hydrography and topography, "has also been made more acute by the development of the submarine, the safe navigation of which, when submerged, depends upon a knowledge of the danger at far greater depths than ever was anticipated in earlier days.

"The Coast and Geodetic Survey began development of the wire drag in 1904 and has continned to use it to the present time in investigating suspected areas. The first apparatus was developed by the Survey from the drag used long ago by the Army Engineer Corps on the Great Lakes. That device, in turn, represented an improvement of the rope sweep introduced by the French.

"The first step in the development of the method by the Survey consisted of a pipe carried at a moderate depth under the surveying vessel. After that system had been employed along the New England coast and also in the vicinity of Key West and Puerto Rico for several years, the plan of using a wire supported at intervals by buoys was adopted from the Army Engineers.

"Briefly, the drag consists of a horizontal wire maintained at any desired depth below the surface by an arrangement of weights and adjustment upright cables which extend up to small buoys on the surface. The apparatus is towed by two launches, one at each end. The horizontal wire will catch as the drag passes through the water and thus will indicate the location of any obstruction which extends above a plane at the depth determined by the setting of the horizontal wire.

"The exact location of the obstruction having thus been found, the least depth on it can be determined by 'feeling' with a lead-line from a small boat."

Many improvements have been made as the use of wire drags has been extended. The most recent development is a drag 24,000 feet long The effectiveness of the improved drag, officials declare, is indicated by the fact that in the 4,000 square miles of water area dragged by the survey, some 3,500 uncharted obstructions have been discovered. Glass 'Sandwich' Imitates Exquisite Tones of Marble

By Harry Goldsmith.

Pick any slab of natural marble. Take a photograph of it. Print the film on a sheet of transparent celluloid. Then seal the sheet between two pieces of polished glass. And you have done what research workers have recently succeeded in doing—duplicateing Nature's choicest building material—"quarry" marble.

This broadly is the way research workers have torn asunder the bonds which held men slaves to the marble quarries for hundreds of years. Today marble can be "quarried" in the chemical laboratory.

Already this man-made marble is being introduced in the building arts, particularly for interior and exterior decorating. Some of those modern, good looking soda and liquor bars, those up-to-date eye-catching store and building fronts, are constructed from slabs of this product.

When nature produced marble, she never created a more choice, more beautiful building material, architects will tell you. But nature was somewhat scarce with her highest grades of marble. And then by the time man cut it out of the earth and put it into shape so that architects and builders could use it—it had become relatively expensive.

That's why research workers put their heads together to find out some way of duplicating nature's product. The research men did a strange thing. They resorted to the unusual combination of photography, pyroxylin plastics (known as celluloid or pyralin to us), and glass for a solution to the problem. Out of this conglomeration sprung the idea of photographing the gorgeous coloring and grained effects of natural marble on a transparent sheet of celluloid and then sealing the sheet between two pieces of glass. From this idea was developed the practical manufacture of artificial marble, claimed by experts to duplicate nature's product faithfully in beauty and to be superior to it in many ways.

The manufacturing process, which has been patented, is indeed an ingenious one. First a choice slab of marble which it is desired to duplicate is photographed on a film, the exact design and color being reproduced by means of color filters, much like those used in ordinary color photography. This is then transferred to a transparent sheet of celluloid, thus giving in detail and preserving the true depths and coloring of the slab of natural marble. By spraying the back of this sheet, opaque or translucent color may be obtained. There are Verdi green, Verdi antique, red Lavonto, black and gold and many other colors to pick from.

Very important is the next step. Here the sheet with its marble-like impression is sealed between two sheets of glass by heat and pressure. The result is a composite product looking exactly like marble.

It is very durable and inexpensive, being 35 to 50 per cent cheaper than natural marble. Another great advantage is that the grains of one slab of this man-made product can be easily matched with those of another. On wall or floor, two pieces can be laid side by side and matched perfectly. It's pretty difficult and expensive to do this with natural marble.

In the home of the future we may expect to see shower bath rooms, wall panelings, ceilings and floors of this material. Gorgeous decorative effects will be revealed by its use with indirect lighting. Formed into almost any shape and design, there is no telling what architectural gems the builder and the interior decorator may produce with the new man-made marble.

cal aviation, and who, through their own knowledge, training, and experience on staff work and general organization of the Army, as well as the other branches of the service, are better fitted, in my experience, to develop Army aviation than the nonflying members of the general staff.

"We can not efficiently operate under the existing system and methods. We can not operate at a speed of four miles an hour, the speed of the Infantry. We are now operating in the air at a speed of 200 miles an hour. Today, the psychology of the development of aviation requires that all other military organizations must increase their speed or operations, and the rest of the Army must be reorganized with this in view, if it ever expects to effectively use the modern military weapons of war."

It is evident that Foulois has not minced his words. He has "spoken his piece" without fear. In the air, or before a Congressional committee, determined to get his scalp, Foulois doesn't know the meaning of the word fear.

His record proves that Benny Foulois started to work for Uncle Sam July 7, 1898, as an enlisted man in Company G of the First United States Engineers. He rose through the ranks and on February 2, 1901, passed a milestone in his life. He gained a commission and held the same grade as the fortunate young men who attended West Point. It is somewhat significant to note that he was not one of these.

On the first cross-country trip made in a "flying" machine in 1909 he was the observer with Orville Wright. The next year he was ordered to San Antonio, Tex., in charge of the first airplane owned by the Army. He became the original Army Air Corps.

With less than one hour's instruction he set out to teach himself to fly. He learned the fundamentals of aviation by the trial and error method. And in addition to improving his own flying ability he improved the vehicle. He designed more than a score of improvements for the old machine which were later incorporated into improved airplanes. The rest of his record is comparatively prosaic. He simply rose, to the top.

Today at 55 he stands on the threshold of a remarkable career, seriously accused, yet smilingly confident, with no fear in his heart of the outcome.

While his case is held in abeyance pending the report of a board headed by former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker he writes his answer to the charges of the Congressional committee.

He knows that fundamentally if he is to be a victim it will be of two things, politics and aviation; politics because it is what it is, and aviation because it is a new fast industry constantly involved in controversy, a business which after all is said, whether you believe in their policies or not, has heaped criticism in return for service on the Browns, the Mitchells and others.

If ever there were a champion batter that stood with two strikes on him and as he smilingly awaited the third fast ball pointed to a spot in right field where he would hit the ball, that man is "Benny" Foulois.

Control Of Industry.

If a private banker were to tell every borrower how to manage his business, what to pay his employes and with whom to deal, his arrogation of power would be deeply resented. Yet whenever a Government enters the banking business, there is great danger that this kind of dictatorial control over industry will result.

Indeed, a complete divorce of public lending functions from political activities is practically impossible. For that reason the entry of the RFC into the business of providing direct loans for industry has aroused serious misgivings. The regulations just issued, announcing the conditions under which such loans will be made, tend to confirm these fears.

The RFC has attached numerous conditions to the grant of loans, designed to guarantee support of the recovery program. Each applicant must prove that he is complying with the provisions of a code, or if there is no code, he must show that he has signed the President's reemployment agreement. Furthermore, he must not use the proceeds of the loan to buy goods from any concern that has failed to comply with the codes or the general agreement.

Presumably this means that a company in the position of Ford will be subject to a limited boycott. However, that does not exhaust the list of conditions attached to these loans. They are made primarily to supply working capital, and the uses to which they may be put are carefully defined. Corporate dividends may not be paid while any portion of a loan is outstanding, and salaries must be reasonable.

Since a solvent borrower will not be disposed to sell his independence for the sake of obtaining an RFC loan, the immediate damage done by these restrictive requirements is not likely to be great. But the rulings reveal the dangers that threaten industry from the steady encroachment of the Government upon the field of private banking. If, as alleged, the main purpose of the loans to industry act is to fill a gap in the credit structure, and supply intermediate credits to concerns that are able to use funds profitably, existing financing agencies should be employed.

Provision has already been made for an extension of intermediate loans through the Federal Reserve system. It is doubtful whether there is any great need for this type of loan, but at least there is no harm in making advances on a conservative basis, without attaching entangling and irrelevant conditions. The RFC plan, however, provides a kind of public loan agency that defeats the ostensible purpose of the legislation. It makes considerations of safety subservient to the attainment of a far-reaching State control of industry.

Tusitala.

Nantucket, New Bedford, Boston, Bath, even tiny Cranberry Island used to send tall-masted ships to all the far corners of the seven seas. With their canvas billowing or torn to shreds in battles off old Cape Stiff, they filled Americans with pride, and around them glowed an aura of romance that even Jack London with his brutal Sea Wolf never could drive away. They were things of beauty, but not a joy forever, for now their time is long past.

Fast though they may have been, as Alan Villiers proves in his accounts of the grain races that still go on, they were neither fast nor certain enough to withstand the encroachment of progress. And so, one by one, they dropped below the horizon, never to be seen again. Now they are truly things of romance, their places taken by huge machines that move across the oceans with the precision of steam trains, and only occasionally, like the Dresden, meet with sudden disaster and death.

There are hardly any left. One, kept in service by a romantic business man who is seemingly too busy ever to throw off his cares and sail over the horizon on his beautiful white bird, is Tusitala. That is the South Sea word for "Story Teller" which the Samoans long ago gave to Robert Louis Stevenson. Tusitala is not as old as some, crumbling now on the East Boston or Hoboken mudflats, too broken, too weary, to be used even as barges for the coastwise carrying of coal. James A. Farrell, of U. S. Steel has kept her in service, running regularly from New York to Hawaii, carrying ammonium sulphate out and bales of sugar back. Twice every year she did that, and sometimes the weather served so well that she made money for the steel magnate who had bought her because, as he said, "I love sailing ships and she is one of the last of her kind."

Now Tusitala is again going to hear the creaking of blocks, the slatting of halyards, the swish of water as her sharp bow slices the ocean before her; she's going to taste salt again. As the plaything of a rich man she will be saved the ignominy of dying on a forgotten beach. Tusitala, protege of wealth, will look tall and white and proud as she hits the gentle winds of the Pacific. Wonder if she'll give a thought to her fallen sisters, crumbling in the mud of backwaters? They were proud too, once, when they were working their heads off to bring the money that built the huge steamships that swept sail into the limbo of all good things.

Power—And Responsibility.

Senator Dickinson, of Iowa, asserts that the second session of the Seventy-third Congress has provided for expenditures and authorizations against the Treasury totaling about $14,000,000,000. This figure is somewhat below the careful estimates of Representative Taber, of the House Appropriations Committee, who places the maximum obligations that may be incurred under the legislation voted during the last session at approximately $17,600,000,000. The grand total of outlays, loans and contingent liabilities authorized by the outgoing Congress during both sessions he estimates at $22,215,000,000.

By far the greater part of the sum appropriated during the second session represents emergency outlays, guarantees on home and farm mortgages, mortgage insurance and various contingent liabilities that may be incurred by Government lending agencies. Nobody knows to what extent the discretionary spending and borrowing powers lodged in the hands of the Executive will be utilized. If the President were to exercise to the full the powers conferred upon him, it is evident that the public debt would soon approach the $50,000,000,000 mark, including in this total liabilities assumed by Government corporations.

The interest charges represented by any such debt total (even after allowance for offsetting returns on repayable loans) would represent a heavy recurrent budgetary item that future generations of taxpayers would have to bear. The tax experts now engaged in devising new methods of raising revenue are facing a task that grows steadily more difficult. Even if the effort to "prime the pump" by pouring out cash and credit from the Federal Treasury should have the hoped-for result of stimulating business activity, the cost of the experiment will remain as a permanent drain upon industry. In fact, as the debt soars upward, confidence tends steadily to wane.

While the situation is undoubtedly serious, it may not prove to be as bad as the preliminary showing indicates, provided the Administration now pursues a cautious course. Executive discretionary powers can be used to check unwise outlays and losses can be avoided by following conservative lending and guarantee policies. It is especially necessary to institute safeguards against the light-hearted assumption of contingent liabilities that may later become an intolerable burden upon the country's taxpayers.

The mere fact that nobody knows, or can know, how much will be spent or borrowed as a result of the legislation voted by the Seventy-third Congress is conclusive evidence that Congress has surrendered to the Executive the most important power that a legislative body possesses—control over the public purse. It is useless to cry over spilt milk, but it is not too late to emphasize the tremendous responsibility now resting on the President to save the country from the extreme consequences of the spending orgy in which the last Congress indulged.

Advice To A Novice.

Bernard Baruch will not be the first American tycoon to prepare his own autobiography, although our great captains of industry and finance have more often preferred to hire assiduous Boswells than to succumb personally to the lure of creative writing.

Charles Francis Adams, jr., of Union Pacific fame, was one exception; P. T. Barnum, perhaps more typically American, was another. Both their books, even today, make excellent reading. Andrew Carnegie, of course, wrote his autobiography in 1910. Do any except Marxian research workers read it today?

James Stillman, however, turned over the task of telling his life story to the amiable and uncritical Anna Robeson Burr. Neither of the Morgans has seen fit to dictate a detailed examination of his career for the benefit of the historians. The Vanderbilts, too, have been singularly reticent. The elder Rockefeller might have written an amazingly revelatory self-portrait, but his "Random Reminiscences" are hardly that. The scintillating Jubilee Jim Fisk left behind no imperishable manuscript and Henry C. Frick, of Homestead fame, gave the task of his glorification to George B. Mc. Harvey.

Most of the industrial barons and the mighty of Wall street, especially in the early days, left the telling of their life romances to the conservative Ida M. Tarbell (after she had foresworn muckraking), or, without knowing it, to that penetrating evolutionary Socialist, Gustavus Myers. Even those who, like Mr. Baruch, had something worth while to say because of the wide sweep of their interests, seldom divulged with literary candor their innermost thoughts.

If he cares to Mr. Baruch can tell us a fascinating story. "There'll be no ghost writing," he said, revealing his intention to write his memoirs. "I'll do it myself. It may not be great literature, but at least it will be my own." If he unburdens himself and is candid, his efforts may much more nearly be the stuff of literature than would be the case if polished with rhetorical fervor by that curse of the historian, the official biographer or ghost.

For Baruch's life began in the South of reconstruction days. And the path he followed swept up and out until it crossed and left behind those of many who started far ahead. He has been through panics. He has overshadowed Presidents. But above all he has thought and lived from a philosophy. No matter how he writes, if he remembers that Horatio Alger is no longer good copy, the fundamental interest of his book will transcend its style. If he drops self-consciousness and sticks to that history of which he has been so dominant a part, and if he refuses to intrude a moral to adorn his tale, the "Autobiography of Bernard Baruch" will find not merely avid readers. It will also be a vital contribution to the history of a vital era.

The Cotton Experiment.

Inauguration of the Bankhead act for the control of cotton production comes in the middle of the growing season. Several weeks have been required to work out quotas for the States and counties. Considerable time will now be required to make allotments to approximately 2,000,000 farmers who cultivate this plant in commercial quantites. In other words, growers may not know how much cotton they will be permitted to sell (without paying an exorbitant tax) until the approach of harvest.

Nevertheless, enactment of the Bankhead bill appeared certain at the beginning of the planting season, and growers were warned to restrict their crops to 60 per cent of the five-year average from 1928 to 1932. Indeed an overwhelming majority of cotton growers specifically requested inauguration of the compulsory control plan. It will be interesting, therefore, to note the reaction of the farmers when this restraint upon their freedom to sell their own crop begins to take effect.

No official estimate of this year's cotton crop has been made as yet. Consequently it is impossible to forecast how much surplus cotton (the amount in excess of the 10,460,251 bales that will be tax exempt under the Bankhead act) will be produced. The average annual output is approximately 14,600,000 bales. But 93 per cent of all the growers had signed acreage reduction contracts with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration before the Bankhead measure became law. It was the aim of the plan to reduce the cotton crop this year 40 per cent below the five-year average. Adjustments required by the individual quotas now being worked out will, therefore, fall chiefly upon the noncooperating planters.

It would seem particularly difficult for the Secretary of Agriculture to avoid imposition of hardships upon share croppers. If allotments are made on the basis of farming units, the land owner will be in a position to dispose of his share of the crop tax free, while tenants and share croppers will be left holding the surplus. Obviously, they will not be able to store their cotton and hold it until next year. There will be a strong tendency to dump such cotton on the market regardless of the AAA's 50 per cent tax. This situation presents a formidable challenge to Secretary Wallace.

One of the most positive factors in this experiment is the willingness of most farmers to accept it. The fact that Secretary Wallace, to whom these vast dictatorial powers over the cotton growing industry have been given was personally opposed to the measure, while a great majority of farmers favored it, is doubtless a hopeful sign. But when some farmers actually find the Government forbidding (under penalty of exorbitant taxes) the sale of cotton they have worked hard to produce, what will their attitude be? In many respects this application of bureaucracy to cotton growing promises to be the most far-reaching test of social reactions since prohibition.

Sculptural Symbolism.

It is difficult to know to whom the lion's share of sympathy should go—to Reuben Nakian, the sculptor who has been trying to keep Gen. Johnson still long enough to limn his features, or to Gen. Johnson, who has hardly been able to turn a corner since early in May without the ubiquitous sculptor popping up with scalpel and clay. The harried artist says of the hurried general that trying to catch his likeness is like trying to catch a cannonball in flight. He thus reveals not only the characteristics of the worthy general, but also of the organization which he heads.

If he worked ten years, says Mr. Nakian, he would get ten different portraits. And while none would be alike, all would be like Gen. Johnson. This, too, seems a statement applicable elsewhere than to the Chief Eagle. Far more than a dozen artists have tried to portray the meaning of the New Deal and the portraits have all been different. An observing public, somewhat bewildered, has looked at the sketches with tolerance, perhaps remembering the apocryphal critic who said that while he didn't know much about art, he knew what he liked.

Every era has one man which people like to think best symbolizes its peculiar psychology. Mr. Nakian's many-angled bust of Gen. Johnson may yet prove perfect for our own time. Looked at from ten different viewpoints, the same thing looks like something else again. Perhaps we have stretched the point a bit in interpreting the sculptor's observation. But it does seem that in describing the kaleidoscopic characteristics of Gen. Johnson, the artist drew also a rather neat sketch of the New Deal.

The G. O. P. is in such desperate circumstances that we shouldn't be surprised if it tried to secure an appropriation from the Government's rehabilitation fund.

Mary Pickford says she won't run for Congress. We won't either, but we'd stand a fat chance getting our name in the public prints by saying so.

Speaking of quintuplets, we don't think so much of a five-in-one-year plan.

Theme Songs.

The Post Impressionist

The Minnesingers.

Postoffice, Sunday.

SOME scoffer said of the Holy Roman Empire that it was not holy, or Roman, or an Empire. But not even Voltaire ever said of its minnesingers that those makers of love-songs weren't poets—and love, we know, laughs at even Yale-locksmiths. So minnesingers we call the best of those writers of love-lyrics whose solos—would they were duets!—last week shattered the locks of the Post-Impressionist's post-pouches.

* * * *

And we begin with Washingtonian Earl Boteler's untitled couplets that carry Shropshire into the District of Columbia:

All summer long I've wished I knew
Why I kept on remembering you:

Why candlelight and a ragged star
And a winding path that ran too far—

Why a vendor's flowers damp and sweet,
And rain-drenched leaves in a sprig-filled street—

Can make me start in expectancy . . .
Do you have trouble forgetting—me?

* * * *

There's hope in that. A less sanguine lover is Edward Peale, when he sings "Was It for This?"

Was it for this we offered all we had—
To kiss and part and not feel even sad?
Was it for this we bared our very heart
Beneath the lash of too much joy, the smart
Of fear lest some day we might prove remiss
Unmeaningly? . . . Was it for this?

Loved we so much that we wore out the power
To feel love's touch beyond one quivering hour?
Loved we so much in offering everything
To love, that love has no more force to cling
To memory, even the desperate strength to clutch
A floating spar? . . . Loved we so much?

* * * *

In which mood, or much which mood, writes also Louis How. For he, too, addresses "The Distant Beloved".

The great white clouds above the garden-tower
Remain there hour after hour,
As you remain, refusing to depart,
Deep in my heart.

When they are gone, and cold stars take their place;
It is too dark to see your face—
If it were here. Dear memories instead
I take to bed.

The clouds are back there every afternoon;
The same, but different; as a tune,
According to which human voices sing,
Is a new thing.

Just as you, springlike one, are always fresh,
Whom I see never in the flesh;
Who will not go away; whom I—ah, no!—
Would not let go.

As inaccessible as cloud or star,
As lovely, you, beloved are;
And were, indeed, when sometimes you brought near
Great bliss and fear.

Now you might even die and I not know,
Unless chance rumors told me so,
Yet still remain to gaze at far away
By night and day:

For we are deep within as heaven is high,
And till when I myself shall die,
You will love on, like clouds and stars above,
Which I so love.

* * * *

Whereupon, Amos Ames, contributing this "Contralto's Song," reminds us that it used to be more the women than the men who loved vainly:

Sky with a moony cloud bright on the southern brim—
I cry aloud in my bed, what do I know of him?
Where is he now tonight who left me tonight with a kiss?
Sky, you are snowy bright, but you can not tell me this.
No one can tell, and I can never know, for his mouth
Forever breeds a kiss, and his heart forever breeds a lie.
And I can only lie and cry
And gaze at the moon sky
And wonder why
My heart is given to him whose every word is untrue . . .
O sky, I cry in vain, crying to him or you!

Well, Tennyson thought it better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all, and Andrew Evans thinks so, too—or was thinking so when he wrote "Quandary:"

I.

Her eyes were withered in her head;
  Her nervous fingers seemed to clutch
A knife. Poor dear, her soul looked dead:
  "Because," she moaned, "I loved too much!"

II.

Crumpled he sat, until the sun
  Had set. He tried to walk, and fell.
He whimpered, heard by everyone,
  And marked by none: "I loved too well."

III.

Their courteous phrases rang like curses;
  Chains attached their wrists well-gloved;
Heavy were their hearts and purses.
  "We," they murmured, "never loved!"

One From One Leaves Two.

Higgledy piggledy, my black hen,
She lays eggs for gentlemen.
Gentlemen come every day
To count what my black hen doth lay.

If perchance she lays too many
They fine my hen a pretty penny;
If perchance she fails to lay,
The gentlemen a bonus pay.

Mumbledy pumbledy, my red cow,
She's cooperating now,
At first she didn't understand
That milk production must be planned;
She didn't understand at first
She either had to plan or burst,
But now the Government reports
She's giving pints instead of quarts.

Fiddle-de-dee, my next-door neighbors,
They are giggling at their labors.
First they plant the tiny seed,
Then they water, then they weed,
Then they hoe and prune and lop,
Then they raise a record crop,
Then they laugh their sides asunder
And plow the whole kaboodle under.

Abracadabra, thus we learn
The more you create, the less you earn.
The less you earn, the more you're given;
The less you lead, the more you're driven;
The more destroyed, the more they feed;
The more you pay, the more they need;
The more you earn, the less you keep,
And now I lay me down to sleep.

The Ghost in Court.

Years ago some skeptic said that the only sure way of proving the existence of ghosts was to produce one in court and submit it to cross-examination. Neither believers in nor lovers of ghost stories would accept so hard a test; but the hard-boiled may get what satisfaction they can from "the fact" that the witness box has never been visibly occupied by a specter. Turning over the pages of the Cornhill Magazine for June, you find a ghost obedient to legal process.

John Tregeagle, we are told, in Cornwall mythology, "is a greater figure even than King Arthur," much in Cornwall though not Cornish-born. John was a sixteenth century wicked steward, a character of old ballads. After his death, his master, the Lord of Lanhydrock, had to go to law about John's forgeries. Months were dawdled away. Finally "the defendant said he had one more witness to produce, and at his summons the ghost of John Tregeagle appeared. It could not have been an everyday occurrence for a ghost to appear in a court of law even in those days, but the magistrate managed to face the situation calmly and, assuming his most magisterial air, solemnly ordered the immediate removal of the ghost. The defendant was indignant and said it had been an exceedingly difficult task to call up his witness from the dead. He flatly refused to reverse the process and managed to slip away unseen."

So the defendant behaved like a ghost. John Tregeagle, who had behaved like a man, appeared for the benefit of the cowardly defendant, been thrown out of the court room ignominiously at the order of a magistrate either incredibly stupid or drunker than even the indulgent standards of the century permitted, was left without a return ticket, a tramp ghost. The devil, angry at his escape, wouldn't take him back. Fire-breathing hellhounds pursued him. He has never got home.

The Week Abroad

By Andre Vuillet.

SMOKE that revealed a fire rose from the German horizon last week when one man, tall, aristocratic and daring, made no bones about what he thought of certain Nazi policies.

He criticized the muzzling of the press which, like "a safety valve," ought to inform the government of defects, abuses, graft and mistakes and should give "an open and honorable discussion that is not to be found at present in the German press." Warning the Nazis that a "fight on religion will release forces which even force cannot break," he decried the fallacy of a "pseudo-religious materialism."

The speaker also defended intellectuals on the ground that "the mind cannot be dismissed with the cry 'intellectuals'," and took up arms in favor of "mercy, freedom and equality before the courts."

Such a plea for freer criticism had not been heard in Germany since Hitler came into power. Half that much would have sent anyone to a concentration camp. But the man who spoke his mind so frankly could get away with it, for he was no less than Franz von Papen, Vice Chancellor of Germany and personal friend of President Paul von Hindenburg.

* * * *

THE Vice Chancellor belongs in that class of Prussian junkers which gave Germany the Hohenzollerns, Bismarck, Hindenburg, the general staff and, by and large, all those who helped make Germany what she was before the war. They were all tenacious and far-sighted organizers.

When Hitler's rise to premiership became inevitable, Col. von Papen was chosen to be the link between President von Hindenburg, the 86-year-old field marshal, and Dictator Hitler, the rising corporal. On him, the conservatives, who knew the value of timing in the game of politics, pinned their hopes of having the whole Nazi movement channeled along slower but safer methods.

Up to recently, it appeared that their hopes had fallen through. With Hitler's inexperienced lieutenants, Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, propaganda minister; Col. Roehm, head of the storm troops, and Theodore Habicht, Nazi commissar for Austria, the Nazi revolution was launched on a heroic and intransigent path.

But while these young leaders were selling their ideas on the open market with an apparently ever-increasing success, the old-timers Baron Constantin von Neurath, Foreign Affairs Minister, Gen. von Blomberg, head of the Reichswehr, and Col. von Papen, all with the moral backing of the old president, were working in the dark.

If they still possess that sense of timing that characterized their predecessors, their coming out all of a sudden with Von Papen's speech may be of considerable significance for the future of Germany. It may prove that they regard the situation as ripe for action.

The publication of Von Papen's address was forbidden by his cabinet colleague, Goebbels. Hitler, hero number one of 65,000,000 souls, was noncommittal. It is too early to say that he is at a crossroad. But it may not be long before he will have to choose between two philosophies, that of his more radical friends or that of venerable Hindenburg, hero number two of the German people.

In the first case, Hitler might be led into such intrepid adventures as would wreck the Nazi movement. In the second case, it is still to be seen whether, in the long run, the Prussian element will not prove the stronger and swallow up Hitler.

* * * *

SINCE there was no microphone around when Mussolini and Hitler recently met in the seclusion of an Italian villa, nothing has transpired of what they said except an "official communique."

It is remarkable that Hitler pledged himself to waive his claims upon Austria, that the two dictators agreed to oppose regional pacts of security and that Il Duce's commitments were of a very indefinite nature, merely promising to help Germany's return to the league by upholding her views on disarmament.

Speaking to spell-bound throngs, he said his ultimate goal was "the greatness of Italy * * * We will defend it by persuasion if possible, otherwise with the song of our machine guns. Nobody can stop the march of the Italian people."

A safe guess is that Mussolini will probably use the meeting for "the greatness of Italy." But if nobody can stop the march of the Italian people, where do they plan to go?

FRANCE'S reply to the Hitler-Mussolini meeting was a visit by her Foreign Minister, Louis Barthou, to the Rumanian capital, where he was welcomed by the Rumanian cabinet and the foreign ministers of the two other little entente countries, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia.

The whole thing seems to have been a love-and-flower show, where they all wished one another to live long and in peace. The only way of securing such bliss was found to be through the deadly opposition to territorial revision and the return of the Hapsburg, the conclusion of regional pacts of security and the restoration of friendly relations with Soviet Russia.

In Budapest, the same day, the Hungarian Premier Goemboes, emphasizing he did not want war, declared: "Hungary will not negotiate with the Little Entente unless the latter recognizes, at least in principle, the necessity for revision of the peace treaties.

"The fountain of human unreason is inexhaustible," said Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, president of the Reichsbank, who proceeded to prove his contention by saying if Great Britain would retaliate as a measure against Germany's recent moratorium on her foreign debts, his country would have "no further intercourse with Britain."

'Payment in Kind' a Thorny Problem in War Debt Tangle

Hull's Proposal to London Recalls Past Failure of "Swap" Plan.

Collection of Debtors' Goods Means Cut in Our Exports.

By Leo Pasvolsky.

THE reference to "payments in kind," contained in Secretary Hull's reply to the British note on the war debts has a familiar ring to any one who has followed the tragic controversy over the vast intergovernmental obligations bequeathed by the World War. The idea that arrangements of this sort provide a way out of the difficulties which obstruct the transfer of wealth involved in large payments between treasuries has recurred over and over again in connection with the reparation liability of Germany. And the sad history of the repeated attempts to translate that idea into practical application is worth recalling now for the bearing which it has on the possibility of solving the problem of the war debts owed to the United States by means of payments in kind.

It has become a commonplace that debt payment between Treasuries involve a double program. First, the government of the debtor country must collect from its people, by way of taxation or in any other manner, the amount represented by the debt installment. Second, since the sums collected are in the domestic currency of the debtor country, they must be converted into the currency of the creditor country through international trade and service operations.

The second part of the process, the so-called transfer, is a joint responsibility of both the debtor and the creditor. It requires that the debtor country be able to furnish for export a volume of goods and services, exceeding its imports in value by the amount of the particular debt installment. But it also requires that the creditor country be willing to receive, directly or indirectly, a volume of imports exceeding its exports by the same amount.

Payments in kind arise when the debtor and the creditor countries are unwilling to leave the transfer of debt installments to the chances of trade movements. Accordingly, they enter into arrangements under which the creditor government agrees to receive, either directly for itself or indirectly for its citizens, from the debtor government certain goods and services, the value of which is credited toward the discharging of the debt. Arrangements of this sort obviously provide no relief for the budget of the debtor government, since it still has to pay its citizens for the goods and services required for delivery to the creditor. It does, however, tend to create foreign markets for the exports of the debtor country which might not be available otherwise.

IN the early period of reparation payments, the German government turned over to its creditors ships, machinery, properties owned abroad by German citizens, and other kinds of already existing wealth. Payments in kind of this sort proved to be highly unsatisfactory to both the debtor and the creditors. They gave rise to bitter controversies over valuation. The German government claimed that the value of its cessions aggregated $16,000,000,000. The Reparation Commission, acting for the creditors, valued the deliveries at only $2,500,000,000. Apart from certain patent discrepancies, the differences resulted mainly from the fact that the German estimate was arrived at by computing losses to the German economic system, while the creditors were counting only what the deliveries were worth to them. Moreover, large cessions of existing wealth had a crippling effect on the German economic system and rendered more difficult future annual payments.

The Dawes plan abolished cessions of existing wealth and provided for deliveries in kind only out of current production. During the five and a half years of its operation, more than 50 per cent of the payments made by Germany were transferred by means of such deliveries. The procedure involved was extremely simple. For example, a French importer—a government-owned railway or a private company—would arrange with a German exporter for the purchase of, let us say, a shipment of coal. After being approved by the reparation authorities, the deal would be carried out as under any other conditions, except that the French importer would pay the amount involved in francs to the French treasury, while the German exporter would be paid in marks by the German treasury through the agent general for reparations payments.

Closely akin to this procedure was another, which operated in the form of so-called reparation recovery levies, imposed by Great Britain, and, to some extent, by France.

Under this system, no special arrangements were made with respect to trade, but the creditor government imposed a 26 per cent tax on all imports from Germany, while the German government reimbursed the German exporters in marks.

Both of these systems of payment in kind aroused keen dissatisfaction in the creditor countries. Reparation recovery levies clearly curtailed Germany's purchasing power for the exports of the countries imposing them and led to bitter protests on the part of the exporting industries of such countries. Deliveries in kind, to the extent that they did not represent purely additional imports into the creditor countries, had exactly the same effect. Finally, reparation payments in kind led to friction and conflicts among the creditor countries themselves. Receipts of reparation coal by France and Italy made it impossible for British coal exporters to sell in these markets. Receipts of machinery and equipment from Germany by the smaller creditors closed their markets for such products to the manufacturers of Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium.

All these frictions and dissatisfactions came to a head at the time of the reexamination of the reparation problem by the Young committee in 1929. A determined effort was made by the British representatives to abolish the whole system of payments in kind. Mainly because of Germany's opposition to this, a compromise was finally reached, in accordance with which the portion of annual payments which could be transferred by means of deliveries in kind was to be gradually reduced, and such deliveries were to disappear altogether at the end of ten years. Even this compromise was finally accepted by Great Britain only after the Italian government promised to curtail its receipts of reparation coal and to purchase specified amounts of British coal.

• • • •

TWO great lessons have been taught by more than a decade of attempts to collect reparations from Germany. Frst, that international debt payments, which are too large to be transferred by means of normally functioning trade and service operations, become an economically disruptive factor, harmful alike to the debtor and the creditor. And second, that special trade agreements for payments in kind create peculiar maladjustments of their own and fail entirely to offer a solution of the basic difficulties involved.

The reparation creditors of Germany have learned these lessons. They made formal acknowledgment of the fact when they signed the Lausanne agreement in the summer of 1932.

These lessons still remain to be learned by the people of the United States. What has happened in connection with the installments which fell due on June 15 shows clearly that payments in cash are not to be expected, except, perhaps, in very small amounts. Secretary Hull's note records recognition of this on the part of the United States Government. As for payments in kind, it is safe to predict, in the light of the reparations experience, that attempts to make arrangements of this sort will not take us far—if what we are looking for is a way of collecting the debts and, at the same time, of restoring and maintaining our foreign trade.

It should be remembered in this connection that Great Britain, France and Italy are not only our three principal debtors, but are also among our largest foreign markets. Together they absorb more than one-quarter of our total exports. Moreover, we sell to them much more than we buy from them.

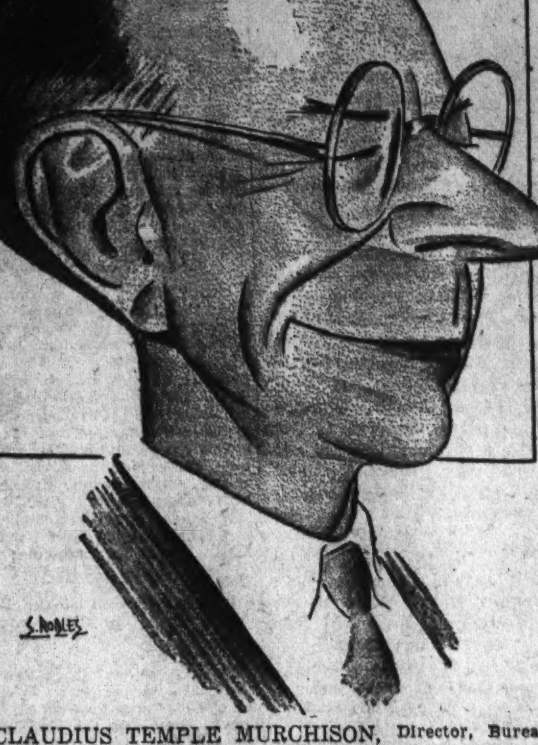
• • • •

IN the course of the depression, their purchases from us have decreased greatly in value. But our purchases from them have decreased even more. In 1929 our exports to the three countries combined amounted to 1,268 million dollars, and our imports from them to 618 millions. By 1932, our exports to them fell to 449 millions dollars, and our imports from them to 162 millions. In other words, their purchases from us decreased by 63 per cent, and our purchases from them diminished by 74 per cent. So greatly, in fact, have we curtailed our purchases from our debtors that our total imports from Great Britain in 1932 were, in value, less than one-half of the debt installments due that year, while our imports from France were about four-fifths of the debt payment due.

As it is, in order to regain our lost markets in these countries, we must increase our imports from them proportionately faster than our exports to them. The absorption of the proceeds of any portion of their sales to us into debt payments will mean a direct curtailment of our exports to them.

A triangular trade arrangement will not change this situation materially, but will add a new set of frictions. If our creditors were to purchase outside their frontiers the commodities turned over to us in the form of payments in kind, they would have to intensify their competition with our exporters in the countries in which the purchases are made. This could not fail to have adverse effects on our exports to such countries.

The National Gallery



CLAUDIUS TEMPLE MURCHISON, Director, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce. Succeeded Dr. Willard L. Thorp, whose failure to receive Senate confirmation drew charges of "patronage mongering." Despite this, Murchison is calmly prepared to meet all comers in a position calculated to tax his best efforts in paving the way for amicable foreign trade relations. Long a lecturer on economics, research director and fact finder, he has pursued quiet professorial duties at Columbia, Miami University and University of North Carolina. Believes Nationalism greatest foe to foreign-trade markets and predicts that our economic self-sufficiency is doomed. Be-goggled, lean, sandy-haired, he likes pulling in big ones.

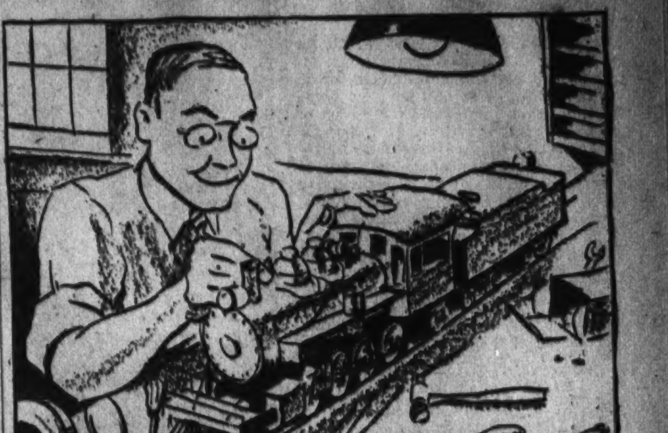
Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

Model Train Hobby Takes Hold in U. S., Answering Lifelong Urge in Most of Us to Be "Railroaders"

They're Serious About It, These Grownup Youngsters.

Some Make Them Big Enough to Haul Passengers.

By Paul H. Egolf.



A NEW hobby has taken hold in the United States and threatens to make as many widows as did golf, and transform supposedly serious-minded adults into small boys again for most of their leisure hours.

Psychologists will tell you that about six out of ten men at some time or other wanted to be railroad men and, while their dreams in most cases never were fulfilled, the urge lingers.

So grown-up men have taken to playing "choo-choo," differing from Junior's train-playing only in the elaborateness of their toys. And they don't call them toy trains. They're scale models, even though some of them are small enough to fit in the small boy's corner of the basement recreation room. Others are large enough and sufficiently well equipped to give better service than many a train that's getting by now as the real thing.

The fad has been in vogue in Europe since the turn of the century and still is going strong.

Scale models are built by proportioning their external parts to real railroads by a fixed factor of reduction. The internationally recognized scales range from one-eighth of an inch to the foot, up to 3 inches to the foot, the latter producing small monsters capable of hauling a few tons of adult passengers over the estates of their wealthy owners.

• • • •

THE most popular size in this country and England, where the hobby originated, is known as O-gauge, scaled one-quarter inch to the foot. This results in a model that is one-forty-eighth full size, and every 110 feet of track is a mile of scale. An express locomotive in this class measures approximately 3¾ inches in height, and 21 inches overall length. It will run in the average room provided curves are based on a circle of some 8 feet in diameter. To accomodate these curves, model lines usually hug the walls on shelves, instead of being built on tables, thus providing a maximum length of run not found in toy train installations.

Track for quarter-inch scale in other scales, is quite realistic. Nothing but a form or real rock ballast will suffice for the critical model enthusiast, and tiny ties, faithfully proportioned and spaced at proper distance, form the foundation for the road. On them is laid the model rail, which virtually reproduces the steel trails of commerce.

Not all model railroads are complete systems. Where the propulsive power is steam, the owner usually has so much to do to operate his iron colt that he confines himself to a simple track on which his pet can perambulate, snorting fiercely. Steam pressures of 125 pounds to the square inch are not unknown to these small demons.

Where one's attention is not concentrated on a single locomotive, but on operating a complete railroad, electricity furnishes the motive power, because it is clean, and enables one man to make many trains do many things. The same low voltage used for toy electric trains are used for model work, but the efficiency of model engines with electric drive is a revelation.

A little quarter-inch scale freight locomotive has hauled a 172-pound man on a flat car on its track of one and one-quarter inch gauge.

Another small model astounded officials of the Baldwin Locomotive Works by repeatedly ascending a 33 per cent grade under its own power and adhesion, a feat impossible for a real engine.

• • • •

ELECTRICALLY driven model locomotives are known among model men as either "true-electric" type or "steam-outline." The first reproduces actual electric engines, and dervies its power in some cases from a model overhead wire, or if patterned after some of the older electrified roads, from an outside third rail.

But the "steam-outline" engine of modern design has no third rail or overhead wire, for the running rails supply the current, on what is known as the "Two Rail System." This innovation, based on toy train practice of decades ago, effects a simplification of labor and a great saving in cost for model lines and lessens complication at switches, yards and terminals.

Toy gadgets such as little doors that open and roofs that lift off to reveal car seats and furnished interiors are absent in real model trains. "Might as well play with doll houses," snorted one model man, referring to the former.

But engines that haul loads equal to or in excess of those on the real railroads command the model enthusiast's respect, and he likes such things as couplers that engage when you bang cars together, or uncouple at a distance at the touch of a button; he likes Pullman vestibule connections that fold to and fro as his miniature limited winds around reverse curves.

"Safety first" obtains on the model railroad as well, for no one likes to see two trains worth several hundred dollars each plough into each other. The careful model man instals positive-acting switch motors that lock securely in position. He buys automatic signals which prevent a train from telescoping one halted ahead by the simple process of killing all current to the second train if the signal registers "danger." Only when the train ahead moves into the next block does the signal rise to "clear," and the following train resumes it journey.

• • • •

THE writer succumbed to the spell of the railroad at an early age, and after passing through a childish era of puzzling why his toy trains did not look like the real ones, set about trying to make cars that did. Such cars, when built, proved too heavy for the toy engines of that day to haul.

Going away to register for college, he came across a British magazine with a brief note on English model lines that showed them to be an established commercial enterprise. A letter overseas brought information that Britishers had been running model railroads for years past, and that English boys played with simplified, but correct models of their railways' equipment.

Two English model locomotives were imported at once, but the lightness of English cars, as in real practice, was apparent, for the mechanisms in the engines, similar to American toy ones, proved inadequate for handling model American trains even of moderate weight.

So the "line-drive" was evolved, which placed the motor shaft longitudinally, housed in the superstructure of the engine and connected to the drivers by suitable gearing. The first test of an engine built this way, with a larger motor accommodated for the first time in O-gauge, resulted in such a delivery of strength that the light connecting rods were torn off under a heavy load.

Experiments followed in determining the proper strength of parts, and finally a patent was taken out covering the line-drive principle. Model men at that time were a secret group in this country, for no adult male cared to be "caught" playing with trains. When news of the line-drive was annouced in a pioneer model magazine, patent or no patent, every model enthusiast seized on the principle involved, and scale model railroading in America became a possibility for all.

Letters to the Editor From Readers of The Post

"Middle Westerner" Doesn't Care About Tugwell's Looks; Wonders, Where Food Is Coming From.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has given one a curious feeling this past week to read about the "mock trial" of Dr. Tugwell. The reports of the proceedings have sounded distinctly superficial.

I am spending a brief time in a farming and gardening section of Illinois, where gardeners and farmers are planting second and third rounds of things in the hope of having something edible ere summer ends. Some early plantings were frosted, others were scorched; now, prayers are being raised that out of the earth may come sustenance for next winter.

To these people the debonair appearance of a staff member of the Department of Agriculture means less than nothing. The psychology of staging such a superficial performance at this time would appear to be most doubtful. Citizens are wondering what stable qualities the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture has; but believe me, they care not a fig how he looks. Life and the problem of living it through are much too serious for the frothy aspects to be given much consideration. There is a feeling that somewhere there must be something firm to tie to. But where is it?

MIDDLE WESTERNER.
Washington.

P. S.—I have a profound respect for the constructive and preventive parts of the Department of Agriculture. But after seeing the plight of people whose only hope lies in what the earth yields them, one does not wonder about last year's destruction of food, and the brain that directed it.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Tugwell did his best to differentiate between a "planned economy," such as we had in Russia and have in Italy, and a "planning economy." The philosophy underlying the two are wide apart. Yet many editorials and comment by by the brilliant (?) Wirt pretended to see no difference. It is going to take a lot of progressive education to offset the prejudices of the past and the opposition of the vested interests of today.

Tugwell said that you can blueprint a plan for a building or other static structure, but you can not blue-print a plan for a dynamic civilization. For all the time, until recently, a dweller in almost any civilization could die, and if returned to life an adult 100 years thereafter, the institutions of his society would have varied so little that he could not have realized much change. But the knowledge, science and invention of the last 50 years have, for example, made human labor in many industries unnecessary, and have abolished the need for many of our social institutions that we cling to.

Mr. Roosevelt likened his method of meeting the problems of a dynamic social order to the strategy of a quarter back of a football team, who, although starting with a mapped out general plan of attack, must change as the defense and style of play of his opponent indicates. We must also modify or rid ourselves of institutions whenever they no longer serve man adequately. Institutions were made for man, not man for institutions, as many of the Old Dealers would have us believe. We need more brains like Tugwell's and more service for social, not selfish, welfare.

E. B. HENDERSON.
Falls Church, Va.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter on the editorial page of The Post June 13, signed L. L. K., is the best letter ever in The Post. I agree with every word in it and every close observer will agree that Supreme Energy, the power that some call God, is at work.

And what an interesting study of the different skulls that held the brains of those that voted to put Tugwell in the Agricultural Department and those that voted against it. Any human that has made a close study of anatomy knew what to expect when, looking down on the Senate floor from the gallery. He also knew what was coming when he first gazed on Tugwell at the investigation last week. That powerful jaw in connection with that dangerous top head!

Power of the Press.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Is the newspaper that arm of the Lord that is going to work a work in our day that will fill history books a thousand years hence?

This thought was prompted by a communication I received from an aged citizen of Brooklyn (the City of Churches) who wrote me in regard to one of my newspaper letters: "There is a ray of light in the darkness by the fact that such earnest warnings can be presented to the public by the freedom of the press, which, either in Russia, Germany or Italy would not be permitted."

This old father or old mother in Israel is right. The hope of America lies in the freedom of the press—not the ecclesiastical press. * * *, nor the periodical press, filled with stuffed and stodgy writings—but the trenchant newspaper press—the fourth estate—which has now become more powerful than the church, the state and the aristocracy, as Edmund Burke predicted more than 100 years ago.

Tens of thousands of people are awaiting the coming of a new religious leader. When he comes, and come he will, the newspapers will post his words of life, which will spread like wildfire.

CHARLES HOOPER.

"Labor Racketeers."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wrote Gen. Johnson and President Roosevelt to reorganize labor in our country. Now why did I say that? Because everybody knows, including the union labor man himself, that some of our labor leaders are racketeers and most dishonest in their demands and unjust to their own men. Now then, reorganize labor by setting up a Federal Labor Board with Government arbitrators, have open shops all over the country for the present time, establish a Government board in each State, work out a just, a proper pay and wage scale for all, even the common laborer.

That open shop idea will give work to men who perhaps have not had a job for a year or two. I would want the labor board in each State to give wages that are more balanced. By that I mean; that under present conditions one gets too much and the other not enough. The ones who don't get enough ever have to live on charity or else steal.

EMIG CARLEIN.

D. C. Suffrage.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In these days of small politicians who are limelighting themselves into publicity over suffrage for the District of Columbia, it was refreshing to read in your paper of June 21 the comment of Senator King, chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

Senator King in his statement said he saw no reason for a change in the form of government of the District of Columbia, except to enlarge and give greater and new powers to the administration of the three Commissioners.

To one who has lived here in the days of suffrage and remembers too well the disgrace of such in those days, the stench still remains.

God forbid the evil that these limelighters are flouting will ever again besmirch the good name of the District of Columbia, for in my opinion, no honest citizen aware of conditions in those days, wants to see a revival of such government again.

JOHN HADLEY DOYLE.

For the President.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have had an application, dated August 8, 1933, with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Illinois agency, over ten months and I have been unable to get the loan or an official decision to date.

I have written letters to President Roosevelt, with no results. Also wrote two letters to Senator James Hamilton Lewis and one to Senator Carter Glass without getting any action.

Your paper can help very much by seeing that this letter comes to the personal notice or knowledge of President Roosevelt. The question is, will you? I have no work, nor have I any money, so what you will do will have to be done free gratis.

Post Reader for 57 Years.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a lifelong resident of Washington, permit me to express my praise of the wonderful improvement of both the daily and Sunday issues of The Post since the new owner came in control. It affords me extreme pleasure to join with the many other residents of the District and eleswhere in expressing my congratulations upon the wonderful growth and popularity of the paper under its present management. I have followed The Post since its inception, as a carrier boy when 10 or 11 years of age, and as a reader and subscriber, since the days of the late Stilson Hutchins, Beriah Wilkins and other old-timers who were the original owners when The Post started its career. The spurt, along with the fair dealing and progress met with, is very noticeable and is deserving of unstinted and unbounded support and success.

Story With a Moral.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Franklin's story of a war being lost because of the death of the warrior, caused by the fall of his horse, because of the loss of the latter's shoe, caused by the loss of a nail that would have held it in place, has a moral which applies to our present dilemma of complexities that beset the Nation.

If it could be shown that the profession of law, while presumably accepting Blackstone as authority, totally ignores the beliefs that vitalized that great man's reasoning faculties, or clergymen who respect the superior intelligence and saintly character of St. Augustine, yet, in their submission to the physicians or their theories show their rejection of Augustine's teachings, who shall say that the proverbial nail has not fallen out of the pillar that supports the structure of the Nation?

Then come journalists and physicians, less bound to observe the ethics of law and religion than the lawyer and the clergyman, unhindered by the other two classes they play upon the unsuspecting public mind as practically a non-intelligent instrument or organ, that responds to whatever note is struck upon it. I mean, the average man and woman says amen to those four professions, and if the light that is in them be darkness, "lo, how great is that darkness!"

The Post and Thomas M. Cahill Are Commended for Coverage of Bankers' Convention.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My tenure of office as president of the Life Underwriters expired Thursday, and I should be very unhappy had I failed to thank those who have so generously contributed to my own efforts.

The splendid and timely publicity The Post gave our organization during the last year has been very stimulating to the underwriting fraternity, made a good impression upon the general public, and will be remembered by me in future years as one of the most pleasant features of my administration.

THOMAS P. MORGAN, Jr.
Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A letter from George O. Vass, retiring president of the D. C. Bankers Association, commending the work of the convention publicity committee and expressing his gratification at the results achieved makes me realize that the credit is due to the splendid coverage of all news regarding the event before, during and after the annual occasion given by your paper and in the capable hands of Thomas M. Cahill.

I want to express my personal appreciation of the way The Post featured the stories—it was fine work—and of Mr. Cahill's valued cooperation as a member of my committee.

ELIOT H. THOMSON,
Chairman, Publicity Committee.
Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As the retiring president of Washington Chapter, I attended the convention of the District of Columbia Bankers Association at White Sulphur Spring and, naturally, I was interested in the reports of the events of the convention that appeared in the local newspapers.

I should like to take this opportunity to let you know that, in my opinion, the publicity regarding the affairs of the convention was released accurately and intelligently by your paper. You were generous in the amount of space devoted to the convention activities and, in addition, your presentation indicated careful thought and preparation.

R. H. LACEY.
Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As I retire from the office of president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, which I have held during the past year, I wish to express my appreciation to The Washington Post and to Thomas M. Cahill personally for the splendid cooperation given our association during the past year in the handling of banking news in a way that would best serve the public's interest.

The banks have had a most trying year in maintaining good public relations, and The Post has been most helpful in furthering our efforts along this line.

I also wish to express my appreciation of the generous space the convention received in your columns.

GEORGE O. VASS,
Washington.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation for the manner in which you handled the convention news at White Sulphur Springs.

The only suggestion I have to make is perhaps your paper might be willing during the coming year to consider enlarging the space allotted the local bankers, and also to have available information written under the name of the financial editor.

Pinching Pennies.

If in its spending spree Congress paid no attention to the bunghole it kept its eye on the spigot. As a consequence of its refusal to appropriate $13,700 to the District of Columbia's Board of Intermediate Sentence and Parole, this body is estopped from releasing on parole prisoners who are entitled under the law to this clemency.

The board has but one supervisory officer, a ridiculously inadequate provision for operation of the parole system in Washington. This one man must supervise now 260 cases. In the circumstances, parole must be denied in many instances in the coming year in which it should be granted, simply because the board has no officers to supervise them.

It would be better to abolish the system entirely than to compel it to limp along under conditions that make successful operation impossible. (From the Baltimore Sun.)

Radio Waves and Ripples

A talented family this—Frank Chapman and Gladys Swarthout (Mrs. Chapman) at home looking over some scores for another of their Garden Concerts tonight on N. B. C. at 7:30.

THERE'S really very little that a radio announcer doesn't know something about.

Take Jim McGrath, of N.B.C., for instance. Go ahead, take him.

Jim's not the best announcer in the world. And he's far from being the worst. He knows a thing or two about wrestling, for example. In fact he likes to wrestle himself—when there's no one else about to wrestle with and he is particularly in need of brushing up on holds. And Jim isn't so dumb either when it comes to musicians and musical instruments, which he collects—the instruments, you dope!

But there comes a time in the life of every man—this goes for radio announcers, too—when all previous training and experience are worth just so much stuff, when all the things you learned in school and unlearned afterward are about as useful as a shirt to Mr. Gandhi. One of those times comes to Jim June 26.

That's the day of the lip-reading contest in the Mayflower Hotel which the N.B.C. minds have elected Jim to broadcast. Jim knows nothing about lip-reading. He's not that unlucky.

The contest is part of the fifteenth annual convention of the American Federation for the Hard of Hearing for the selection of the Nation's champion lip-reader. It will be worked this way—pronouncers will silently read sentences which the contestants will attempt to repeat aloud. Judge Fay Bentley, of the District Juvenile Court; Dr. Fred N. Sperry, of Yale University, and Mrs. Edith Farrand, of the Minneapolis League for the Hard of Hearing, will pick the champion.

And now for the anti-climax. In a distant corner of the Mayflower ballroom will be Jim with a microphone and a duplicate of the pronouncers' sentence list. So Jim doesnt have to learn lip-reading in ten easy lessons, after all. It would have been a good story, though, if he had.

That ornamental hall tree with phosphorescent hooks, which was to have kept us from painfully and inadvertently chinning ourself in the evening, and which was to have been our present from Aunt Sadie last Christmas, probably will turn up during a WMAL program Thursday night.

So will a lot of other things of a variety and number to warm the heart of a South African ivory trader and retire him for life at Southampton—ladies' hose, handkerchiefs, jigsaw puzzles, umbrellas, shotgun shells, stove ovens, washtubs, bath mats, beads, skid chains, spoons, new and old razor blades, stamps, infants' wear.

These and more are to be sold at auction—sold, not traded—by the Postoffice Department's Dead Letter Office, and WMAL is broadcasting the proceedings from 10 to 10:30 p. m.

LIKE all true radio performers, those members of The Washington Post staff who have regaled our women folk with bits about the theater, fashions, stage, news of the nations, &c., on WJSV five mornings of the week, are taking a vacation, beginning tomorrow, and in their places you will find The Post's John Heiney.

Not in all their places will you find Mr. Heiney. For he, too, likes to take things a bit slowly during the dog days.

On Tuesday and Friday mornings only Mr. Heiney means to bring into the studios of WJSV the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, and the lady who runs the travel bureau at the Union Station, the people whose jobs are slightly less glamorous, but none the less interesting, than being a Cabinet member or his wife. Mr. Averageman and his missus, if you don't mind.

The time for the broadcasts has been advanced from 11:45 to 11:15.

For three hours one afternoon Alice, Fred and Wayne, of the Washington Winsteads, sang for Benny Davis in his dressing room at the Fox.

Shortly thereafter they signed a contract for three years, a scrap of paper that gives them jobs with the Davis revue starting next fall.

Alice, 16; Fred, 21, and Wayne, 19, are the "Three Aces" whose harmony you may have heard one Wednesday night on WRC. Davis heard them for the first time on that Post birthday program last fortnight.

And there were other boys and girls whose performances that night are expected to move them on to bigger things . . . Marie Fowler, Bert Bagranoff, Helen Ault, the Dixie Harmonies—just to mention a few.

How to Keep Well

Why Worry?

Certain persons worry subconsciously, some worry consciously (and are proud of it), others worry obviously, and still others vociferously. The quiet worrier who nurses real or imaginary trouble may lay and frequently does lay a foundation for disease of severe character. Few persons are able to adopt a philosophy of life that eliminates worry. Too often there is a tendency on retiring at night to think over every act and every word of the day, not realizing that the day is past, that it is water over the dam, and that the night is made for rest in preparation for another day. The mind is unusually alert following restful sleep, but what mind can meet the problems of a new day if the body has spent a restless, tossing, worrying night? There is an old saying: "Put off thy cares with thy clothes; so shalt thy rest strengthen thy labor, and thy labors sweeten thy rest."

Anxiety is a killer of human efficiency. It puts the nervous system on edge and prevents clear thinking. There are, of course, many situations where anxiety can not be avoided, but a ceaseless round of worry rarely helps the individual to find a way out of a perplexing situation. Physical rest may mean little unless it is accompanied by mental rest. To really rest one must rest in body, mind and soul and unhappiness and ill health frequently result because one or more of these phases is lacking.

Body rest should mean mind rest. A serious problem for which there seems to be no solution may after an hour's nap become simple and clear. The vicious cycle of worry sometimes leads to a lowering of body and nervous resistance to a point that approaches mental instability. An exicting evening where the individual may sparkle with wit and vivacity may leave that person poorly prepared for restful sleep. It takes time for a highly emotional nervous system to quiet down. We must not cheat the old adage "eight hours for work, eight hours for play and recration, and eight hours for sleep." Booth Tarkington, in his "The Hopeful Pessimist," has the patient who has suffered a physical and nervous breakdown say to his family doctor, "I have been in a hurry for 25 years," to which the doctor replies in a kindly vein, "Twenty-five years is too long for a man to be in a hurry."

That great Philadelphia physician, novelist and poet, S. Weir Mitchell, would take the worrying type of business man and the nervous, jittery, scolding woman, and, in many instances, succeed in restoring tired, fazzled nerves to normal stability. He did this by means of rest, proper food, congenial surroundings, and ofttimes with nothing but a change of scene or of occupation. Many a woman with three of four children on her hands and all the duties of the household is so fatigued at the end of the day that she is ready to scream. This tired, worrying sort may sometimes be transformed into an optimistic, happy individual through a readjustment of household routine following a week or more of complete rest from home and family.

Perhaps worry is not the essential cause of high blood pressure. It is at least a significant factor. Poise is observed only in those with adequate body and nervous resistance. If worry accomplishes nothing, why worry?

Thyroid.

Mrs. C. M. J. writes: My husband has toxic thyroid. He has had it more than a year. His symptoms are typical. He is in the care of a fine physician and is about holding his own. Should she be operated on? Can he be cured? Are there physicians who specialize in goiter?

Reply.

Some cases are cured without operation. However, the rule is that operation is the best treatment.

Your husband is in the hands of a competent physician. His opinion as to whether an operation should be done and, if so, when and by whom, is better than that of an outsider.

Auto Engine, No Bigger Than Before, Has Lots More Power

Builders Use Higher Compression, More Efficient Fuel Induction, Better Metals to Achieve Great Improvement Since 1930.

By William Ullman.

Automotive engineers are literal minded. They speak in phrases that are intensely practical. Because they do, it is possible for the interested public to learn precisely how much better automobile engines are in 1934 than they were in 1930.

A 250 cubic inch (piston displacement) engine is taken as the basis of the comparison made by Delmar G. Roos, president of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

According to his figures, that engine in 1930 was capable of developing 76-horsepower. It would withstand a 50-hour, wide-open throttle test at a speed of from 3,500 to 3,800 revolutions per minute.

Now for the same engine today, one with exactly the same dimensions. Instead of 76-horsepower, it develops 110-112. It can run, without failure, at wide-open throttle for a period of 100 hours at a speed of from 4,500 to 4,800 revolutions per minute.

How It Came About.

What has happened that engineers are able to extract such impressively finer performance from the automobile power plant?

In the first place, they have adopted higher compression pressures; in other words, they have learned to make a given amount of motor fuel produce more energy. They have given engine fuel induction systems a precision and wear ability vastly improved over the 1930 standards. Lubrication and metallurgical progress have produced bearings capable of standing far greater loads. The art of mixing fuel and air in engine carburetors and distributing it with balanced perfection to the cylinders has been greatly advanced.

In the face of such a convincing summary of accomplishment, one might think the engineer ready to rest for a while on his laurels. He is nothing of the kind. He is more busily engaged in his laboratory at the automobile factory today than at any time in years.

Insurance Liability.

Motorists who carry liability insurance not only should know the amounts of the coverage limits, but they also should understand exactly what those limits mean.

For example, let it be assumed a motorist carrying a standard limit $5,000-$10,000 policy is involved in an accident in which more than one person in the other car is killed or injured and a judgment of $10,000 is rendered against the assured. Assume further that—as frequently occurs—three persons are injured and judgments in their favor are rendered in the amounts of $7,000, $2,000 and $1,000. The assured carrying a $5,000-$10,000 liability policy must pay $2,000 of the $7,000 judgment himself because the policy sets forth definitely that the limit, for one person, can not exceed $5,000.

Motorists should know that this is not a "trick" feature nor is it found in the policy of any single company. It is standard in all liability policies.

Touring Requires Fuel.

Some motorists, strangely enough, anticipate that their cars will yield more miles to the gallon on the touring trip than when they are driven in ordinary routine service, because there is a vast difference in the number of starts, stops and waiting periods.

There is, however, another factor that weighs more heavily than any of these with respect to diminished city gasoline mileage. It is that out on the open road the car is driven at higher speeds. The pace of the touring trip calls for a greater power output on the part of the engine and it takes more fuel to make this additional power.

Oil Injures Tires.

Oil that leaks out of the crankcase of the automobile does more than discolor the floor. Oil and grease are two of rubber's worst enemies and, given a chance to attack the tires of the vehicle, do heavy damage.

Low Tire Pressure.

There are other disadvantages than the exceptional wear on the tires as a result of running them at below the recommended pressure. This is especially true when the pressure not only is subnormal but varies between the different tires.

For example, a variation in the pressure between the two rear tires means the whole chassis is twisted with corresponding strain on the engine, transmission, frame and body. The effects of varied pressures upon steering and braking, and broadly, upon safety, are well known to all observant drivers.

Our Traffic Rules.

It is a violation of the law to deface, move, obstruct or interfere with any official traffic sign or signal. Why?

The reason for this is that such signs are placed only at points which are hazardous or at which special directions are required for the safe and orderly movement of traffic. Defacement, removal or obstruction of the sign exposes street or highway users to the hazard or confusing condition which its erection is designed to eliminate or minimize. In the event of involuntary defacement of such signs or signals, motorists are required to make an immediate report to the proper authorities.

Guards at Polish Border Must Know Their Geography

Katowice, Poland, June 23 (AP).—Patrolling the Poland-Czechoslovakia border in Silesia is no sinecure, take it from the guards and customs officials stationed there.

Here the smuggler can, in many places, walk into the front room of a house and be in one country; as soon as he walks into the kitchen, he finds himself in another country.

Along the 210 miles of one of the most complicated frontiers in the world there are no less than 353 separate items of real estate which are divided in two by the border.

In Ruba Slaska, a town in Polish Silesia, the frontier passes at the edge of the town, a few feet from the last row of houses. To throw objects through open windows, thus passing them into another country, is mere child's play.

New Deal Test Is Expected in Montana Vote

Challenge to Wheeler and Erickson Is Issued by George Bourquin.

Helena, Mont., June 23 (AP).—Montana will be a testing ground for the Roosevelt Administration next month.

In a typically eloquent announcement, George M. Bourquin, Republican, former Federal district judge, brought the "New Deal" issue into the Montana primary of July 17 by declaring he is for it, "but only after it is put through the furnace of the Constitution, the slag of misdeal and raw deal run off, and the recovery of any pure metal of the square deal of Theodore Roosevelt."

It was a challenge to Senator Burton K. Wheeler and John E. Erickson, whose allegiance to President Roosevelt and his theories have been unwavering.

Bourquin, who retired in June after more than 20 years on the Federal bench, will seek the Republican nomination for the United States Senate for the long term. Senator Wheeler, a Democrat, as a candidate for reelection, will seek the nomination to oppose the 70-year-old Bourquin, whose decisions, handed down from Federal benches is as widely separated States as New Jersey and California, have attracted Nation-wide attention.

Heavily Democratic.

"Government by the people's laws and not by various men's uncertain wills must be maintained," Bourquin said.

"I am for preservation of the Constitution at any cost."

Montana, normally Democratic, added a flood of ballots to the heavy Democratic majorities in the last general election.

Bourquin will be opposed in the Republican primary by O. H. P. Shelly, a publisher, of Red Lodge. Senator Wheeler will be in the Democratic contest against Bert Replogle, State Representative from Lewistown.

Senator John E. Erickson, who left the governorship to succeed the late Senator Thomas J. Walsh, will seek the Democratic nomination to fill the remaining two years of Mr. Walsh's term. He is opposed by a number of candidates, including the only woman in the primary list, Mrs. W. W. Hamilton, Dodson, former member of the State Legislature. His other opponents are James F. O'Connor, Livingston; John A. Loveland, Bozeman; James E. Murray, head of the Montana PWA, and State Senator Louis P. Donovan, Shelby.

Republican Contest.

On the Republican side Scott Leavitt, Great Falls, member of Congress for five terms, will compete with a list of candidates for the short term, which includes James A. Jergensen, Whitehall; Leonard C. Young, Hobson, and Wellington D. Rankin, Helena, former district attorney.

The youngest member of Congress, Joseph P. Monaghan, Butte, is opposed by Dennis A. Dellwo, Charlo, speaker of the State House of Representatives, and John M. Evans, Missoula, former Representative, for the Democratic nomination for Representative in the First District. Sherman W. Smith, Helena; Robert C. Edgington, Dayton, and D. D. Evans, Helena, will compose the Republican list.

In the Second District, Representative Roy E. Ayers, Lewistown, a veteran campaigner, is unopposed for the Democratic nomination, but T. S. Stockdal, Billings; District Judge Stanley E. Felt, Baker, and Julius J. Wuerther, Great Falls, will seek the Republican nomination.

The Montana voters also will select candidates for the offices of chief justice, associate justice, the railway commission and clerk of the State Supreme Court.

Gallery Glimpses

By Robert C. Albright

BARE, silent corridors, where a few days ago all was bustle, confusion and ceaseless talk.

Empty halls, ghostlike in their stark stillness, oppressive with the memory of gavel rappings and static speeches.

Subways, forbidding as the catacombs; galleries, stoically quiet as the second balcony on a bad first night.

This is the Capitol with Congress adojurned. This is the Senate and this is the House in that long, peaceful stretch from June to January.

Only a few members linger behind—mostly those not particularly worried about campaign opposition.

Others hastened away in the first two or three days after Congress adjourned, and right gladly, too.

For six months they will live a life of importance—large, tailless amphibians in small pools of water, where the title of "Congressman" still has some glamor.

In Washington's big pond they are lost. Bigger frogs croak louder and break the water with a splash more resounding.

Yet blase and naive Washington alike will miss them, as a never-failing conversational topic. It is like removing the weather when Congress adjourns. People like to laugh at their antics, or discourse sagely and knowingly on sterner matters of legislation.

And what will become of that stock question:

"When do you think Congress will get away?"

SPEAKING of adjournment, we beg leave to report that G. Hunter Osborne, press gallery martyr to the cause of Congressional dignity, has gone into brooding retirement.

Osborne, you may recall, was to lead the gallery in singing "The Man on the Flying Trapeze" when John Rankin called off the "undignified" entertainment.

After three days of quiet meditation, Osborne gave forth the following poetic effusion, born of the great hurt that was in his soul:

Once I was happy but now I'm forlorn,
Just like this Congress I'm battered and torn,
Left in this gallery to weep and to mourn
'Cause last week you didn't adjourn.
Oh a gal that I love is a pippin
And I brought her up here for to please,
But your growls and your howls sent her slippin'
Right back to a gink on a flyin' trapeze.
Chorus
Oh he floats through the air, &c., &c.

(And this)
Once I was happy but now I'm forlorn
For now my big moment has come and has gone
Without one lone warble or toot of a horn
Because of some fool dignities.
Oh the song that I had was a sad one
And the tears from the eyes it should tease.
But jealous John Rankin gave my hopes a spankin',
Cut the ropes on my vocal trapeze.
Chorus
(There ain't one)

AND we now are reliably informed the tumult and fanfare accompanying this session's bank "pay-off" drive accomplished all Representative Clarence McLeod sought.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is ready to make loans on millions in Detroit frozen bank assets, when and if they are asked.

Which was all Mr. McLeod, of Detroit, really wanted. Or so goes the gossip.

SAID IN PARTING.

Speaker Rainey—We have done more work and we have talked less than in any other Congress in the history of this Republic.

Representative Bertrand Snell—May you all soon go to your homes and enjoy the rest and comfort to which you are entitled.

Representative John O'Connor—Every man and woman in this House, no matter what any other members may think of him or her, serve some useful purpose in the composite scheme of our united attempt to solve the problems of our people.

Representative John Rankin—For my part I can truthfully say that my cup of gratification is literally running over.

Representative William Lemke—The battle is on.

Representative Randolph Carpenter—I have not missed a single roll call vote during these two years, and have only missed two quorum calls.

Representative Tom Blanton—I will have no rest.

Representative George Foulkes—The Nation needs more Dr. Tugwells.

Senator Charles McNary—We are moving so rapidly that it is difficult to know just what is being done.

Senator Huey (Kingfish) Long—Somewhere, somehow, something is going on that nobody understands here.

Senator Joe Robinson—The President states he has no further communication to make.

At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

World Champion Dr. Alexander Alekhine brought the current titular match to a close in the twenty-sixth game, as he drew with his challenger, E. D. Bogoljubow, German champion. Alekhine had won the twenty-fifth game and the draw which followed ran his total point score to 15½, a stipulated terminus for the fray. The game score was Alekhine, 8; Bogoljubow, 3; drawn, 15, and the outcome caused little surprise to any. Already Fred Reinfeld and Reuben Fine, New York master players, are collaborating on the preparation of a volume to contain the biographies of the competitors, summaries of the play, an analysis of the openings adopted, and the score of all the games with exhaustive annotations. Orders for copies should be sent direct to Reinfeld, 2265 Newbold avenue, New York City.

Federal Chess Club.

Play in the fifth round of the club's Group A elimination tourney left Knapp and Naidel the only entrants remaining for the final round. Knapp eliminated Seidenberg by dealing him a double defeat, while Naidel won a single game from Sturges.

In the Group B tournament Eskin, Schaeffer, Nail and perhaps Gleason have battled their way to the semifinal round. Double victories were scored as follows: Eskin from Haygood, Schaeffer from Page, Nail from Burch. Gleason and Murray halved their games, one each.

The annual meeting of the club has been called for June 27, when officers will be elected and a summer program drawn. Prospective members are urged to attend. The clubrooms are located at the Parrot Tea Rooms, Connecticut avenue and S street northwest.

Capital City Club.

The Capital City Chess Club has decided to stage a rapid transit tournament, 10 seconds per move, on the first Tuesday of each month of the summer season. A Kriegspiel tourney has been begun in which play occurs on remaining Tuesday evenings. To date the entrants are G. E. Bishop, C. W. Stark, Martin C. Stark, F. W. F. Gleason, F. T. Parsons and J. A. Kirby. Kirby and Martin Stark have played their initial partie, with Stark winning. Duplicate bridge, for members only, will be played each Thursday evening. Sunday's open house will be held for the same game.

Appended is the score of one of the games from the Capital City versus Ladies' Club match. Mrs. E. R. Shephard was causing her opponent considerable trouble until her plans went somewhat awry a few moves before the close.

Checker Players, Attention.

We regret that the checker problem recently published contained an error, which made it unsolvable. Here is the position which occurred between Paul F. Grove and William Orrin Daudt: White—common men on 12 14 15 25 30 and 32; king on 8; black, common men on 3, 6, 7, 21, 24 and 28. Mr. Grove, playing white, won in beautiful fashion, which you checker fans may take for a problem. White to move and win.

But here is an actual problem composed by Mr. Grove, based on one the source of which is uncertain. He titles it Father's Day Problem, in commemoration of its composition last Sunday. Black: common men on 6, 7, 15, 17, 21, 22, 23; king on 26; White, common men on 5, 24, 29 and 30; kings on 8, 13, 14 and 16. Black to move and win.

Mr. Grove, incidentally, was the first vice president of the Capital City Chess Club at the time of its formation in 1911. W. B. Mundelle, famous local chess player, and one-time District checker champion, was its first president.

Notes.

The Virginia State Chess Congress gets under way at Roanoke July 4, with contestants from all major cities of Virginia expected to participate. J. J. Shelton, who recently wrested the Roanoke championship from J. Curtis Merkle, is a favorite to win the State championship honors.

The inital analysis by F. L. Congress on the Bogoljubow-Alekhine game was republished in full in the Allentown (Pa.) Morning Call, with acknowledgment to The Post. Incidentally, if Mr. Congress will favor us with his address, we shall be glad to forward to him some further analysis submitted, at his request, by N. T. Whitaker.

Solutions to Problems.

The key to No. 579, three-mover by G. C. Holroyd, is R(B)-B3. The solvers found this one to be especially difficult. The two-mover by the same composer, No. 580, yields to Kt-B6. Among those sending in solutions were Jacob Frech, J. W. Harris, Willis J. Nolan, N. T. Whitaker, W. B. Mundelle and Henry M. Ward.

W. J. Nolan terms No. 579 "especially good." Jacob Frech comments, "Only logic's equivalent for problem-solving genius (viz.: systematic adequate reverification of premises) can surely discover the relevant syllogistic middle terms of problems as complex as Nos. 579 and 580, viz.: re 579: A problem in which white can force one of the following only quickest series of forced mates: I R(B)-B3; 2 R(Q3 or B3)-K3 or P-B3; 3 R(Q3 or B3)-K3 or P-B3 or Kt-K6 and re 580: A problem in which white can force one of the following only quickest series of forced mates; 1 Kt-B6; 2 Q-K3 or R-Q4 or Kt-Q5 or -R5. The problems generate, respectively, 3,000,000 and 17,000 series."

Henry M. Ward writes, "No. 579 is easy. Kt-K8 is alluring, but yields to P-QB4. I am glad to have time to tackle problems once more."

What Today Means

"Cancer."

If June 24 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 to 12 a. m., from 3 to 5 p. m., and from 8 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 7 to 9 a. m., from 1 to 3 p. m., and from 10 p. m. until midnight.

Sunday, June 24, will be filled with numerous pleasant activities, providing you are in a receptive frame of mind. It might be advisable to try to agree to do the thing that is suggested. Opposition might be misconstrued as a selfish desire to have your own way. There is a possibility of your meeting for the first time a person who, unfortunately, gives the impression of having a rather unpleasant personality. Remember outward appearances are often deceiving, and "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Sentimental couples should find this a propitious day for the furtherance of their plans.

If a woman and this is your natal day, the agility and gracefulness with which nature has endowed you with gifts that should be made good use of. You would probably be very successful if you took up dancing professionally. Physical culture is another field that offers opportunity. Love, however, is possibly going to play a very important part in your life, as you are the type that makes a marvelous success of married life. You must guard again allowing jealousy to arouse unfounded suspicions. A distrustful husband or wife can cause more discord than did even the serpent in the Garden of Eden. Be careful a friend, addicted to gossip, does not get you into the habit. Gossiping is a dangerous pastime to indulge in, trouble usually follows in its wake. Keep your eyes and ears open, for shortly you will either receive a letter bearing good news or you will hear some.

The child born on June 24, as it grows up, may reflect great credit on its parents by evidence of its innate refinement. This child should display an unusual amount of grace in its movements, and be outstanding among its playmates in athletic sports.

If a man born on June 24, if not already married, "get busy," for marriage will keep you out of trouble as you are very susceptible to the charms of the fair sex and flattery. If you keep your mind on business and put forth your best efforts, your financial returns may prove a pleasant surprise. Be very careful about listening to a friend's advice, regarding an "easy way" to make money. Bear in mind speculation is the lazy man's idea of making money without working for it, and it does not always prove to be a good one.

Huge Dragnet Combs Ocean For Dangers to U. S. Ships

Experts of Geodetic Survey Fish Up Wreckage and Blast Off Tops of Submerged Rocks to Make Sea Safe.

number of these hidden dangers were actually on the usual courses of large passenger steamers, and others were very close to those courses.

At the present time, the Atlantic coastal waters have been very completely covered by the drag operations, with continuing use of the equipment being currently restricted to small-scale work for confirmation of results of the sounding activities linked with the gathering of material for drafting and revision of charts.

The Guide, one of the Survey's large ships used in the advancement of major phases of the drag work, now is operating south of San Francisco, where it is "fishing" for obstacles close to the beach and below the surface of waters into which vessels steer their courses during periods of exceptionally bad weather.

One of the most spectacular discoveries which have resulted from dragging coastal waters came when Capt. N. H. Heck, who pioneered in development of the apparatus, was directing a wire-drag operation in the channel leading into Key West several years ago.

Here is the story of that discovery as told in an official report by Capt. Heck:

"The work at Key West was undertaken in connection with the possibility that a straight channel might be established as a substitute for the existing lane.

"In the main channel we found a pinnacle of rock which might have changed history. It was in the course that was followed by the Maine when she departed on her last trip. She might easily have struck it when outward bound for Havana.

"We caught the drag on this pinnacle several times. Later divers placed dynamite at its base, and blasting by the Army engineers put an end to its dangerous existence."

Among the strangest stories connected with these activities of the Survey is the one which tells of the disappearnace and subsequent discovery of the small craft which bore the long name of "Reliable Fuel Oil Supply Barge No. 3," which sailed from Brooklyn, January 30, 1930, bound up Long Island Sound, with Bridgeport as its destination.

The first stages of that trip were made at night, with weather conditions being none too good. And old Reliable failed to get beyond those first few miles. She disappeared without trace. Weeks went by, and still no indication of what had happened to the barge presented itself.

Several months later, two women, each claiming to be the widow of the barge's captain, put in their appearance and sought to benefit by his insurance policy. But their pleas did not carry weight, nor was an investigation launched to determine which of the claimants truly was the widow, and this for the simple reason that nobody could be at all certain that the captain was dead.

Almost a year after the barge disappeared, two of the Survey's launches were dragging a wire line approximately 1,000 feet long between them in the effort to provide assurance that no sunken craft or dangerous rocks were present in the channel as potential dealers of death and damage.

The launches were moving along at a moderate rate of speed when the line became taut at a place where no obstruction appeared on the charts to which latest revisions had been applied.

Before the speed of the boats could be slackened, the line parted from the submerged obstacle, bringing to the surface a mast which obviously was a part of a small vessel.

Salvaging operations were instituted as a result of the discovery and divers soon identified the craft as the missing barge.

More recently, the 36-foot sloop Sea Fox disappeared with almost identical results following.

Lieut. Henry E. Finnegan, in charge of a party making a Long Island Sound drag, reported the discovery of the vessel which was resting at a depth of 48 feet in water off the entrance to Greenwich Harbor. In his report he indicated clearly how the sunken vessel was a danger to navigation of ships plying along the north shore of the sound. Before the drag line caught on that vessel, improvised methods by private parties had been used without success in the search for the craft, and airplanes even had been utilized, but without success.

In addition to locating sunken vessels, which are in the paths followed by ships in moving through coastal waters, the drag lines frequently encounter pinnacle rocks which are slim spires that protrude close to the surface of the water. These rocks are so small in diameter as they approach the water's surface that vessels might pass close by them for years before a craft might be so unfortunate as to come into direct contact with one of them. It was on a rock of that type, which, however, had been discovered and charted, that the Aleutian, a large vessel plying Alaskan waters, met disaster several years ago.

One of the most remarkable rock formations located by the draggers was found in these same Alaskan waters. It is a rocky spire which is more than 600 feet in height. Soundings and other observations made following the discovery revealed the rock to have a contour quite resembling that of the Washington Monument. It, accordingly, was given the name of the famous obelisk.

Though virtually all the paths followed by vessels in plying coastal waters of the United States have been followed by the survey's launches that drag the obstacle-revealing lines behind them, the dragging operations continue in all areas. Uncle Sam's strange "fishermen" can take no chances that a sunken vessel or uncharted rock might remain hidden below the water's surface as a menace to lives and property. And the patience and perseverance of those men who pursue so unique a vocation give strong assurance there will be no counterpart of the Dresden disaster near our coasts.

The Battle of New Orleans had no effect on the outcome of the War of 1812. It did not take place until early January of 1815, while the Treaty of Ghent, which ended the war, was signed on December 24, 1814. This was an age of slow communications, and nobody in America knew the war was over until days after the battle was fought. The Battle of New Orleans, nevertheless, was in many respects the most important battle of the war.

The battle was an engagement between 10,000 British veterans under Gen. Pakenham, and a force of about half that number of Americans under Gen. Andrew Jackson, the English attacking and the Americans defending New Orleans. It ended in the utter defeat of the English, who lost 2,000 men. The American force, which was composed mostly of woodsmen, but with some slaves and a few pirates in the ranks, lost eight dead and thirteen wounded.

The effect of the battle was great. It made a National hero of Jackson, paving the way for his eventual elevation to the Presidency; it increased American prestige in Europe more than all the rest of the war; it brought about a much needed Nationalism in the United States; it saved the mouth of the Mississippi from invasion; it gave to the West a feeling of security and confidence; it removed the danger of a British threat to the Louisiana territory; it strengthened the Administration and sounded the death-knell of the Federalist party, and it gave to military experts of the world a practical demonstration of the value of rifle marksmanship as a defense against mass attack.

Cotton Reduction Causes Suffering to Share Cropper

Tenants on Plantations Often Evicted While Owner Collects From the Government for Plowing the Crop Under.

constantly shifting about from one plantation to another and its tenure of land has been short and uncertain," Prof. Amberson reported. "These people are probably the most depressed body of workers in America, exhibiting grave cultural, moral and intellectual deficiencies. This report will indicate that a considerable section of them, contrary to the intent of the Government, are now reduced to an even lower plane than before, and, in many cases, are being denied access to the land and to the only labor that they know and are capable of doing."

In interviewing share-croppers Prof. Amberson found, he reported, many instances where the 1933 contracts to plow up cotton were not carried out in good faith—evidence indicating the difficulty of getting voluntary cooperation in crop reduction even when the farmer is paid for it.

Frauds Discovered.

Prof. Amberson reported that 140 families, or 37 per cent of the group studied, last year plowed up no land at all; 18 families, or 5 per cent, plowed up all their land; 98 families, or 26 per cent, plowed up some land, but less than the one-fourth of the crop specified by the contract; 103 families, or 27 per cent, plowed up more than 25 per cent; 37 families plowed up the agreed one-fourth.

"The sample is small, but there is the distinct suggestion that less land was actually plowed up than was specified in the contract," the report stated. "We have had frequent testimony that where a whole crop was plowed under it was so handled because it was poor, and we have even had one well attested case where corn was plowed under in lieu of cotton.

"In many cases the families report that no settlement for the plow-up was ever made. In a few cases families were evicted from their homes and denied all compensation."

Cases were found, the Amberson report continued, where on large plantations the part of the 1933 acreage plowed up was cultivated on a day-labor basis, instead of plowing a part of the acres worked by share-croppers. Thus the latter were prevented from having any claim at all for a part of the benefit paid by the Government.

Can't Get Land.

Prof. Amberson found greater discrimination against share-croppers in plans for the 1934 crop. Planters were asked to agree to reduce this crop 40 per cent, for which they will receive aggregate benefit payments of $130,000,000 this year.

"Our records cover 103 white families and 13 colored families, who, having had crops in 1933, have been unable to keep or get any land whatsoever in 1934," the report stated. "It has been one of the main objectives of this committee to determine, beyond any possibility of doubt, whether the acreage reduction program has created a new agricultural unemployment, contrary to the plain intent of the Government, and both spirit and letter of the 1934 contract.

"We can state with authority that it has so operated, and can assert that, at a conservative estimate, at least 15 per cent, and probably 20 per cent, of all share-cropper families have lost their opportunity to make a living on the land by the only labor which they know."

The Amberson report recited interviews "with dozens of families who have been evicted, or in whose hands there are eviction notices" and added that "many other families have been forced to move by pressure and intimidation, without service of papers."

"Most of these people are still living in the country, some in tents, some in abandoned houses, a few in such miserable shelters as corn cribs and cotton houses. Many of them have drifted into the cities and towns where they are dependent upon direct Federal relief."

Rely on Good Faith.

Prof. Amberson found these conditions in face of a provision in 1934 crop reduction contracts requiring the producer to "endeavor in good faith to bring about a reduction of acreage contemplated in this contract in such a manner as to cause the least possible amount of labor, economic and social disturbance and to this end, in so far as possible he shall effect the acreage reduction as nearly ratable as practicable among tenants on this farm . . . shall permit all tenants to continue in the occupancy of their houses on this farm, rent free, for the years 1934 and 1935."

Prof. Amberson found that reasons for the refusal to give land to share croppers and for evicting them were that restriction of acreage guaranteed a higher price for cotton raised this year and that there was less cause to share the risks of the season with share tenants and croppers and that by throwing agricultural laborers out of employment the crop reduction program created such competition for the work which remains that "many laborers are now forced to accept working conditions which are appreciably worse than they have ever heretofore endured."

In fact, he discovered an accelerated tendency to abolish the share-cropper system in favor of the employment of day labor, paid at the rate of 50 to 75 cents a day for work from sun up to sun down. The plantation owner is turning to day labor in an effort to retain for himself all benefit paid by the Government for crop reduction.

Found Improvement.

Aroused by the criticisms of this report, as well as attacks by Norman Thomas, the leader of the Socialist party in the United States, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace assigned Dr. Calvin B. Hoover, professor of economics at Duke University and author of "The Economic Life of Soviet Russia" and a recent book on Germany, to examine into this question.

Dr. Hoover contended that "the recovery program has undoubtedly greatly improved conditions in the South" and that the substantial revival in purchasing power and decrease in industrial unemployment in the South "far outweigh any unfortunate results and individual injustices which have been produced by the acreage reduction program."

He contended that many of the investigators of conditions in the South have been "unfamiliar" with the economic history of that section and "have often jumped to the conclusion that the acreage reduction program has been responsible for all undesirable conditions which they found." He went on to point out that the miserable condition of the share croppers existed long before the crop reduction program was started.

But Dr. Hoover agreed that "it is inevitable that with acreage reduction there should be pressure toward reduction in the number of people employed in producing cotton." He said that for four or five years the number of former tenant farmers who are without means of livelihood has been steadily increasing, resulting in an increasing number of "squatter families."

Living in Shacks.

"These families formerly were able to obtain a crop to tend but are now unable to do so," he pointed out. "Many of them are living in tumble-down tenant houses and tobacco barns and any sort of shack which they can find. Their standard of living is appalling and is even much below the customary low standard of living of tenant-farmers who are engaged in production. The rehabilitation of these 'squatter' families is demanded by every consideration of National responsibility."

He reported also that prior to signing the 1934 contracts some landowners dispensed with the service of tenants and "in many cases tenants left farms and plantations as they normally do, but when they tried to find employment elsewhere they were unable to find it on account of acreage reduction.

"Their former landowner naturally did not feel under obligation to take them back after they had left of their own free will," the economist explained.

Dr. Hoover agreed that the reduction program had accelerated the increase of idle tenants, pointing out that the reduction contracts contained nothing to prevent landlords from reducing the number of hired laborers or affecting the compensation of hired laborers with the consequent temptation "to replace tenants with day laborers since tenants have some rights in the contract."

Rights of Tenants.

He intimated that the provision guarding the rights of tenants in the contract was loosely drawn and he threw out the suggestion that "the landlord was induced to sign the cotton contract by an inducement obtained at the expense of the share tenant and share cropper."

After the Amberson and Hoover reports were made public, Norman Thomas wrote Secretary Wallace that "it seems to be that both reports confirm the charges I made." He contended that "the entire method of land tenure and operation is wrong; that some of the worst examples of landlordism in the world are to be found in the cotton country, and that it is idle to talk about prosperity for cotton farmers as long as these conditions of virtual peonage continue."

Secretary Wallace has undertaken to correct some of the evils pointed out in the Amberson and Hoover reports by a more rigid enforcement of the provisions in crop reduction contracts designed to protect tenants and croppers. Field agents of the AAA were named in eight of the cotton States where there had been complaints to investigate and adjust misunderstandings and to report violations to the AAA in order that necessary corrections may be made or benefit payments canceled.

(Editor's Note: In a second article next Sunday, Mr. Waltman will present viewpoints as to whether the cotton production program is feasible and desirable from the economic interests of the South and the Nation and the reply of AAA to charges that the Bankhead bill represents "regimentation.")

Mississippi Calm On Liquor Ballot

Usual Excitement Fails to Appear on Rum Issue.

Jackson, Miss., June 23 (AP).—Characteristic Mississippi enthusiasm over almost any political issue has been absent thus far in the campaign to determine whether legal liquor shall be sold by the State.

Ballots to decide the liquor issue will be cast July 10, a quarter-century after Mississippi adopted State-wide prohibition.

The referendum will be held under authority of the May-Roberts bill, passed by the 1934 session of the Legislature, which proposes to put the State into the liquor business. Should a majority of the voters participating in the referendum approved that legislation, a State liquor commission would be created to purchase and distribute intoxicants in all counties permitting their sale.

Firemen Will Hold Carnival July 7 to 21

The Silver Spring (Md.) Volunteer Fire Department will hold its annual carnival July 7 to 21, inclusive, it was announced by the carnival committee.

Those in charge of the affair are J. A. Granger, chairman; Clay Davis, treasurer; George Hamilton, Harold Harmon, Victor H. Bender, J. Thomas Kennedy and Everett Schrider.

Nazis Rebuked By Von Papen

Hindenberg Helps Him in Move Against Hitler.

we know nothing to make der Fuehrer link arms with our traditional enemy, do you?

And although most do not know that Von Papen at Marburg urged the necessity of a critical press if the Nazi government is to be kept from degenerating into flabby bureaucracy (that was putting it cautiously), many can wonder why the indefatigable Goebbels should elect to hurl a special thunderbolt at carping critics and to warn them that only party members have a right to criticize the head Nazi, Handsome Adolph.

Into this atmosphere of restiveness and perhaps even suspicion Von Papen has hurled a gage. He has said, in effect, it is time to ease the pace and return to greater rationalism. Thinking with the blood instead of the head won't do indefinitely, however appropriate it may have been this past year and a half, he added tactfully.

Against this line of thinking stand row upon row of impatient storm troopers, increasingly convinced the reason things aren't so good is because there hasn't yet been enough revolution. They believe that more of the same is a sure cure for whatever ails the state.

With the split in points of view out in the open at last, a showdown has become inevitable. The decision rests with the mystical and curiously impersonal Hitler. Upon his capacity as a statesman depends the future of Germany—slowly upward again to a lost respectability, or downward into a primitive barbarism that has shocked the world profoundly.

But Hitler is still der Fuehrer.

U. S. Concerns to Build Chilean Rail Equipment

Santiago, Chile June 23 (AP).—A contract for half a million dollars' worth of rolling stock for the Chilean State Railways was awarded to United States manufacturers.

Although German bids were lower than the American, the Baldwin Locomotive Works at Philadelphia and the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation won the contract, calling for five locomotives and 15 coaches, to be built at a cost of $445,000.

Business Boom Follows Pilgrims to World's Fair

self that light is a vibration with a wave length of about twenty-millionths of an inch. You can step on a revolving platform and change the speed of it by raising or lowering a pair of dumbells which you hold in your hands. There are models of Caesar's city plan for Rome, miniature oil wells in action, radio tubes are made in front of your eyes. Electrons and protons are there, invisible themselves, but their effects demonstrated.

Time Moves Rapidly.

The "Clock of the Ages" compresses 2,000,000,000 years of geological time in 4 minutes by the clock. Mammals appear almost at the end of one revolution of the clock and man is reached only in the last few seconds. Dr. Auguste Piccard's first stratosphere gondola is there after a trip 54,000 feet up.

You can see the evolution of the human face, from fish to man, and you'll be reminded of friends back home. A life-size model of a man shows the circulation of the blood with the heart pumping, the valves working, the red blood flowing out through the arteries and the blue blood returning through the veins, lungs move, ribs expand, and the larynx vibrates. There is also a "transparent man" showing all internal organs as if looked at by an X-ray eye.

In the electrical building it is the magic show that draws the crowds. A man runs enough current through his body to light an electric bulb which he holds on his finger-tip. By synchronizing light rays with the speed of a revolving disc it changes into all sorts of colors and patterns before your eyes, depending on the variations in the speed of the disc. A graphophone is started and the volume grows or disappears entirely depending on an invisible beam thrown from across the room. The invisible beam will light electric bulbs many feet away as if they were in a power socket.

Modern Miracles.

Similar exhibits depict the marvels of industrial processes, tire manufacture, mining of coal, gold and silver, glass making, television, railroad operation, radio, telegraph and telephone, the work of the social sciences, agriculture and horticulture, the stories of religion and art, the many activities of government, and inventions which have turned kitchen drudgery into a series of small machine operations. Real automobiles are made while you watch. One of the major new exhibits installed this year is Ford's $1,500,000 plant covering 11 acres where, as in the General Motors exhibits, cars are built on the assembly line before your eyes, shatter-proof glass is made, fabrics are woven, and parts welded.

But by this time the visitor probably has wandered off to the Spanish village, or to the Black Forest village where, on a hot summer afternoon he can look at roofs around him which seem to be laden with snow, and at a towering snow-covered mountain, and enjoy his beer while watching the ice skaters. And there's a gal who does a black panther dance—if the Fair's censor has not interfered by now—and a damsel in the Streets of Paris who seems to have gone entirely nudist, though the cautious Fair management swears it's just an optical illusion and that the lady really has something on.

City of Midgets.

Grown-ups as well as the kids hang around the midget city and watch the little men and women get their hair cut in the diminutive barber shop which is part of this pint-sized community with its own policemen, its Liliputian fortune tellers, its small tough guys, and a real giant in a big red uniform who is always being ganged by the tiny fellows.

All of this provides a welcome holiday and a source of new interest and hope to a country that has had good cause to be disillusioned about modern civilization. None of the millions of Fair visitors under 25 can remember back to the peaceful prewar world when things seemed reasonably normal. Ever since they were born there has been nothing but war and—except for a few dizzy years—depression and hard luck. Here 3 long miles of man-made land beside Lake Michigan are assembled the products of the best that is in the human animal, which if properly applied should insure comfort, adequate food, clothing and shelter for every one and a pretty good time in addition.

It ought to make people feel better about the human race—except that this Fair sure is hard on the arches, and you get to the point where you don't care what science has done if you can only sit down and rest the dogs.

Large Nitrate Deposits Are Located in Peru

Arequipa, Peru, June 23 (AP).—Large quantities of almost pure sodium nitrate, a chemical widely used in the manufacture of explosives, have been discovered near this town.

It was reported here that a company is being organized to start the exploitation of the nitrate, which it is believed will give employment to about 10,000 laborers.

Murray's Foes Assail Anglin

Concentrate on Governor's Choice for Successor as Vote Nears.

Oklahoma City, June 23 (AP).—Tom Anglin, William H. Murray's selection to succeed him in the governorship, bore the brunt of the attack of other leading candidates today as the preprimary campaign neared a close in Oklahoma.

Voters will determine July 3 which two of a record field of 15 Democrats will enter the July 24 run-off.

The field apparently has been narrowed to a half-dozen leaders, including Anglin, Corporation Commissioner Jack Walton, an impeached and ousted Governor; Representative E. W. Marland, of Ponca City; Lieut. Gov. Robert Burns, Attorney General J. Berry King and Gomer Smith, an Oklahoma City attorney. The name of Porter Newman, Durant district judge, also is mentioned frequently.

But it is on Anglin, Speaker of the the House and beneficiary of the administration organization, that the most of the aspirants are turning their fire.

Walton Offers Pensions.

Opponents charge his election might mean a continuation of policies pursued by the fiery "Alfalfa Bill" during his stormy administration.

Walton supporters predict the former Governor, who was ousted by the 1923 Legislature, of which Anglin was a member, will go into the run-off.

Flaying Murray and Anglin, the latter as an "impeachocrat," Walton promised old-age pension legislation and a tax on wealth for relief purposes, free textbooks and homestead tax exemption are on his platform.

Anglin, pointing to his long record in Senate and House and to recent ad valorem tax reductions, has said little about Murray's indorsement except to declare he has not promised to retain Murray employes and that Murray has not asked him to do so.

Murray is stumping the State, assailing Walton, Burns, King, Marland and Smith and urging votes for Anglin.

Marland, former oil millionaire, is stressing the New Deal, is advocating a closer relationship between the President and the Governor and promising to apply Roosevelt policies to Oklahoma. Marland went to Congress two years ago.

Burns, running on a platform of "no ring in my nose," is advocating the abolition of the tax commission, created by Murray and defended by Anglin.

A. U. to Open Public Affairs Class Tuesday

Summer Students Will Get Close-Up of New Deal in Action.

The Capital City's first laboratory for a study of Government will begin to function this week with the opening of the American University's School of Public Affairs.

With students in attendance from all sections of the Nation, the university will, for the next eight weeks, devote all efforts toward making it possible for the undergraduates, graduates and teachers who will attend the session to observe at first-hand the operations of what are referred to as the emergency agencies of Government.

The university has invited six outstanding specialists in the social sciences to assist in the project.

Members of the faculty are: Dr. Arnold Bennett Hall, formerly president of the University of Oregon, now director of the Institute of Government Research of the Brookings Institution; Dr. George A. Graham, of the Princeton School of Public and International Affairs; Dr. George C. S. Benson, of the Department of Government of Harvard University; Dr. William C. Casey, of the Faculty of Political Science of Columbia University; Dr. Ernest Griffith, of Syracuse School of Citizenship and Public Affairs; Dr. Howard S. Piquet, of the Department of Economics of New York University's School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance, and Dr. Richard L. Schanck, of the Department of Political Science of American University.

The faculty will conduct group conferences each morning on the American University campus. Of late afternoons they will meet students who are employed during the day, at the American University Graduate School, 1901 F street northwest. Round-table discussions will be held evenings under the leadership of some of the outstanding administrative officials in the Government today. Prominent leaders, from Cabinet members on down the line, have indicated willingness to participate in this part of the program.

Afternoons the student body will make first-hand observations, under expert guidance, of the manner in which various governmental agencies are functioning.

The Institute will open Tuesday, June 26, and close Friday, August 17. Tomorrow has been set aside for registration purposes.

Capital Society Ceases Formal Activities With Departure of President

Underwood & Underwood.

MRS. ERIK GEORGE PETERSON, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roderick Duncan MacDonald, of Houston, Tex., whose marriage took place recently in the garden of the home of Mrs. Edwin B. Parker on Wyoming avenue. Mrs. Parker is an aunt of the bride, who was formerly Miss Mary Katherine MacDonald.

Margaret Keith Is Married To Mr. Jeffries at Fairfax

The wedding of Miss Margaret Randolph Keith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Randolph Keith, of Fairfax, Va., and a niece of the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. R. Walton Moore, to Mr. Louis E. Jeffries, jr., son of Mrs. Louis E. Jeffries, of Washington, took place yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock in the Truro Episcopal Church at Fairfax, which was decorated with palms and ferns, with white lilies and tall tapers on the altar. The Rev. Herbert A. Donovan officiated.

Among the guests from Washington who attended the ceremony and the reception which followed were the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the war-time President.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Moore, and wore a gown of white satin fashioned on simple princess lines, with a square neck and long-fitted sleeves ending in points over the hands.

Sisters Attend Bride.

The veil of rose point lace fell from a cap of the same lace which was held in place by a bandeau of seed pearls embroidered in an orange blossom design. The bride carired a bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley.

The bride's sisters, Mrs. Charles Perry Howze and Mrs. Carlos Drake, were her only attendants. Both wore filmy frocks of turquoise blue chiffon fashioned with cowl necklines and brief trains. Their sashes of yellow taffeta matched the trimming on their wide-brimmed leghorn hats, and they carried arm-bouquets of summer flowers.

Mr. Alexander Jeffries was best man for his brother and the ushers were Dr. Charles Perry Howze, Mr. Nathan Scott and Dr. B. Lauriston Hardin, jr., of Washington; Mr. Bennet Crane and Mr. James W. Thomas, of Baltimore, and Mr. George Munce, of Richmond, Va., a brother-in-law of the bridegroom.

Owing to the illness of the bride's father, the reception which followed the ceremony took place at Mr. Moore's residence in Fairfax, and the guests were limited to the two immediate families and a few close friends. The young couple were assisted in receiving by the bride's mother, who wore a handsome gown of black chiffon trimmed with white and a hat to match, and by Mrs. Jeffries, who wore a gown of printed chiffon with a wide-brimmed hat.

Mr. Jeffries and his bride left on a wedding trip, the latter wearing a navy blue ensemble with a hat of navy blue silk faced with white straw.

They will be at home after July 15 at 2202 Wyoming avenue.

Washington to Be Quiet Until Autumn Season

First Lady Plans Tour of Country While President Is on Hawaiian Cruise; Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt and Baby Ruth at Hyde Park; Astor Off to Europe.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

With the White House "closed" for the summer months, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt in residence at their home at Hyde Park, N. Y., and Congress finally adjourned after almost a week of delay, Capital society is officially on a vacation. There will be very little formal entertaining until autumn, and even the entertaining done by official members of society who are still in town will be for the most part informal.

To Sail on Houston.

The President plans to sail aboard the U. S. S. Houston next Saturday, through the Panama Canal to California, and thence to Hawaii, where a royal welcome awaits him. It has been many years since a Chief Executive has gone so far afield in the summer. All during the Hoover regime the White House was open during the entire season, Mr. and Mrs. Hoover contenting themselves with the Presidential camp near Rapidan, Va. While the President is en route to the Pacific Islands, the First Lady will spend several weeks traveling over the country, and will meet the President in San Francisco the end of next month, to return east with him.

In spite of the fact that the President will not have his two grandchildren, Sistie and Buzzie Dall, with him during his stay at Hyde Park, he had the pleasure Thursday of making the acquaintance, for the first time, of his young daughter-in-law, Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, and her six-week-old daughter, Ruth, who arrived bag and baggage from Fort Worth, Tex., with the proud husband and father. The Elliott Roosevelts will remain at Hyde Park until the President returns from his cruise and will probably linger there to be with him some time after his return.

On Friday the President and Mrs. Roosevelt proudly watched their son, Franklin, jr., row in the Harvard "Jayvee" shell at the famous Harvard-Yale regatta. The President and his party viewed the races from the jaunty Presidential yacht Sequoia, commanded by Lieut. Walter Jones, U. S. N., which was anchored in the Thames River near New London, Conn. The Sequoia was escorted by the cutter Cuyahoga, and as the little yacht swung into the river guns barked the Presidential salute of 21 guns from the Naval Base, from old forts on the Sound and from the Coast Guard College. The largest crowds in years gathered in the old whaling town of New London Friday, arriving by train, motor, boat and airplane to watch the most popular boat races in the country. Beautiful yachts assembled in numbers which rivaled the nautical gathering in the New York Harbor last month for the review of the United States Fleet. The Corsair, with Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan and a large party on board, was in the group, as were Commodore Arthur Curtiss James' Aloha, the Hi-Esmaro of Mr. and Mrs. H. Edward Manville, which was recently in Washington; the Captiva, with Mr. and Mrs. John Hay Whitney aboard. The Nourmahal of Mr. Vincent Astor, aboard which the President has frequently cruised, was absent from the group, having sailed for Europe. Mr. Astor, who sailed on the Manhattan, will board his yacht on the other side and cruise in northern European waters.

To Greet Colombian.

In spite of the fact that the White House is really closed for the summer, the President will be there Tuesday and for the few days between then and the time he plans to sail from Annapolis on his cruise. On Tuesday the Chief Executive will greet the President-elect of Colombia, Senor Dr. Don Alfonso Lopez, who will spend several days in the Capital, arriving today. The President will entertain at a men's luncheon on Tuesday for the distinguished visitor, who will be entertained extensively during the brief visit he pays the Capital.

Last evening Mr. and Mrs. Francis P. Garvan, of New York, who have recently been visiting the former Attorney General and Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer at their apartment in Wardman Park Hotel, entertained at a brilliant party in their home, Roslyn House, at Wheatley, Long Island, for their daughter, Miss Mabel Garvan, and Miss Emily Hornblower, daughter of Mrs. George S. Hornblower, of New York. The party was a supper dance, at which the two young girls were presented to society. They will take an active part in the de-who before her recent marriage in New York was Miss Betty Harwood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Harwood, of Bronxville, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Creighton have returned to Washington from their wedding trip, and last evening entertained at a house-warming party in their apartment in Kew Gardens.

Stapletons Go Abroad For Summer Travels

Mrs. Daniel C. Stapleton and her daughter, Miss Stellita Stapleton, sailed yesterday from New York for Europe, where they will visit in London, Paris and Rome, before going to Florence, where they have taken a villa for the remainder of the season.

They will return to their home on Massachusetts avenue in the fall and Miss Stapleton will make her bow to Capital society later in the season. Miss Stapleton was graduated recently from the Spence School in New York.

Miss Virginia Devereux Weds

The wedding of Miss Virginia Devereux, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Devereux, to Mr. Thomas H. Daly, son of Mrs. Thomas J. Daly, of Mason City, Iowa, took place Wednesday morning at 9 o'clock at the Shrine of the Sacred Heart. The ceremony was per- by Mgr. P. C. Gavan.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white lace with turban to match and a white nose-length veil and carried white orchids and lilies of the valley.

She was attended by her sister, Miss Mary Lou Devereux, who wore a frock of white mousseline de soie, with a hat of horse-hair braid and carried talisman roses. Mr. Adrian Tate, of Salina, Kans., was best man.

An informal reception for relatives and a few close friends was

Carolina Holds Annual German

Many Social Groups Are Represented; Event Is Traditional.

Nearly every State in the Union was represented in the brilliant assemblage of guests who attended the fifty-fourth annual June german given in Rocky Mount, N. C., Friday by members of the Carolina Cotillion Club.

Leaders for the grand march, in which the numerals "34" were worked out in stately tread, were President George P. Arrington, whose guest was Miss Alice Winston Alexander, of Charlotte; Mr. George L. Weeks, vice president, who was with Miss Mildred Joyner, and Mr. Leslie F. Hinson, secretary and treasurer, who was with Mrs. Ninson. Mr. R. Bruce Savage, with Miss Louise Davenport, directed.

A second figure, which formally opened the german, was staged by the honorary club members and was led by Mayor M. D. Munn and Mrs. P. L. Thigpen. Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Fenner directed.

The Cotillion Club, which was organized in 1880 with Mr. Thomas H. Battle its first president, brings together each year the largest aggregation to assemble in the South. It is one of the oldest social units in the entire Southland and its annual dance climaxes a series of events which extend through a week. Every important social unit in the city takes part in the elaborate program.

butante festivities of the metropolis next winter. The beautiful gardens of the Garvan estate were lighted with colored lanters, and the huge marquee, where the dancing took place, was covered with a gay striped awning. Supper was served at small tables on the terraces of the house. Preceding the ball, Mrs. Manolo Wiechers, of Brookville, Long Island, entertained at a large dinner for Miss Edith Lord, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George deForest Lord, who will be a New York debutante next winter.

Miss Garvan was the guest of honor at a large dinner dance given before the ball by Mr. and Mrs. Carll Tucker, aboard their yacht, Migrant, anchored off Glen Cove harbor. Long Island is a gay place in the summer with so many magnificent estates opened and so many charming girls making their bows at delightful al fresco balls and dinners.

In Washington the debutantes must wait until the autumn when a short few weeks of the season is handed to them for their own. Already Capital debutantes of the coming season are grooming themselves for the fray and the winter's crop includes a number of misses who have been most popular as subdebs.

The country clubs, for this month at least, are the mecca for this younger set, and there they try their wings for the winter flight through the arduous mazes of a season in Capital society.

Ceremony Is Followed by Reception at Home of Bride's Mother.

The marriage of Miss Eleanor Margaret Waite, daughter of Mrs. William Franklin Waite, of Washington, to Mr. Henry Branch Johnson, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Branch Johnson, of Cabin John Park, Md., took place yesterday at the Central Presbyterian Church at 3 p. m. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. James H. Taylor.

Organ selections were given by Mr. R. Deane Shure, prominent Washington musician.

Palms and ferns formed an effective background for the wedding party. The two gold vases given to the church by former President Woodrow Wilson were filled with white daisies.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. James P. Waite. She wore a white satin gown, made on medieval lines, with lace yoke and sleeves terminating in points over the hands. Her skirt fell into a graceful train and her waist-length white tulle veil was held in place by bands of orange blossoms. She carried a sheaf of calla lilies.

Sister Is Maid of Honor.

Miss Louise Waite, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a frock of pale green mousseline de soie, made with short puffed sleeves, high neckline and full skirt. Her hat was pale green horsehair, trimmed with velvet of deep green, and she carried a bouquet of Joanna Hill roses.

Mr. Livingston Johnson, cousin of the bridegroom, was the best man. The ushers were Mr. Alfred Johnson, Mr. John Johnson, Mr. Leland Willis, and Mr. David Trundle. A small reception for relatives and close friends was held following the ceremony at the home of the bride's mother on Kanawha street. The home was decorated with palms, ferns, and summer flowers. Mrs. Waite, mother of the bride, wore a gown of green and brown chiffon with a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Johnson, mother of the bridegroom, was in brown and yellow chiffon, with a corsage of Joanna Hill roses and lilies of the valley.

Leave for Florida.

After the reception the young couple left for a tour of Florida and the South. The bride wore a yellow and brown plaid linen suit, with brown accessories. Upon their return, they will make their home here.

Both are graduates of American University. The bridegroom took an active part in athletics there.

The out-of-town guests included Miss Margaret Waite, of Atlanta, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. James P. Waite, of New York City.

Among the many friends of the young couple who have entertained for them during the past few weeks are Mr. John Dwyer, Miss Emily Nicklas, Miss Nelsine Howell, Mr. Livingston Johnson, Miss Florence Whitcomb, Miss Alice Olenin and Mr. Corwin Seitz.

I LOST 38 POUNDS
—without diet or exercise

I was so fat people laughed behind my back. I tried everything I had ever heard of to reduce . . . diet, exercise, purgatives . . . but nothing helped. Purgatives weakened me. Exercise left me exhausted. And I lacked the will power to diet when all my friends were eating the rich, sweet foods I adored.

Then, when I'd almost given up hope, I learned about a simple corrective for abnormal obesity, known and prescribed by physicians the world over . . . a corrective that would change the food I ate into energy instead of excess fat. I found out that this simple corrective was put up, in convenient tablets containing the right quantity, by one of the best-known medical laboratories in America.

And so I took Marmola—4 tablets a day—and quickly my excess fat began to disappear. What delighted me even more was the way I felt as a result of taking it—so mentally alert, so full of pep!

Now I'm down to normal—and never again will I let myself put on that deadening load of useless fat. Whenever I start to gain again, I take Marmola. It keeps my weight exactly right.

That in brief is what thousands who have reduced the Marmola way might well tell you. Since 1907, more than 20,000,000 packages of Marmola have been purchased. Could you ask for any better recommendation than that?

Today—buy a package of Marmola, and start at once. You will soon experience Marmola's benefits. When you have gone far enough, stop taking Marmola. And you will bless the day you first discovered this marvelous reducing agent.

Marmola is on sale by dealers everywhere—from coast to coast.

Newfoundland Is Popular Playground Easily Accessible to Visitors From United States

Varied Attractions Offered By Unique, Historical Island

Moderate Temperatures Prevail During Most of Day, While Nights Are Comfortable; Fishing and Canoeing Good.

By Darrell Preston Aub.

At the mouth of the beautiful St. Lawrence Gulf, off the east coast of Canada, is Newfoundland, tenth largest island in the world, a pleasure land easily accessible to visitors from the United States.

Contrary to general impression, Newfoundland is not an icebound, fog-swathed country. From May to October, the island enjoys a temperate climate. In July and August, the thermometer frequently reaches 80. The evenings here are cool and bracing, ideal for respite after a warm day.

Although the Icelandic sagas relate that Lief Ericson and his crew discovered Newfoundland about 1000 A. D., the first authentic discovery is accredited to John Cabot. In 1497, Cabot, a Genoese mariner, obtained a charter from King Henry VII of England to seek new territory in the New World which Columbus had discovered five years earlier. Cabot reached a port in the "New Founde Land" on the feast day of St. John, and the name of St. Johns was given the principal harbor.

Outdoors Playland.

Newfoundland is becoming the goal of a growing army of spring and summer vacationists, for here nature has displayed a lavish hand in creating a playground for those who love the outdoors.

Roughly triangular in shape, the island is about 300 miles long on each of its three sides. The coastline is extraordinarily irregular and rugged. Many large bays are studded with innumerable islands, giving the coast a scenic grandeur and charm. Narrow fjords extend their watery arms far inland. The interior is watered by countless lakes, ponds and small rivers, which are so well stocked with fish that the ardent angler may catch as many fish as he desires.

The thrill of a visit to Newfoundland begins long before one sights its rugged cliffs, for one may encounter whales and porpoises and flotillas of fishing schooners, long before reaching the island.

The approach to Newfoundland by sea is crowded with splendid and unusual sights. The rocky and irregular coastline is an almost unbroken succession of huge cliffs rising 200 to 400 feet high. The approach to St. Johns is beautiful, for ship seems to be steaming head on into the cliff ahead. Suddenly there appears a cleft in the rock, so narrow that it is invisible at sea.

Attractive City.

The visitor to St. Johns will find many pleasing aspects in the city. The most commanding structure here is the Roman Catholic Cathedral, which rises 225 feet on a high hill above the city. There are, too, a number of other fine structures. St. Bonaventura College and the Anglican, Methodist and Presbyterian colleges, the government house, the public hospital, the market house and the postoffice.

The waterfront of St. Johns is a scene of constant interest to visitors, for here the glamour of sea life reaches its height. Hardy natives go about their activities of handling and shipping enormous quantities of seal, cod and oil.

St. Johns is built upon the Avalon Peninsula, which is at the southeastern point of the huge triangular island and is connected with the island mainland by a narrow isthmus. The interior of Avalon is rugged and hilly. Rivers, lakes and apparently endless forests make the interior an ideal playground.

For the visitor who is interested in picking up antiques and provincial products there will be found happy hunting ground. Hooked rugs, hand-carved ship models and the justly famous knitted goods are among articles of native handiwork.

Rich in Minerals.

Part of the island colony of Newfoundland is Labrador, a large territory on the Canadian mainland rich in minerals, water power and timber. It possesses coastal scenery of gorgeous beauty and its rivers and lakes, as in Newfoundland, abound in salmon and trout. This is unexplored territory, comparatively, and it more and more attracts sportsmen and travelers.

The position of Newfoundland as the half-way house across the Atlantic makes it a logical air station for transatlantic flights. There is a large runway at Harbor Grace on the East Coast, which has been the destination of many fliers who have essayed the Atlantic crossing. St. Johns saw the take-off of Alcock and Brown on the first successful transatlantic airplane flight. Since then Newfoundland has witnessed the flights of Col. Lindbergh, Chamberlain, Byrd, De Pinedo, Schlee, Brock and many others.

Motor Travel Gains In Canadian Town

Fredericton, New Brunswick, June 23.—Motor tourist traffic to New Brunswick, as shown by the returns compiled today by the Canadian customs officers at the 25 ports of entry along the international border, showed an increase on May 31 of 19 per cent over the corresponding period of 1933.

"Not only is our motor tourist traffic from the United States showing a substantial increase this year, but our inquiries from nonresident anglers seeking fishing dates in New Brunswick, have jumped more than 40 per cent," said D. Leo Dolan, director of information and tourist travel for the New Brunswick government.

"Our advertising campaign started about ten days ago in United States publications. During the first five days of June the bureau of information at Fredericton handled 311 inquiries from potential tourist visitors and nonresident anglers, the largest five-day period we have experienced in some three years."

Quebec Will Keep Dust Out of Motorists' Eyes

Even if the old bus won't step along as fast as that new streamlined job next door you'll have to eat no dust in the Province of Quebec this summer. The Hon. J. E. Perrault, minister of roads for Quebec, has announced that $300,000 will be spent this year to keep Quebec's 30,000 miles of highways free of dust.

The roads over more than half of the Quebec highways system, penetrating all parts of the big province, are improved, but even in remote sections where gravel routes lead to the big fish and game, calcium chloride applications are making sure that no "smoke gets in your eyes."

Foundrymen of World Arrange Visit to D. C.

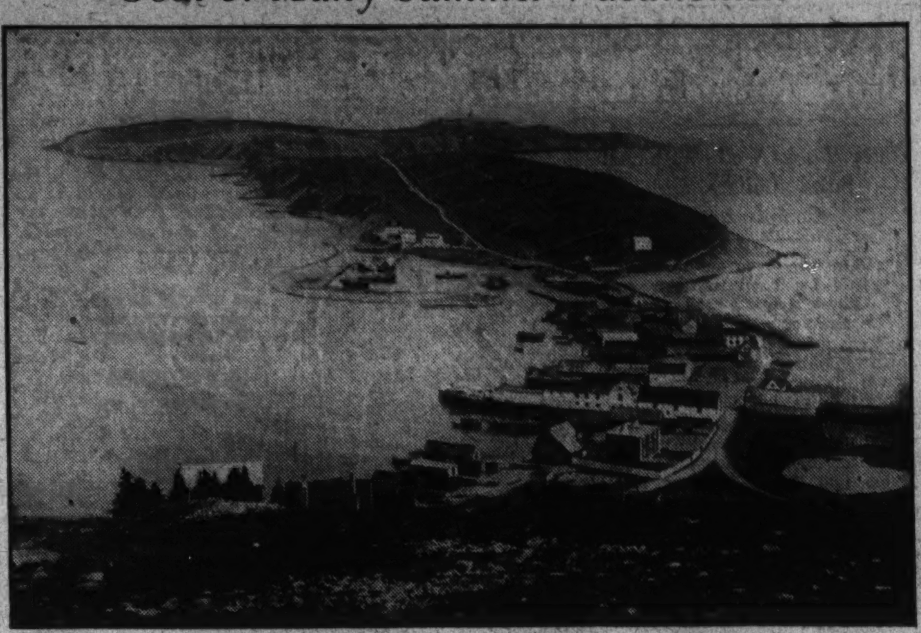
New York, June 23.—The fifth International World Foundrymen's Congress will meet in Philadelphia October 23 to 25, it is announced by George White, manager of the American Department of Thomas Cook & Son, Wagons-Lits, Inc. Delegates from Europe will arrive in New York October 10. About 100 members are expected. Arrangements for the tour are being handled by Cook's.

The foundrymen will visit Buffalo, Chicago, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Washington and Philadelphia before sailing October 27. The tour includes a trip to the Ford plant in Detroit, a visit to Niagara Falls, sightseeing at the World's Fair in Chicago. A reunion from previous meetings will be held in Washington. The international convention was last held in the United States in 1927.

Carioca Is a Mountain.

Americans who visit Rio de Janeiro on their way via the Cunarder Franconia to the Eucharistic Congress in Buenos Aires next fall will get a good view of the Carioca range of mountains, after which the new tango craze was named.

Goal of Many Summer Vacationists



Newfoundland's many large bays are studded with islands, giving the coast a scenic grandeur and charm.

Mallorca to Celebrate In Memory of Serra

New York, June 23.—George C. Gaede, passenger traffic manager of the American Export Lines, announces that his company has received the advance program for the Mallorca commemoration ceremonies for Fra Junipero Serra, founder of the California Missions. The program focuses attention on an important chapter in the history of the Pacific Territories that once belonged to Spain and the great bronze bells, graceful arches and cream gold walls that still give the exotic touch of Mallorca to the American Southwest.

The celebration will be held throughout the Island of Mallorca from July 10 to 20, with services in the little pueblo at Petra, the birthplace of the distinguished Mallorquin, pioneer of the Franciscan Order in America.

Ice River Valley Tour Is Scheduled

Banff, Alberta, June 23.—The Ice River Valley, a seldom-visited region of the Canadian Rockies, will be the main objective of this year's official four-day ride by the trail riders of the Canadian Rockies July 27-30, inclusive.

The starting point for the 42-mile trek has been set just east of the Leanchoil (B. C.) station of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Students Leave July 3 On Scandinavian Trip

Final itinerary arrangements for the first American school movement to Sweden was completed this week under the direction of Robert C. French, head master of the Garey School, at Aberdeen, Md.

The traveling summer school will leave New York July 3 on the Swedish-American liner Gripsholm. The event marks the initial step in the Swedish cooperative educational plan, to enable youths to hold a "tour and study" course in Scandinavia this summer.

Curacao's Own Souvenir.

A popular souvenir picked up by passengers on the Mauretania's Sea Breeze Cruises to the West Indies and South America, is a bottle of curacao, purchased in the island of the same name. It is flavored by the aromatic orange which grows nowhere else but Curacao. The liqueur is made in Holland, to which country the oranges are shipped.

American Group Sails June 27 to Study Soviet

A group of Americans will sail for Russia June 27 in the Aquitania to make a new study of the government and economic system of Soviet Russia, according to an announcement by the Cunard Line.

The group, to be known as the Second Russian Seminar, will travel under the leadership of several specialists, including Prof. Samuel H. Cross, of Harvard University.

Scenic Area Slated To Be Kept Intact

A recent item of interest to nature lovers is the decision of the National Forest Service Commission to withhold from settlement the 240,000 acres of scenic grandeur on the Sun River in northwestern Montana. The region to be perpetuated is 35 miles long and 15 miles wide, and tips the northern section of Glacier National Park.

While almost as wild as before the advent of the white man, it is now being listed as the most primitive of American scenic spectacles by the American Express Co. in its cooperative railroad program of "Circle Tours" to exploit the American West this summer.

World's Southernmost City.

Punta Arenas, now called Magallanes, is the southernmost city in the world. It is located on the Straits of Magellan, in the south of Chile. The temperature averages 50 degrees in summer and 38 degrees in winter. Although it rains or snows almost daily, 25,000 people live there.

Sunday Eve Supper Bid Is an Honor

Only Intimate Friends Invited to These Affairs.

Simple Menus Are Served as Informally as Possible.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

IF YOU receive a calling card with "Buffet supper at 7 o'clock, Sunday, July 1" written across the top, count yourself fortunate. Such an invitation comes only from an intimate friend, and the Sunday night buffet supper is the most delightful entertainment on the list.

The hostess who knows her rules on these intimate little meals won't plan anything elaborate. Nothing of the terrapin-champagne type is suitable. Simple dishes and simple decorations are in good taste. The intricate centerpiece and the lace-inserted, heavily embroidered table cloth will be rserved for the formal dinner.

Hot Dishes Last.

A plain white linen cloth is appropriate. A bowl of flowers in the center of the table with candles at either end also fits into the picture. Dishes of sandwiches, salad, stacks of plates, forks and spoons, cups and saucers, and a coffee service are placed on the table next. Later, at the hour set for the supper, hot dishes—which may be creamed chicken, croquettes, creamed eggs,, or lobster Newburg, with scalloped potatoes or baked macaroni and hot buttered rolls, are brought in.

Card tables may be arranged near chairs in the living room where guests may sit after serving themselves at the table. Dessert is served at the card tables later.

The Dutch Buffet.

An even more informal type of Sunday night entertainment is the "Dutch buffet supper," including nothing hot except coffee. Dishes of liverwurst, baked ham, potato salad, two or three kinds of cheese, pickles and rye bread take the place of the daintier dishes appropriate to the other Sunday supper. Beer is served at the card tables, and later, dessert.

An invitation to a supper of the latter type may be given the day before over the telephone or in an informal note.

Query—Is it proper to remain standing through the entire wedding ceremony, even when the bride and groom kneel for the final prayer?

Answer—Guests should remain standing during the entire ceremony, from the time the bride's mother walks down the aisle.

Query—Please suggest some suitable wedding gift (not costing over $5) for me to give a cousin of mine who has just married.

Answer—A linen luncheon or breakfast set, half dozen wine or cocktail glasses, a table lamp or a picture would be suitable.

Requires a Reply.

Query—Won't you please tell me if an invitation to a wedding reception requires a formal acceptance or regret?

Answer—An invitation to a wedding reception requires a reply. It should be written on the first page of a sheet of note paper. Although hand-written, the words should be spaced as though they were engraved and in keeping with the words of the invitation. For instance, an acceptance should go like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis White
accept with pleasure
Mr. and Mrs. Lee Thomas
Browning's
kind invitation for
Wednesday the second of June

A regret should be phrased as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis White
regret that they are unable to accept
Mr. and Mrs. Lee Thomas
Browning's
kind invitation for
Wednesday the second of June

Query—If there is a guest of honor at a bridge party, should the person who wins the high-score prize present it to the guest of honor?

Answer—The person who wins the high score prize should not present it to the guest of honor. The hostess should provide another gift for the honoree.

Query—A friend of mine recently told me the tea wagon had gone out of style. Please inform me if she was right.

Answer—The tea wagon has gone out of style in ultra-fashionable circles, but it is still virtually indispensable in a servantless house.

No Maid or Butler.

Query—I have no maid or butler. When I am having guests to dinner, should I greet them at the door, or should my husband greet them first?

Answer—When receiving dinner or luncheon guests, your husband should open the door to greet them. On other occasions when visitors ring, you should open the door.

Query—I am going to be married at a church. I plan to have six bridesmaids and a maid of honor. The wedding party will also include six groomsmen and a best man. As yet, however, I have not decided whom to have for flower girl and ring bearer. Is it absolutely necessary to have either or both of these in a big wedding?

Answer—It is not necessary to have either the flower girl or the ring bearer.

Query—How long should a widow wait to remarry? Also please tell me in detail how a second marriage ceremony should be arranged.

Answer—A widow is supposed to wait a year before she marries again. This second ceremony should be a quiet one in a chapel or at home. Her wedding dress should be a simple afternoon frock, worn with a hat. She may have one attendant, but usually does not.

Friend Has Birthday.

Query—I am sending a birthday gift to one of my friends whom I haven't seen in a long time. Please tell me whether I should send a note with it and, if so, what should I say? I haven't exchanged letters with this friend in a long time.

Answer—Sending a note with the gift is not necessary, but it would lend a personal touch. You might write a note of this type:

Dear Helen:

Today is your birthday and I want to send you my heartiest congratulations and best wishes for many happy returns of the day. I hope the little gift that goes with this will prove to be something that will be of use. Fondly,

MARY.

Hope Ridings Miller answers questions on etiquette in The Sunday Post. When personal replies are desired, self-addressed, stamped envelopes should accompany the question.

The GENTLE SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

A Man Who—

Being a model address for a Congressional wife campaigning this summer before women's groups.

"LADIES—I AM NOT going to bore you this afternoon with any dry-as-dust discussion of my husband's platform. I know you do not give a tinker's damn (Editor's note—It might be better to substitute "darn" with some audiences) about my husband's stand on Dr. Tugwell, Dr. Wirt, or even the carryings on of the Mdivani brothers. I know you do not care who his grandfather voted for in 1868. But I know you will be interested in learning why every wife—and every would-be wife—should vote for him.

"He has never been known to throw a newspaper on the floor after reading it.

"When he calls up to say he has to work late, he scrupulously explains where, when and with whom he is going to dine.

"He does not explode if any one touches his pipe, razor blades, fishing tackle, buttons, pieces of string, or accumulations of cigar bands.

"When a motorist in front makes a wrong turn or hogs the road, he does not exclaim, 'Another woman driver!'

"He will sit sweetly attentive through an entire evening listening to my friends discuss permanents, banana diets and the merits of two-way stretch girdles.

"He is politely attentive to my plain women friends and politely indifferent to the fascinating ones.

"He never turns to stare appraisingly at a pretty woman—at least, not when I am with him. He never gapes at a scantily dressed one nor snickers at a homely one. And he never comes home indignanat because some bounder of a married man at his office has been trying to make a date with some pretty little stenographer who has fled to him for protection.

"When a woman's name is mentioned, he does not immediately ask, 'How old is she?'

"He never speaks of club women as 'old hens.'

"He does not refer to women past 45 as elderly nor to those past 35 as middle-aged, and he does not ask my spinster friends every time he meets them when they are going to get married.

"He does not straighten his tie every time a cutie smiles at him.

"He constantly tells me I am as beautiful as Cleopatra, as stylish as Gloria Swanson, as intellectual as Sappho, as IT-ish as Jean Harlow and that no woman he has ever seen on stage or screen or behind a cigar counter could compare with me."

June Anvil Chorus.

"I SEE where Sadie Slipper's marrying Hal Sparks."

"You don't mean it! She'll be about his third, won't she?"

At least. I guess, though, Sadie couldn't be too particular. She was getting on. Did you hear about Mabel Dobyns?"

"No."

"She's engaged to Sam Nutter."

"Not that fat slob! He's getting terribly bald in the back."

"Yes, but his folks have oodles of money."

"Well, all I can say is, she can have him. I never could see him. You know he tried to get every girl in town."

"I'll say he did. Did you know Sonia March finally got Earl Dodger?"

"You don't mean it! Well, she'll certainly have her hands full with his temper."

"Yes, and her mother."

"Well, all I can say is I bet it don't last six months."

"I bet it won't either."

It is far more effective to pick lint off a man's coat lapel than to pull motes out of his eye.

One of life's mysteries—Why parrot-nosed women invariably buy green hats.

One never realizes how many rich men there are in the world until hearing the descriptions of June bridegrooms as given by relatives of June brides.

Whenever a woman tries on at home the unbecoming hat she bought downtown under the spell of the saleswoman, she decides that after all it's personality that counts.

Plain Shirts Are Best Bet For Any Man

They Look Well With All Suits, Collars and Complexions.

SOME men have an undeniable flair for being well dressed. Others have just as pronounced a flair for selecting colors and patterns that make even casual beholders wince. No wonder their wives insist upon tagging along when they go shopping.

The man who has any reason to doubt he lacks the intuitive clothes sense of a Beau Brummel can climb into the well-dressed class simply by observing a few rules. At least, that is all that's necessary where shirts are concerned.

Rule 1 demands the pattern of the suit should be different from the pattern of the shirt. The more fanciful the suit is in color or design, the plainer the shirt should be. All of which means it is impossible to reach the saturation point in plain white shirts.

Here Are the Rules.

Here are some more rules: Plain shirt patterns or those with tiny stripes or fine checks are best for plain suits. They are also the best choice for herringbone or fine-striped suits. Shadow checked shirts or those with infinitesimal stripes are satisfactory with plaid suits, although a plain shirt is undoubtedly smarter.

And now for the material of the suit. Rough fabrics, cheviots and tweeds look their best when combined with flannel or Oxford-weave shirts. Worsted suits get along happily with madras, broadcloth or Oxford shirts.

Madras and broadcloth are developed in all sorts of unusual colors this year. A shade of yellow that borders on lemon is good looking with white Palm Beach suit and blue tie, providing the man's complexion can stand that combination.

Purple shirts are attracting a deal of attention. They naturally would. It must be admitted, however, that not all of it is favorable. For the business man these deep heliotrope affairs are a bit "arty."

Short colored bosoms with narrow pleating distinguish some of the new imported madras shirts. The cuffs and collars are in the same material and color. The lightweight body of the shirt is usually white or in a paler shade of the bosom's hue.

Their Suave Lines Make Them Suitable for Any Summer Daytime Affair

Most Useful Costume

EVENING CLOTHES MAY possess high brilliance or classic beauty. Street costumes may be mannishly tailored or sleekly feminine. Sports clothes may be practical or decorative. But spectator sports clothes can be anything and everything. They may be developed in silk, cotton, linen or wool. They may be intensely practical while being just as intensely decorative.

* * * *

Best of all, they may be worn for street, for travel, for informal afternoon affairs; in fact, for everything but formal affairs and active sports. The versatility of this type of costume makes it ideal for the American woman whose life is full of "little things."

* * * *

The European woman spends most of her time in her home. When she does step out, it is usually for a stroll on the boulevard, for a visit to the theater, opera or dinner in a glittering restaurant. This means she can get along beautifully with very casual clothes and very formal clothes. The former she wears within her own home. The latter she dons when she is going places.

* * * *

But the American woman attends numerous small daytime affairs. She dashes out to club meetings, to bridge parties, feminine luncheons and teas, to country club affairs. If she has given her clothes problem much thought, she has undoubtedly discovered the most all-round costume she can own in the summer time is a little dress, ensemble or suit that fits in the spectator sports category.

* * * *

Novelty Materials For Sports

WASHINGTON SHOPS, in addition to the customary linens, boucles and sheer wools, have several new materials made into stunning spectator sports things this season. The materials themselves may not always be startlingly new, but their use for sports attire is strictly a 1934 development. Take string lace, for instance. Like ordinary lace, it doesn't crush, yet it has a much less dressy appearance, which is all to the good where sports apparel is concerned.

* * * *

Cut-out embroidery is another fabric being used for spectator sports dresses and ensembles this summer. It is cool, has a crisp appearance, and adapts itself sweetly to fairly tailored lines. Many of the smartest cut-out embroidery costumes are in dark colors. Navy is every bit as fashionable now as it was two or three months ago. Brown is forging ahead daily.

* * * *

But genuinely new is a dusky shade of green that approximates the color of evergreen trees at twilight. Light slips are worn under dark frocks to give them a summery look. White, ecru, lemon, yellow or palest pink look well under navy blue. The same tints are grand beneath brown cut-out embroidery, although the pink may be several shades darker than that worn with navy.

* * * *

Accessories Work Wonders

LINES ARE AS IMPORTANT for spectator sports things as for tailored clothes. The idea is to keep everything simple, but to corral a dash of novelty if it can be managed discreetly. Thus, a svelte brown string dress that "sculps" the figure has two ropes of contrasting velvet tied about the waist. Shorter ropes of burnt orange and green are twirled into a bow at the collarless neckline. Could anything be more incongruous than cotton string and silk velvet?

* * * *

Yet the effect is what designers invariably characterize as smart. Other string lace dresses have wide tailored belts of contrasting canvas or felt. Those who never get enough of initials or monograms can design their own, whack them out of canvas or felt, then attach them to dresses with which the belts are to be worn. Canvas or felt bags complete the accessory ensemble idea.

* * * *

In fact, accessories are the things that make or break the spectator sports costume. A perfectly plain gray crinkly cotton dress becomes downright urbane if black linen hat, black linen envelope bag, emerald green wide belt and emerald green gauntlets are added. The green can be exchanged for firemen's red, deep-sea blue or grape purple whenever the wearer's mood calls for a bit of variety.

Fashion Foibles Of the Famous

This is the last of a series of articles telling of the styles introduced by queens, empresses, and other noted women in history.

The Empress Eugenie.

THE famous Titian hair of the Empress Eugenie was always brought out to the best advantage in the costumes of its owner, who was the fashion leader of France during the reign of her husband, Napoleon III. Lilac was a favorite color of the empress and she usually wore violets in her corsage. Among her other favorite colors were water green, lemon, pearl gray, and the various shades of blue, all of which were effective with her transparent skin and delicate coloring. Silver and white was her favorite combination on regal occasions.

Though she dressed quietly at home—usually in simple black cloth—Eugenie was fond of dress in public. Her trousseau contained a flounce of Alencon lace upon which 36 women had worked 18 months. When she went to the opening of the Suez Canal, on a two-month absence, she carried 250 gowns with her.

Eugenie was the inventor of many practical fashions, including invisible hair nets, colored petticoats and the summer umbrella. During the latter part of her reign she made a religious vow never to wear silk again but to dress in brown wool. After that for a long time even her ball dresses and dinner gowns were of this material.

White Pique Omnipresent In Capital

Starched Material Seen All Day and Far Into the Night.

THERE seems to be no code for the working hours of the humbler fabrics in the minds of fashionable Washington this summer. White pique starched to the last degree and polished with a hot iron is on duty from sunset to dawn and a less stiffly laundered variety of this material serves many a matron and maid from sunup to sunset. Other cotton fabrics that have been raised to the realm of smartness this summer are gingham, voile and their demure cousin, calico.

At a luncheon at one of the country clubs last week the predominance of gingham dresses with wide-brimmed hats and gauntlet gloves to match was a matter of comment. The gingham dresses included tiny pin checks, Scotch plaids, striped effects. At this luncheon flowered pique dresses with hats to match were also noted.

Mrs. Henry C. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, went shopping last week in a suit of white mesh material with a huge organdie bow at the neck. Mrs. Wallace wore a wide-brimmed white felt hat.

Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, who likes to wear white in the summer, is wearing a particularly effective costume in white silk pique with a fagotted yoke. The sleeves come well below the elbows. With this Representative Rogers wears a chic white straw hat.

Lady Lewis, wife of Sir Wilmott Lewis, was seen lunching at one of the down-town hotels last week in a cool-looking sports dress of striped, mercerized gingham. The stripes were in cream, tan and blue. Lady Lewis had on a wide-brimmed natural colored straw hat.

Mrs. George Murray, in the same luncheon party, had on a dress of figured cotton and silk, made with a deep cape to form short sleeves. With this she wore a very large black straw hat.

Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, who has arrived at her summer home in Newport, R. I., from a tour of Europe, had on at one of the out-of-door events a white silk knitted dress with a knotted collar and elbow sleeves. Her hat was white felt.

Mrs. Frank W. Mondell looked smart at a recent out-of-door tea party in a dress of blue and white figured material with which she wore a wide-brimmed white straw hat.

Shops Offer Useful Helps To Gardener

Rose Shears and Tool Baskets Make Season's Debut.

By Katherine Smith.

WHERE LARKSPUR LIFTS blue blossoms that match the sky and nasturtiums are bright and golden, where lilies are timid and palely beautiful and roses reach long arms over fence and arbor—that may be your garden. Then again, where a few green pots add a touch of color indoors, or the sunshine rests on blooms on a window sill—that may be your garden.

A plot of ground, however large or small, holds a charm for all of us. The dust may gather indoors while the garden is being cared for. And manufacturers have produced all sorts of charming and useful gadgets for indoor or outdoor gardening.

* * * *

Garden Utensils.

Let's begin with the garden itself. Copper watering cans with long, straight spouts—modern, silly things—cost little more than $1. A green can with a removable nozzle costs $1.

When you clip roses, protect your hands from the thorns with new efficient shears, now being sold. They cut the stem and hold the blossom upright until you want to release it. No more thorns, no more groping to hold the stem.

* * * *

Handy Baskets.

A nice gift for the amateur gardener—a sturdy basket containing trowel, weeder and transplanting trowel. There is another basket with a long cane thrust through the middle. Why? Stick the cane in the sod—a pointed metal tip is there for that purpose—and there need be no stooping and breaking of backs to get the flowers in the container.

* * * *

Oaken Buckets.

The old oaken bucket comes out of the well and pertly offers to hold your loveliest potted plants. To begin at the beginning, a flat circle of wood has a chain looped over the edge. At each end of the chain swings a little brass-bound bucket. They may be hanged on the porch, dripping ferns or ivy in a truly coy fashion.

There are green metal pot stands with pots to match. The stands are simple, sturdy and light, gracefully modeled and suitable for small spaces. Sizes and prices vary.

* * * *

Window Boxes.

What a wide assortment of window boxes there are this year! Every color, size and price. Green and red, cream and yellow, they frame a window with charm and the most aristocratic blooms will feel comfortable in them.

* * * *

Wrought Iron Table.

There's a little wrought-iron table that can be used not only as an end table, but as a stand for your choicest vase filled with your choicest flowers. The tabletop is a tray, copper and shining, that fits into the iron frame. The tables are tiny and square, large and oblong. They are priced from $3 to a little over $5.

So bring the garden into the house, and let these gadgets make it easier for you.

Season Opens For Sun Tan And Blisters

By Ruth Anne Davis.

IN THE summer a woman's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of tan. Either she wonders how to get it or how not to get it. Whether to buy it or risk burning. And what to do with it after she has it.

When she goes to the beach, or plays tennis in the broiling sun, she should always carry along a sun cream or sun oil. The oil mediates the burn, but the cream is surer for scaring it away entirely. In the evening, if she feels called upon to emerge from her boudoir two shades darker, it's a matter of ten minutes to rub a good clinging foundation lotion over her arms, neck, face and back, and put suntan powder over this. Or she can use a specially prepared "film," really a fine coating—that won't come off until it's creamed over.

THIS MODERN mermaid is acquiring her sun-tan the scientific way—slowly, that is, using lots of oil.

Beware of the Sun!

Every woman, blonde, brunette or a combination, should take tanning—or not tanning—seriously. When she's exposed to the sun for any length of time she should certainly use a sun lotion. Either one that permits a light tan, or prevents one.

When it comes to tanning there's the matter of lashes. They're liable to bleach and to dry, and break off. But if they're brushed over with a good reliable eyelash grower they will continue to stay sleek-groomed and healthy.

One can hardly say to the gardenia brunette or the blonde—don't tan! But to the woman past 35 it's a different matter. The sun dries the skin and makes it more prone to wrinkles (too much sun, of course). And the tan tone inevitably makes a woman appear older than she actually is.

Should 16-Year-Old Kiss Boy Friends Good Night?

By Mary Haworth.

MY DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am 16 and just beginning to go out with boys. What I want to know is whether I have to let them kiss me, because they seem to expect it when they bring me home?

Sometimes I like it and sometimes I don't. What I mean is, I like some boys to kiss me but others I'd rather not, but I don't want them to think I'm a short sport.

What can I say or do to stop them without making them think I am a prude? JEAN W.

Kiss Not Obligatory.

MY DEAR JEAN W.: No girl owes a boy a good-night kiss in payment for an evening's entertainment. In the first place, a boy doesn't seek a girl's company unless she has attracted him—by her good looks, her gayety, her popularity, her companionability, or her social accomplishments.

* * * *

A girl should remember that when accepting a boy's attentions. Then she will realize she does him favor enough when she consents to spend an evening in his company. Boys accept girls at much the same evaluation girls put upon themselves.

* * * *

It is only your youth and inexperience which make you afraid boys may think you a "short sport" or a "prude" if you don't kiss them good night. When you are a little older, you will understand that the courage to say "no" to a kiss you don't want is part of being sophisticated, while to accept one you don't want is to be spineless and "easy."

One Woman's Theory.

ONE OF THE loveliest and most-sought-after actresses of the stage and screen—said by Mary Pickford to have the greatest magnetism of any woman in Hollywood—gives this bit of advice to girls:

"Always manage to look your loveliest and most enticing when saying 'good night,' but don't let him kiss you, if you want to make sure he calls again."

* * * *

To that I would add—at the risk of sounding old-fashioned and preachy, perhaps, that it really does pay a girl to be very, very economical with her kisses. Popular romance to the contrary, a boy seldom falls in love with the girl he finds he can kiss after the first occasion or two.

* * * *

Since the dawn of civilization, poets and artists have emphasized the spiritual beauty of the first kiss of real love. It is something worth waiting for, and scarcely to be expected when a girl is 16. It comes a little later, usually not until after she is 20. And she will miss the full value of this experience if she has known too many careless kisses before.

How to Be Tactful.

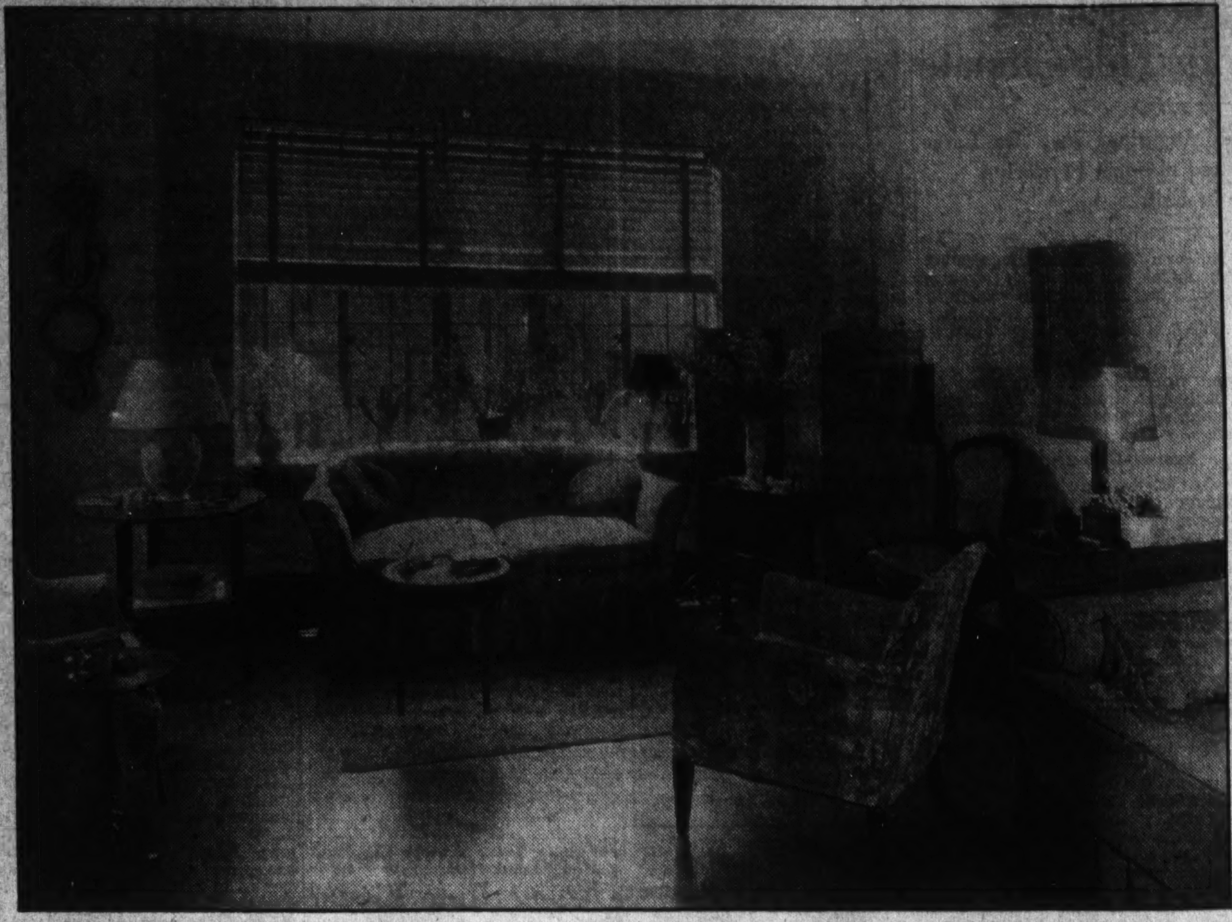
THE BEST PLAN for avoiding being labeled a prig or a prude is to develop a casual and light-hearted attitude toward boys and toward the question of being kissed. A fund of gay conversation up to the moment of saying "good night," should keep the most love-smitten youth at arm's length.

* * * *

However, if in spite of your nonchalance, he precipitates a situation where you have to decide to kiss or not to kiss, you may laughingly brush the suggestions aside. Laugh with the boy—not AT him; don't hurt his feelings nor injure his dignity—as though you both realize it's just a joke.

* * * *

Either course makes you master of the situation, and will have the boy wondering. When a boy can't quite figure out your reactions, you become just twice as attractive in his eyes. When a boy finds he can have fun in your company, even without kissing you, you are elected to the rank of pal in his eyes. And any boy in his teens would rather have a pal for a sweetheart than just a girl he can kiss.



THE SECRET OF ACHIEVING charm in an old house, furnished with old things, is first to decide upon a color scheme. Then adhere to it religiously. Slip covers help turn the trick—and don't be afraid to exclude too-impossible pieces.

Slipcovers Provide Method For Blending Odds and Ends

Decorators Often Find Relic Pieces in Better Taste Than Too-Bright Modern Products—Example of Room Done in Old Style.

THERE ARE MANY professional decorators who declare that they would rather work with old furniture and an old house than to assemble the too-bright pieces of new furniture in the too-sparkling and severe new structure. The work of such decorators is usually known for its charm, for with old pieces there is, when lines are good and colors harmonious, an atmosphere of good taste seldom achieved with brand-new things. Such rooms usually fall back on the slip cover as a simple means of relating odds and ends of furniture, seemingly bringing it into the same style family.

Such a room is shown here; old woodwork, old window trims and needless ornament were stripped from the walls; they were then painted light robin's egg blue.

The major upholstered pieces, such as the sofa in the window, the chaise lounge, a large armchair and a small armchair, were then disguised under slip covers of an interesting striped chintz.

Details of Decoration.

The chintz is chocolate brown, robin's egg blue and faded pink, the wide stripes of the dark color, and the faded pink appearing in it in luscious English roses. Brown was used for the plain covers of a day bed, a slip cover made with a simple tailored, pleated valance around the bottom; small Victorian side chairs were newly upholstered in brown sateen; an old three-panel screen was covered in gold tea chest paper and small colorful prints.

The windows were given new Venetian blinds, painted the same delightful blue as the walls, and were left uncurtained for the summer. The floor was stained a rich walnut brown, rubbed with wax and polished, and also left bare for the summer, except for small scatter rugs of old hooked patterns, although a chocolate brown chenile rug is used in the winter.

A number of small tables and other small pieces of furniture were refinished in walnut color and waxed to a dull glow to resemble antique pieces. Lampshades in this room are eggshell parchment; lamp bases are eggshell pottery, lapis blue pottery and old tore in black and gold.

The secret of re-creating an old room into something as charming as this room is first to decide upon a color scheme, then adhere to it religiously, adding quality fabrics in the slip covers and draperies, and not being afraid to exclude a few of the too-impossible pieces from the old room.

Good lamps and shades are cheaper than ever this summer; fine chintzes and linens for decorating are in better patterns and colors than in any season previous, and there is always the willing cabinet maker who will help you restore, refinish and remodel good pieces of furniture for a new life in a remade room.

Victory Over Summer Heat Is Obtainable

THERE are various ways and means of accomplishing a strategic victory over the enervating heat of summer. Of first importance is keeping the rooms of one's home as cool as possible.

One way to do this is to keep the windows and doors closed and shades drawn during the hottest part of the day. Another is to have awnings over each window, and over doorways not sheltered by porch or portico. Awnings have been proven by actual survey to be a very real help in reducing indoor temperature.

Electric fans make a big contribution. They furnish a constant current of changing air which evaporates body moisture and creates a comfortably cooling atmosphere on the hottest day or night.

Of inestimable value are ventilating fans for the kitchen—always a summer purgatory for the woman who does her own housework. Seldom is the kitchen of a city apartment so well ventilated as to provide a cross-current of fresh air, and in such instances the installation of a wall-type or window-type ventilating fan is advisable.

Liquid Diet Aids Health In Summer

Body Needs More Water to Increase Rate of Perspiration.

WHEN the temperature is high the body demands far more liquid than it needs on a cold day.

Do not worry if you find yourself paying frequent visits to the water pitcher or tap. You are merely securing liquid to take the place of that which has been lost by perspiration during the past hour or so. Perspiration is the method used by a healthy body to get rid of its excess heat. With the liquid which sometimes seems so annoying, we lose much of the heat of the body and many of the impurities which we might find it very difficult to get rid of were it not for heat and its companion, perspiration.

Instead of attempting to drink less so that you will perspire less, rather lean toward the other extremity and drink more so that you will perspire more. You are not likely to drink yourself to death if you limit your beverages to those which come from nature's receptacles—be they wells, mountain streams or the cells of some healthful fruit.

Certain beverages are extremely popular in certain sections of the country. Many farm hands have been brought up to appreciate a pail of spring water into which a handful of oatmeal has been stirred. Others seek the dairy on their trips across the farm to drink a glass of ice cold milk or possibly of buttermilk. Still others prefer to drink direct from an ice cold spring of water.

Fresh cider, raspberry vinegar, grape juice and lemonade all have their following. Of late years with fruits of various kinds always obtainable, the fruit punch or a drink made from the juices of several fruits has become quite popular.

Drinks containing the juice of oranges or lemons are among the most desirable of all. These fruits contain minerals, salts, and are rich in vitamin C. Thus they are extremely healthful as well as delicious. Few drinks quench the thirst and satisfy so thoroughly as a large glass of good old-fashioned lemonade. No matter how pleasing some of the combination drinks may seem, it is doubtful if they will ever entirely supplant this old favorite.

Here is a recipe for a lemon drink which may be prepared and served at any time:

(Serves 6.)

6 lemons
¾ to 1 cup sugar
6 cups cold water
Lemon slices

Extract lemon juice, add sugar to taste, and stir until dissolved. Then add water and serve immediately, pouring into glasses over crushed ice. Place a lemon slice over the rim of each glass.

Don't Say "Don't" to a Child To Obtain Willing Obedience

By Alice Fox Pitts.

AN EMINENT psychologist once placed a dish of dried beans on the table in a room where half a dozen children, under 10 years of age, were playing happily with their toys, then went out to watch through the keyhole to see what happened.

The children continued to play with their toys. He returned and said: "Now, children, whatever you do, I don't want you to stuff those beans up your noses," and left the room to watch again. Instantly all five children left their toys and—need I tell the end of the story?

We are all prone, more than we realize, to put ideas into children's heads by the power of suggestion, and then complain because they adopt them.

"Mary, you haven't had a vegetable yet today, so I particularly want you to eat your spinach," suggests to Mary that she can create a scene by refusing. Don't give her that advantage; and if she does refuse, on principle, don't make an issue of it. Give her a glass of tomato juice instead and let the spinach go until some other time.

"Oh, dear, Junior, your nails look terrible. You'll never get them clean for Jimmy's party this afternoon." When you say that, your perturbation fills Junior with pride. Instead, give him an orangewood stick wound with absorbent cotton and dipped in cuticle remover and show him how to get the dirt from under those grubby nails. The dirtier they are, the more fun in scraping them clean.

Don't let him know that he presents a problem; don't put ideas in his head; don't make an issue of anything unless it is a matter of prime necessity. If you give him an opportunity to rouse you to excitement, he'll do it, for children, like adults, like to be the center of attention.

If any of the following problems are baffling you, check in the space indicated the ones on which you would like Mrs. Pitts to base future articles.

Does your child:

Dawdle over going to bed, washing the dishes, or at other unpleasant tasks?........

Show defiance to your orders?........

Run away from home periodically?........

Tease and annoy smaller children?........

Exhibit shyness in the presence of strangers?........

Refuse to eat?........

Never wash if he can possibly avoid it?........

Break expensive toys and then ask, "What can I do now?"........

Quarrel ceaselessly with brothers and sisters?..........

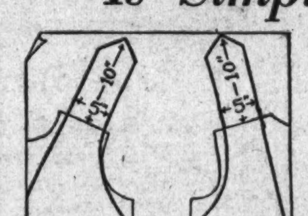
This Sun Tan Dress Is Simple to Create



Plaid Running on Bias Gives Slender Effect to the Figure.

WHETHER YOU expect to don a coat of tan or not, you will enjoy wearing a suntan dress. Make it of gingham and do choose one of the smart new plaids.

The plaid runs on the bias of the goods in some of them, and the bias lines of the pattern give a very slender effect to the figure. If the plaid you like is on the straight of the goods, you can cut your dress on the bias to get this effect. To do this you will need to make a seam down the center front of the dress, and don't forget to add a seam allowance to the center front of your pattern.

If you cut the dress on the bias, you will need about half a yard more material than if it is cut on the straight of the goods.

Narrow Bias Facing.

You can use your plain dress pattern as a foundation for making a pattern for a dress like this one.

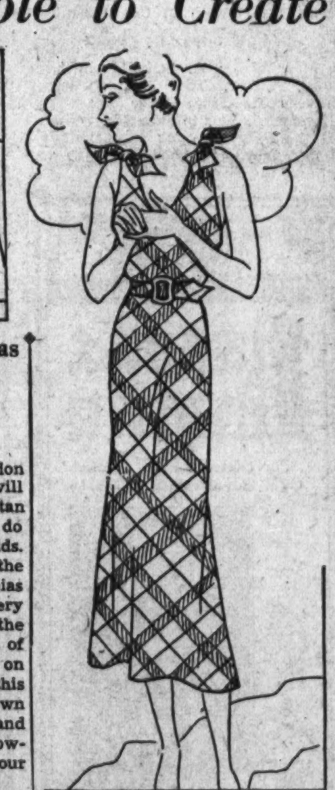
Place the front and the back of the plain waist pattern on a large piece of paper and draw around them, as shown by the light lines in the diagram at the left.

When this is done, outline a deep V-neckline in the front and a still deeper one in the back, and continue these lines on beyond the shoulder seam lines of the waist pattern to make the shoulder ties as indicated here in the diagram by the heavy lines.

As shown here, the ties are 5 inches wide and 10 inches long. It is not absolutely necessary to cut them in one with the waist, as a seam where they join the shoulder lines of the waist would not show under the knot, but be sure to outline them all in one with the waist when you are making the pattern so they will be the right shape to fit perfectly.

A very narrow bias facing is the best finish to use for the neckline and the armholes. Prepared bias tape is useful for making finishes of this kind, and it is a good thing to have it on hand, as it saves the trouble of cutting narrow bias strips.

The shoulder ties should be made double—that is, faced with self material.



THIS SMART plaid gingham sun-tan dress can be made according to the simple instructions given herewith.

Perspiration Stains Yield To Salt Bath

WITH the thermometer hovering around 100, there is going to be plenty of discomfort caused, not only from the excessive heat but also from the danger of forming perspiration stains on delicate dresses.

Here is one successful plan for removing such unsightly stains:

Goods that will bear cold water may be successfully treated for perspiration stains by soaking overnight in a strong salt water solution. Use just enough water to cover the goods well and rinse well afterward to remove the salt. This is comparatively safe, as the salt holds the dyestuff.

If the garment is silk, after rinsing roll it up between some large turkish towels or a sheet to take up the surplus moisture before hanging it out to dry. This prevents water streaks.

Another way is to use one teaspoonful of ammonia, three teaspoonfuls of alcohol, two teaspoonfuls of ether and two teaspoonfuls of soft water. Apply as for any other stain.

Delphiniums Grown From Seed Need Care to Thrive

Summer Sowing Is Declared Preferable in This Climate

Seedlings From June or July Plantings May Be Large Enough to Be Transplanted to Some Flowering Quarters in Fall.

By Crowell Baynes.

Delphiniums are in their late June glory, the pride of gardeners who are successful in growing the fine hybrid strains. In Washington it seems to take considerable care and skill to grow these from seed, but they are well worth the effort.

In Washington, summer seeding is usually preferable, as early as it is possible to obtain seed. Seedlings from late June or early July sowings may be large enough to transplant to flowering quarters in the fall. Later seedings may need to stay in a cold frame until spring.

Whether in a box, in a clay seedpan, or a frame, the soil for seeding should be a rather sandy mixture with a leaf mold or peat enough to hold plenty of water. Formaldehyde dust added to the soil helps to prevent damping-off. Fresh seed will usually germinate promptly and vigorously, but with many of the hybrid strains the late germinating seed produce the finest flowers.

Success With Delphiniums.

One of the most successful delphinium growers in this vicinity carries her seedlings through the late summer in boxes on a low table on the north side of her home. The legs of the table are in cans of water to foil the slugs and snails, which are extremely fond of young delphiniums. The boxes are about a foot square and eight inches deep. An inch or more of pebbles provides good drainage, and the soil is a rich mixture of a light loam enriched with leafmold and cow manure.

She transplants from her seed boxes to those growing boxes as soon as the seedlings have produced their second leaves. In the fall the stronger plants go into the border and the growing boxes go to the cold frame. Each box will accommodate from a dozen to 20 seedlings for the summer and about half as many for the winter. She covers young plants lightly with leaves held down by evergreen boughs. The plants wintered in frames, she transplants about the middle of May.

Farther north, delphiniums are grown in full sun, but in Washington they seem to appreciate some shade, at least during the heat of the day. The soil should be rich and fibrous and must be well drained to protect the crowns from standing water in winter. A bed raised 6 or 8 inches above the general level is good winter insurance.

Bloom Following Summer.

Planted soon, delphiniums should bloom well next summer and should be about at the height of their glory the following year. Early spring plantings may or may not flower the first year. In Washington delphiniums ordinarily are not long lived, but some amateur growers are successful in dividing three-year plants. Commercial growers get a rapid increase of desirable plants by rooting cuttings from the early spring growth.

A. C. Hottes, a leading plant authority, says a good preventative of delphinium diseases is to dig into the soil in spring a small quantity of dry Bordeaux mixture, and to follow up by Bordeaux sprays several times before the blooming season.

All the higher growing delphiniums and the large flowering hybrids require careful staking. June and July thundershowers accompanied by high winds often wreck the results of months' careful work, and a towering spike of delphinium is well worth the additional work of staking it securely.

Delphinium time is also the blooming season of the Madonna lily and the Regal lily, both of which thrive in about the same soil mixture which the delphiniums like best. These make a combination hard to beat for sheer loveliness and beauty, a combination that repays considerable work in preparing the soil, and in nursing the delphiniums through the difficulties of damping off and protection from slugs, snails and disease.

Potomac Roses Include Many Valued Types

New Miniature Variety Is Shown; Climbers Escaped Winter.

A visit to the rose garden in Potomac Park between the railroad and highway bridges is well worth while in mid-June. The labeling of most of the varieties has been improved greatly in the last few weeks, and a gardener needs a notebook for listing varieties for fall or spring planting.

The rose gardens this season make effective use of the dwarf polyanthus rose, Gloria Mundi, a free-flowering bright red variety with a fairly long season of bloom. As pruned and trained this rose will suggest itself for use in edging large beds of roses or even as an edging for large mixed borders, where the bright red will not conflict with blues and pinks in the border. It comes into bloom just as iris and peonies are going out and would do nicely as an edging for beds of either of these two flowers.

Jacotte, a richly colored climber in apricot shades, will please many rose growers.

Miniature Type Interesting.

One of the novelties that will interest many visitors who take the trouble to find it is a planting of Rosa Rouletti, a truly miniature rose, which has been rather extravagantly recommended by several nursery firms, and which shows some promise of almost living up to the recommendations. At the rose garden this planting is to the left of the main pathway to the central pool as you enter from the Fourteenth street entrance and about 75 feet east of the pool. It is in a bed with plants of the white rose, Mme. Jules Bouche.

Rosa Rouletti, its sponsors say, never grows to a height of more than 5 or 6 inches, but is a regular rose, perfectly formed in all its parts, but on a reduced scale. The pink blossoms are not much larger than a dime, and the claim is that it will blossom most of the summer, and if potted will continue blossoming through the winter in the house.

We shall see whether it proves as satisfactory as claimed. The tiny plants at the rose garden have been blooming for a month now. It would be a charming addition to a small rock garden if it proved amenable to such conditions, but it would probably be necessary to take it into the house in winter. It was introduced by Henry Correvon, the noted Swiss Alpine specialist.

Survived Hard Winter.

The hard winter did not seem to affect the roses planted along the high fences south of the Department of Agriculture greenhouses, along Constitution avenue from Twelfth street to Fourteenth street. From Twelfth to Thirteenth the fine white Silver Moon covered the fence. The western section of the fence was planted to the pink Mary Wallace, growing high at each post, with the brilliant Paul's Scarlet Climber planted half way between the posts and pruned back to keep it clear of the pink masses of Mary Wallace.

Some of the hybrid perpetual roses which ordinarily carry their bloom on substantial stalks from 3 to 6 feet tall are blooming virtually at ground level this year because the old stalks were winter-killed. It will pay to limit the bloom on these plants this season, cutting back most of the shoots nearly to the ground soon after they start and concentrating most of the vigor of the plant into development of two or three substantial stalks. By the first of August it will be wise to withhold water to a minimum and encourage the hybrid perpetuals to ripen the new wood for winter. Heavy feeding now or in late summer would not be good management for these severely injured plants, even though their growth seems vigorous.

It is still practical to fill in blanks in the rose beds by buying potted plants.

Gardener Explains Treatment of Seed

T. A. Weston, an experienced gardener, writing in the June 1 issue of Horticulture, offers two suggestions for preventing the damping off disease of summer sown seeds of perennials. One is the use of formaldehyde dust as directed by the makers.

"Or else," he said, "the pots after filling should be watered with a copper carbonate solution. This is made by mixing two parts of finely powdered copper sulphate with 11 parts of powdered ammonium carbonate. This mixture should be stored in a glass or stone jar tightly corked for at least 24 hours before use. To make a solution, dissolve one ounce of the mixture in two gallons of water and use immediately.

"A little hot water will dissolve the salts quickly and the full amount can be made up with cold water. On no account dissolve or use the mixture in tin, iron, or zinc vessels and do not delay using the fluid after it is made up. The seedlings, when they are about ready for transplanting, can be treated again, but not, of course, flooded."

Queries

Question—Should coral bells be divided after flowering, or when? E. C. P. Answer—Fall is the best time for diving coral bells—late September or early October.

Question—Our hybrid tea roses died back to the ground last winter, but there are many new shoots this summer. Is it all right to let all of them grow? F. H. DeM. Answer—It might do no harm, but you will probably fined it more satisfactory to cut back all but one, two or three shoots (depending on the general vigor of the plant) and restrict bloom somewhat this year to reestablish a new woody head in the plant. This may mean some sacrifice of bloom this year, but a gain for next season.

The white phlox Miss Lingard is the earliest of the summer-flowering varieties with large panicles. It is in high favor for cutting and is useful in the border to separate colors that would otherwise clash.

Trees Need Watering During Early Summer

In late June and July many trees, shrubs and climbing roses need watering. In cities, and even in suburban areas, a considerable part of the root system of many of these plants is covered by walks, pavements or drives, or the natural water supply is restricted because the plant is set close to a building from which the water drains in eavetroughs.

In hot weather large plants require more water, and unless rains are regular they can not make full growth without supplementary water. This is best supplied by allowing the hose to run with a trickling stream for several hours.

The Gardener's Calendar

What to See.

Roses in Rose Garden, Potomac Park, at Franciscan Monastery, Brookland, and in many homes and gardens.

Several varieties of lilies at Botanic Garden.

Perennial plants along Speedway to Hains Point, and cannas and other bedding plants on the Mall and near public buildings.

Delphinium plants in many private gardens, also hollyhocks.

What to Do.

Seed perennial seeds as available, in seedpans or boxes, or in seedframes or carefully prepared beds.

If snapdragons show signs of rust, spray with Bordeaux mixture of dust with dusting sulphur.

Stop deep cultivation between rows of annuals. Most have shallow spreading roots and will be injured. Stir top soil frequently and pull or hoe weeds.

With few exceptions flowering plants benefit by applications of manure water while buds are forming.

Once or twice a week dig into the garden soil for a foot or more and inspect the moisture supply. If soil is not moist from a depth of 2 inches to a foot it needs thorough soaking with hose. Moisture in upper two inches not so important.

Watch undersides of nasturtium leaves for aphids. Spray with nicotine sulphate. Many other plants affected by aphids.

Mulch evergreens, azaleas, rhododendrons, laurel, and most ferns and woodland wildflowers with half-rotted leaves or with granulated peat moss.

Make final planting of gladiolus by July 1, if you expect to lift and save corms. May be planted up to July 15 or later, but are not likely to ripen after bloom.

Mullens Leave Capital.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Mullen have gone to New York to spend a week or ten days. Later they will go to their home in Nebraska for a brief visit. Their son, Mr. Arthur Mullen, will remain in their Georgetown home during the absence of his parents.

ATTENTION!

A prominent editor, author and explorer, of Washington, after many years of delving into ancient ruins and histories, believes he has found the lead to the key to the Mayan hieroglyphic writings that will unfold the history of that lost civilization, and thus give the Americas their real records prior to the coming of Columbus.

To accomplish this unlocking of the sealed past a local group is forming a syndicate for the specific purpose of establishing in Washington a high-grade publishing house. As a basis for this business the syndicate has acquired an unusually attractive book on the Mayas, embodying the known history of that wonderful race to date in a striking story of wide appeal, written by the above editor and author. The syndicate has created a very unique sales plan for the book, devised to drive distribution above the normal best-seller mark, which should assure members of the group a quick repayment of their investments, leaving their interest in the organization clear for future profits. In addition, the returns should supply sufficient capital to the treasury to conduct a well-considered expedition into Mexico, Yucatan, Central America, Java and India, for the purpose of solving the lost Mayan history.

This expedition will provide the publishing house with other books to follow the present one, ready now for publication. It is expected that the full translations of the three ancient Mayan books, held in Dresden, Paris and Madrid museums, unread up to this time, will be among the subsequent issues of the Washington Publishing House. It would be difficult now to estimate their almost fabulous value.

The syndicate group is limited. Its management invites a few enterprising persons, who would like to share the fame and profits of this sound, meritorious undertaking, to investigate carefully with a view to taking a financial interest in the project and becoming active in its management. For full particulars, apply to THE CAPITAL PUBLISHING SYNDICATE, 948 Shoreham Building, Washington, D. C.

'Miss Lingard' Phlox Comes Into Bloom

Variety Rated Profitable Garden Plant.

The white pholx variety, Miss Lingard, is now blooming in many gardens and deserves to be seen in many others. Cornell University has just issued its bulletin 588, "History, Culture, and Varieties of Summer-Flowering Phloxes," in which the author, A. M. S. Pridham, says:

"The Miss Lingard variety was first sold in this country about 1907 with very little publicity, and has become the most popular of all phloxes. Miss Lingard is white, with a faint cream cast which is slightly deeper in the region of the tube or the eye area. The growth is rapid and vigorous and the plant is free from disease.

"Flowering is early and prolific. If the panicles are cut off immediately after flowering, a second bloom may occur in September. The first bloom is excellent for landscape effect, or the spikes may be cut for table flowers. Miss Lingard is one of the few varieties generally used for this purpose. A pink variant of Miss Lingard has recently been introduced under the name Miss Verboom.

Miss Lingard is one of the suffruticosa group of phloxes. The later flowering decussata group has a wide range in color and there are scores of named varieties of merit, but none is regarded as more generally desirable than Miss Lingard.

Phloxes are best planted in the early fall, soon after flowering, though they may be divided at almost anytime except just before blooming. The clumps increase in size rapidly and should be divided every two or three years, making small divisions.

Phloxes are heavy feeders and revel in a rich loamy soil. They will bloom more abundantly if they have plenty of water just before and during the blooming period.

Garden Lovers Told to Work Early Shrubs

Methods of Cultivation and Care of Plants Is Discussed.

Late June is as good a time as any to cultivate the early flowering shrubs which have been pruned after flowering. Cut away suckers at roots of lilacs and fork over the top soil lightly, turning in any mulch material that is reasonably well rotted.

Drive a spading fork (not a spade) into the soil its full length in several places, and push the handle backward and forward enough to loosen the soil somewhat but without tearing the root system.

Shrubs that wintered well can now make use of a weak solution of a quick acting nitrogen fertilizer—sodium nitrate for most shrubs, ammonium sulphate for acid soil plants—not more than two tablespoons to five gallons of water. This will stimulate growth and will be used by the shrubs in time so that it will not prevent ripening of wood for winter.

Cut back any turf that is encroaching on the shrubs leaving a circular space two feet or more in diameter. Mulch this area with lawn clippings, peat, half-rotted leaves or straw. Practically all shrubs do better with a light summer mulch which prevents caking of the topsoil. For evergreens, particularly, throw up a small ridge at the edge of the cultivated space to form a small basin that can be filled with water which will soak in to the root area.

A good way to insure that water will get into the roots of shrubs is to drive a 1-inch iron rod into the soil in several places about where the outside line of foliage comes. This will open the soil at the place where feeding roots are thickest.

Rhododendron and azalea roots are close to the surface, and cultivation should be little more than a stirring of the soil, working in a little of the old mulch and renewing the mulch—preferably half-rotted oak leaves or pine needles. In most Washington gardens, the aluminum sulphate treatment to make the soil acid is not necessary if the oak leaf or pine needle mulch is renewed twice a year.

Sale of Post Model Homes Sets Record

Unpurchased Dwelling Is Presented to Public View Today.

Two homes sold in two weeks and each sold on the first day of its presentation. Such is a new record for Washington Post model homes made in The Post presentation group in the 6400 block of Barnaby street northwest, in Chevy Chase, D. C. With five of these six homes sold, presentation of the remaining unpurchased dwelling at 6331 Utah avenue, at the corner of Utah avenue and Barnaby street, is announced today.

This house is built by Paul T. Stone, Inc., presented by J. Wesley Buchanan, Inc., realtors; furnshed by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon. The rugs are from Manoukian Brothers.

In the construction of this house, convenience, beauty and arrangement have been the chief aims. Featuring a group of homes built by the Stone Corporation, the display house is an excellent example of residential construction.

Of the Colonial style of architecture, this house of sturdy brick is in a row reminiscent of an ancient village.

Complete insulation, waterproofing, automatic heat, refrigeration and complete electrical equipment are included. The thoroughness of the electrical equipment program has given the dwelling a second designation as an "electric kitchen health home."

The stove, clock, ventilating fan, refrigerator and other labor-saving devices are operated by electricity.

The living room is distinguished by a broad, hospitable fireplace. The interior is in colonial early American detail of knotty pine.

The screened porch and rear portico afford views over the nearby wooded hills. There are three bright, airy and well-ventilated bedrooms and two tiled baths, with tub and shower.

A roomy basement provides ample space for servants' toilet, laundry, heating plant and a cheery, tile-floored recreation room, with fireplace, chimney nook and comfortable settee. There are a storage closet for guests, chairs and card tables. A graceful stairway arrangement permits entrance to the recreation room from the living room without crossing the service section of the basement.

Likening the great improvement in home building to the betterment of automobile manufacture, Mr. Buchanan said both, like many other things, were the result of keen competition in lean years, when it is necessary to give the buyer the best for the least money.

Mr. Buchanan recalled that during the "boom days" contractors built and sold hundreds of homes from uniform plans in which not even the position of an electric outlet was changed. This was because they could be built cheaply and readily sold.

Today, he added, a home must represent living comfort, economic maintenance and esthetic worth, all at a reasonable price.

The house is not, he declares, the product of a builder's spare-time plan, but the work of a registered architect who has given consideration to beauty of location and design and stability of construction.

To view the home, drive out Connecticut avenue to Chevy Chase Circle, turn right at the circle on Western avenue to Tennyson street, then to Utah avenue and left one block to Barnaby street.

Post's Second Model Home Is Drawing Many

"Show House" Is Located at 3902 Benton Street, Glover Park Heights.

The second Washington Post model home of the year continues an outstanding event in real estate. Situated at 3902 Benton street northwest, in Glover Park Heights, the home is furnished by Hutchison, Inc.; draped by John F. Ligon and constructed by B. H. Gruver.

The display home is of English-type architecture, of all-brick construction. It is 20 feet wide and contains eight rooms, including four bedrooms, a reception room, two baths and a breakfast nook. There is also an electric kitchen, with every labor-saving device, including Westinghouse refrigerator and electric ventilator.

The house is weather-stripped and screened throughout. It is fully equipped with cedar closets and an automatic storage water heater. Its large recreation room has stippled walls. Kitchen and baths are sanitas walled.

Garage Is Convenient.

A built-in garage adds convenience in the arrangement of the home. The building site is a landscaped lot, fronted by a running brick retaining wall.

The living room has a conservatively modern sofa, upholstered in a deep rust shade, and chair upholstered in a contrasting shade of green, over antique velour. The occasional chair used in this room is covered in gold material. There is a Gov. Winthrop secretary desk with a Winthrop armchair to match. The assortment of occasional tables and end tables in mahogony are furnished with lamps. A domestic Oriental rug of the Sarouk pattern covers the floor.

The dining room is furnished with a true Sheraton suite of ten pieces. The chairs are upholstered in deep blue haircloth. The rug is of the same design as in the dining room.

Off from the kitchen is a colorful breakfast set with a porcelain-top refectory table and four chairs matching it in green.

The draperies for the living room are interwoven flowered silk damask of a brown background with urns of multicolored flowers. The

Foxall Home Boasts Many Fine Features

Taylor Displays House of Elizabethan English Architecture.

A new, detached home combining many unusual features in plan and design is offered today by the builders, Waverly Taylor, Inc., at the corner of Foxall road and Volta place northwest, in Foxall.

In a community noted for the outstanding character of its group homes, beautiful wooded parks and adjacent estates, this home is admirably adapted to its setting on an open corner site. There are several beautiful shade trees and appropriate planting of small evergreens and shrubbery around the house. The gently sloping lawn has a rolling terrace to a low brick retaining wall at the sidewalk.

The home itself is of modified Elizabethan English architecture, combining deep red brick with occasional clinkers for textural effect, and interesting gables of cream-colored stucco and brown half timbering. The roof is of mottled green and purple slate of random lengths and widths. The use of such permanent materials as these, with cypress trim and copper gutters and downspouts, insures an absolute minimum of upkeep expense.

Wall Space Well Arranged.

The entrance hall, with its practical tile floor, has a coat closet at one side. As one passes through to the main floor, the living room opens to the left and the dining room is at the right. Both are large, sunny rooms with concealed radiators and well-arranged wall space. There is a stone fireplace in the living room framed in colonial paneling. In addition to the windows on three sides of the room, there is a French door leading to the living porch, screened with bronze wirecloth.

The dining room has an ornamental and practical chair rail of graceful design. Above is a pictorial paper on a yellow background. The lighting fixture is reminiscent of the old colonial oil lamps.

Next to the dining room is an efficiently planned kitchen, containing a double drainboard sink, gas refrigerator, table top gas range, built-in kitchen cabinet, electric clock, vanity cabinet, broom closet and many storage cupboards. There is a ceiling exhaust fan to eliminate the heat and odors of cooking and to draw in cool air from the outside. The floor is covered with green inlaid linoleum and the walls decorated with a light green Sanitas covering.

Between the kitchen and rear portion of the living room is a small study, paneled in knotty pine and having built-in book shelves at one end. With a large window facing the east, this room would make a delightful breakfast room and in the evening serve as a quiet retreat for reading, studying or writing.

Studio Suite in Basement.

From this room there is an entrance to the studio suite in the basement. Here will be found a large studio, paneled in knotty pine and stained to give an antique effect, oak floor and sand finished ceiling. There is a real fireplace with Dutch oven and long mantel shelf of early American scroll design. The windows are double steel casements to afford full ventilation and they are equipped with Venetian blinds to preserve privacy without shutting off the air.

At the rear is another paneled room, to serve as either a sleeping compartment or downstairs study. Next to this is a complete tiled bath room with large shower stall. Both of these rooms are also equipped with Venetian blinds.

There is a separate front entrance to this studio suite, with practical tile floor. With this convenience, it is possible for the owner to rent this suite without interfering with his use of the floors above in the least.

In the basement there is also a built-in garage with overhead doors opening to the front. At the rear are a service room for the laundry equipment, gas furnace and storage water heater.

On the second floor are three bedrooms, each with cedar lined closet and one with full length mirror door. In the hall is a picturesque solarium window with glass shelves between the window jambs

Sales Records Are Shattered By Electrolux

Estate Gas Range Campaign Also Meets With Fast Buyer Approval.

Shattering all previous sales records, the Electrolux air-cooled gas refrigerator and Estate Gas Range campaigns have gone over the top with amazing success. These campaigns sponsored by the Washington Gas Light Co., introducing the latest models of labor-saving gas appliances, feautre special prices for a limited time and attractive terms of purchase, whereby the home executive can have both the new Electrolux air-cooled gas refrigerator and the 1934 Estate gas range in her kitchen for as little as 23 cents a day for both appliances.

Throngs are visiting the showrooms of the Washington Gas Light Co. at 411 Tenth street northwest, to inspect the variety of models, priced to fit every pocketbook. They are enthusiastic in their praise of the many practical and esthetic new features of this equipment which add to the beauty of the kitchen and increase the efficiency of the housewife's work.

The vogue for kitchen modernizing and the interest in making this room as charming and colorful as the rest of the home, finds modern gas equipment prepared to take its place in harmony with the character of popular designs and color schemes. Bright and cheerful surroundings, with arrangement of equipment to save unnecessary footsteps and providing the utmost utility, is the keynote of modern kitchen design. Visitors to the showrooms of the gas company have viewed with interest the model kitchen and have picked up many interesting suggestions and menus from Miss Ruth Sheldon, director of home service. While no formal announcement has been made regarding the close of these campaigns, it is understood that they will be withdrawn in the very near future.

Only 13 Cents Daily.

The variety of Electrolux models on display features air-cooled gas refrigerators to meet the needs of every home with a wide price range and budget purchase plan that adds no extra burden. For an average of 13 cents a day, every Washington home can have this most satisfactory type of refrigeration, which introduces a new principle of freezing whereby a tiny flame does all the work. This ingenious application has eliminated machinery and moving parts and consequently there is no noise or vibration with longer life and carefree operation.

Home executives, throughout the United States, have accepted the Electrolux with enthusiasm and the thouasnds of installations in Washington homes echo the national acceptance of satisfied users. The gas refrigerator has an extremely low cost of operation, a double advantage when one considers that Washington gas rates are among the lowest on the Atlantic seaboard. Aside from these outstanding points of interest are many new features and novel innovations that catch the housewife's eye and meet with her ready approval for they add extra convenience and utility to the use of the Electrolux.

Timely buying with the cooperation of the manufacturer make possible unusual savings of from $20 to $35 in different models of the 1934 Estate gas range for a limited time only. Marked by simplicity of design and beauty of finish, these porcelain enamel ranges, with chronium trim and finished in combinations of ivory, tan, white and black with adjustable legs, complement any color scheme.

Automatic Lighting.

The hinge-slide top cover, a new feature, lifts and slides easily from burner to tabletop and the ring-type burner gives increased efficiency and cuts fuel cost. Lighting automatically, without even pressing a button, the flame is easily adjusted from simmering to fast cooking. The Estate fresh-air oven, insulated with Rock-Wool, keeps the heat in the oven where it belongs and provides perfect baking. Thick insulation keeps the kitchen cool in summer and the accurate heat regulator illuminates oven-watching.

Oven racks are controlled by leveracks which slides them forward and backward automatically without the danger of burnt fingers and unnecessary stooping. The insulated Estate double broiler, in a roller-bearing drawer, is adjustable. It pulls out smoothly and is easily raised or lowered. Of a new design, it has a drip-pan which can be used as a skillet on the top of the range to make gravy. There are two steel roller-bearing utensil drawers, one with compartments for spice canisters, knife sharpener and cooking utensils with a handy recipe card file, containing instructions for operation and tested recipes; the second utility drawer provides additional storage facilities.

Paint Helps Brick House.

The painting of a brick house that is damp and difficult to heat will aid greatly in keeping out moisture, and sometimes results in a substantial saving in fuel bills.

Paint Rustic Furniture.

Rustic furniture, with the bark still on it, is less apt to catch and tear silk stockings and sheer dresses if the wood is coated with a spar varnish.

Wooden Road Marker Legible for 23 Years

A large house occuyping a small plot of ground, if painted a dark body color will appear less bulky. As a general rule, light and bright tints make an object seem more prominent, while dark tones tend to decrease its apparent size.

Miller Concern Appoints New Sales Leaders

New Arrangement Is Made to Help Production in Westerleigh.

To permit concentration of effort in sales and constructional activities, W. C. & A. N. Miller, realtors and builders, announced last week that direction of sales would be in the hands of A. N. Miller, partner. Appointment of four assistant sales managers also was announced.

The assistant sales managers are Dean M. Rathbun, who will have charge of Westerleigh, the latest Miller development of homes whose price range will be from $12,500 up; George C. DeNeale, who will promote the expansion of Wesley Heights; T. Benjamin Adams, that of Spring Valley, and Edmund J. Flynn, who will superintend the brokerage division.

These executives will direct the activites of their respective subdivisions, each of which will have its own salesmen. The arrangement is expected to increase production and sales for the respective developments and office as an entirety. Although the Miller office will remain general headquarters for this work at present, ultimately it is expected that the activities of the subdivisions will be directed from exhibit dwellings in each of them.

In making the announcement, it was stated that, contrary to widespread impression, there is still room for 40 or 50 good home sites in Wesley Heights, the earliest Miller development. Officials of the organization said the new arrangement will permit an increase or decrease of purchasers' holdings and their continued relationship with the firm.

The same architectural and zoning requirements of Wesley Heights and Spring Valley will be applicable to the new Westerleigh development, it was made known. The Miller organization has approximately 300 acres still available for home construction and approximately 400 families have purchased homes on its land. The company began operation 22 years ago. Its building program for the next fiscal year contemplates erection of 75 homes, representing $1,250,000 in value.

Property Owner Liable If Workman Is Hurt

Chicago newspapers recently printed an article about a handy man who sued a home-owner because his foot was injured while installing a radiator. Had the home-owner taken the precaution of employing a licensed steam-fitter, he would not have been liable for the injuries to the workman because all licensed men carry compensation insurance for their employes.

The compensation laws in most States provide that, if the employer carries no insurance and if he has no property, the injured workman may sue the property owner or other persons who ordered the work done.

4 New Homes Are Displayed By Saunders

Convenience and Modern Equipment Mark Residences.

William H. Saunders Co., Inc., realtors, with offices at 1519 K street northwest, is offering four detached homes, just completed, which are being presented today.

They are located at 5733 Nebraska avenue, 5479 Thirty-first street, 3012 McKinley street and 5421 Thirtieth place, Chevy Chase, D. C.

Of distinguished architecture, they are the last word in convenient arrangement and comprehensive equipment.

Each of Different Design.

Each of these houses is of different exterior design. The house at 5733 Nebraska avenue is of all brick construction and has a slate roof. There is a commodious living room enhanced by a hospitable fireplace.

The well-proportioned dining room is lighted by large windows. The kitchen is equipped with the most complete cabinet unit. The dainty breakfast nook has ample cabinet space. Electric refrigeration is furnished for the kitchen.

Upstairs are three lovely bedrooms and two tiled baths. There is a cozy recreation room with fireplace, four windows and knotty pine paneled walls. There is a screened porch and the entire house is copper-screened and weather-stripped. The attic is celotexed and has a cedar storage closet. An oil burner completes the program of this home's appointments.

No less charming is the residence at 5479 Thirty-first street. Of colonial architecture, it is of sturdy brick construction overtopped with handsome slate roof. The dining room is roomy and dignified and the living room the acme of comfort. Here is a large and inviting fireplace.

Modern Kitchen Equipment.

The kitchen is the latest in equipment with every convenience to lighten the burden of the housewife. Its catalogue of labor-saving devices includes everything, even electric refrigeration. The cabinet space is arranged to save many steps. Everything is at hand. Nearby is a dainty breakfast nook with additional cabinet facilities.

The large bedrooms on the second floor are cheery and well ventilated. The tiled baths are a delight to the eye. Nothing more comfortable can be imagined than the recreation room for games and guests.

The house is copper screened and weather stripped throughout. It has a cool screened porch. The finishing of the attic is in celotex and a large cedar closet augments the storage space in this part of the house. Clean oil burning heat solves the heating problem.

In a wooded background is located the third presentation at 3012 McKinley street. This house is of brick construction with slate roof. It has a living room with a splendidly designed fireplace.

Its kitchen is modern with every item of equipment. A breakfast nook adds to the convenience of the layout. There is an abundance of cabinet space handily placed.

The large reception room is one of the showplaces of this dwelling. All of the weatherstripping and screening are of copper. The large celotexed attic will relieve any part of the downstairs from being used for storage purposes.

The large, airy bedrooms are truly intriguing. The two baths are most attractive in their tile finish and metal fixtures. The oil-burning plant is both modern and dependable.

The fourth offering is located at 5421 Thirtieth place. A stately sloping slate roof accentuates its beauty and it is fronted with a handsome porch and balcony.

The living room boasts an attractive fireplace, while the dining room is roomy It is lighted by numerous windows. The kitchen, like those of the other presentations, is modern in every detail.

Every one of the offerings is located on more than 5,000 square feet of landscaped ground bordered by metal fences.

All have brick garages and are located on high, cool and healthful elevations close to transportation. To visit them, drive out Nebraska avenue to the intersection of Thirty-first street and turn right to the homes.

204 Towns in State Lack Water Plants

Fourth of Wells in Use Called Unsafe.

Wisconsin has 182,000 farm homes of which only 28,454 are equipped with running water, while only 14,533 or 8 per cent have bathrooms, according to Frank R. King, director of the Bureau of Plumbing and Sanitary Engineering of the State Board of Health.

Mr. King urged Wisconsin plumbers at their annual convention to join with the State board of health in a State-wide campaign to effect the installation of public water supplies and sewerage systems in 204 cities and villages in Wisconsin which, at the present time, have neither.

From 25 to 30 per cent of the wells now used as a source of water supply would be found unsafe, if tested, Mr. King said.

"With the installation of a public water supply system, not only is the hazard of impure drinking water removed, but there is an appreciable reduction in the drudgery of women and better living conditions," Mr. King told the contractors.

Application, Quality Important.

Paint blistering, peeling, scaling, fading of color and premature chalking is usually avoided if good quality paint is used and if proper care is taken in application.

Valley Forge Home Praised; Carries Ideal

Typifies Part Its Original Played in War of Revolution.

Of unusual interest to home lovers is the presentation by H. L. Rust Co. of the Valley Forge reproduction house in select Colonial Village of Rock Creek Park Estates. This dwelling at 1817 Plymouth street is a reproduction of George Washington's headquarters during the most trying time of the American Revolution.

This home was selected by the owners of the development because of the important part its original played in early American history. In fact, the Valley Forge headquarters exemplifies the courage of Washington through the terrible ordeal of suffering during that critical winter.

This reproduction has been visited by thousands of persons, who have expressed not only appreciation for its charm and architectural accuracy, but have commended its entire idea and ideal. It is in a community that was the first to present the only collective reproduction of historical homes in America.

The offering is indeed one of the showplaces among the Capital's better class moderately priced homes. Distinguished architecturally, it is of enduring stone and brick construction. It has many innovations in floor plan, finish and equipment that must be seen to be appreciated. The house contains a spacious step-down living room with fireplace, stately dining room with fireplace, fireplaces in two master bedrooms, immaculate baths, large third bedroom, gas heat, random-width oak floors and large rear living porch. There is also a large kitchen, pantry, breakfast nook and a two-car garage. The residence is situated on spacious grounds with towering shade trees.

Exhibit Home's Harmony Seen In Decorations

Three Firms Join to Put Ensemble Touches to Various Rooms.

A most delightful ensemble has been accomplished by Hutchison, Inc., Manoukian Bros. and John F. Ligon in the interior decoration of the exhibit home presented for public inspection by J. Wesley Buchanan, Inc., at 6331 Utah avenue, Chevy Chase, D. C.

There is a spacious living room, with a large fireplace. Here is a true Duncan Phyfe sofa, covered in green damask of authentic pattern. In front of this sofa is a coffee table of the Duncan Phyfe design, to match. The strictly colonial atmosphere is carried out with a Gov. Winthrop desk and a small Duncan Phyfe chair.

There is a beautiful Virginia fireside chair in gold. Beside this chair is a nest of tables. On the left side near the window there is an occasional chair in corded, green tapestry.

Replica of Old Mirror.

A large victory mirror is also to be found in this room, an authentic copy of one given George Washington by his troops. The lighting is furnished by bridge, table and indirect lamps, which are placed at pleasing intervals.

The dining room is furnished in a solid mahogany eighteenth century Duncan Phyfe suite. The pieces used are a large buffet, a corner cabinet, a Sheraton server, a Duncan Phyfe pedestal table and shield-back chairs, which are covered with a blue haircloth.

The kitchen is modern in all details, having a breakfast set and up-to-date kitchen equipment.

This home contains a recreation room. The pieces here add charm and comfort. One finds a portable beverage server, card sets, arranged for use, smoking stands, wrought-iron hobnail bridge lamps, a maple coffee table, a low lounge chair, a wing-back maple chair and several occasional tables. A large cabinet radio is handy for amusement.

Bedroom in Maple.

On the second floor is a small bedroom furnished in maple to create an early American atmosphere. There are a youth's bed, a vanity table and hanging mirror and a solid maple chair. The room is completed with several small boudoir lamps and genuine hand-hooked rugs.

The master bedroom is a true colonial room. The suite, all in mahogany, consists of low poster beds, a spacious chest and dresser with a hanging mirror and bench. To add a cheery tone to the room, there is a boudoir chair covered in a gray glazed chintz. This chair harmonizes with the drapes and hooked rugs. Dainty boudoir lamps complete the furnishings in the master bedroom.

The rug in the living room is an antique Persian Sultanabad in an atractive old rose background with floral designs. Sultanabad is the name of the town where these rugs are made. The name translated into English means "The Town of Kings."

Harmony in Borders.

The borders are unusually harmonious, compared with modern Orientals, and the subdued tone of the colors of this beautiful piece of Oriental art gives richness and warmth to its surroundings.

The rug in the dining room is a Kandahar with floral designs set in navy blue background. The rich blue, mixed with different harmonizing colors, gives the dining room a luxurious appearance and blends well with the color scheme of the room. This particular rug, with its flashy body, will withstand hard wear and will resist the elements which so easily soil ordinary rugs. Although it is comparatively more modern, it is making a very desirable contrast with the one in the living room.

Draperies furnished by Mr. Ligon are arranged as follows: Living room, French dotted net tie-back curtains with draperies of silver flowered designs; dining room, French dotted net tie-back with draperies made of mulberry kapok; kitchen, glazed chintz in designs of red and green checks; recreation room, rough-finished ratine with red flower design; master bedroom, white dotted net tie-backs with ruffles of old blue and rose and draperies of multicolored rose and blue; den, white dotted net tie-backs with yellow ruffles and tie-backs; rear bedroom, white dotted net tie-backs and green ruffles; bath, rose and black aqua proof silk matching shower curtain.

Paint Room Fixtures To Match With Walls

When a room is redecorated, lighting fixtures, wall plugs and switches often detract from the improved appearance of painted walls and ceilings. In such cases consult the master painter about the advisability of painting the fixtures to harmonize with the fresh colors of the newly decorated room.

Applying Priming Coat.

The use of old, leftover paint as a priming coat is not recommended, since the primer is the foundation for all future painting and should be carefully applied with the best of materials.

Horse-Shoe Farm Sold to Realtor

Joseph M. Samuels Pays $48,713 for Tract.

Orange, Va., June 23 (Spl.).—The 521-acre Horse Shoe Farm property of R. M. Brady, located in the forks of the Rapidan and Robinson Rivers in Culpeper County, was sold at public auction for $48,713 to Joseph M. Samuels, Orange realtor, in behalf of a buyer whose name was not revealed.

The mansion house, which contractors state could not be replaced for less than $50,000, was erected in 1830 by Col. Charles P. Moncure, who came with his brother from Stafford County.

The place was sold in 1872 to the late Joseph Wilmer, a classmate of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, who often visited Horse Shoe Farm with his family while President.

Mr. Brady had made his home there since buying the place for $50,000 from Mr. Wilmer's executors in 1912.

Color Harmony in Kitchen.

Harmonious color schemes enhance the beauty of the kitchen. It isn't difficult to transform dustpans and broom handles into attractive additions to the kitchen color scheme. Painting the back walls of cabinets, cupboards and shelves also produces attractive results.

Season Opens At Fine Resort On Nearby Bay

Randle Cliff Beach Is Being Sold at Popular Prices.

U. S. Randle, owner and developer of Randle Cliff Beach, announces the 1934 season is now under way at this summer home community on Chesapeake Bay. This beautiful and restful resort is located 1½ miles south of Seaside Park, being ideal for summer holidays, as it embodies real comfort and happiness.

There are now 125 cottages at the beach, spaciously separated. The new State road now runs through Randle Cliffs, which assures a safe and secure investment. Prices are said to be far below those of surrounding or equivalent beaches. The public is asked to visit the free bathing beach and picnic grove and inspect their values or call Mr. Randle's Washington office, Lincoln 1879. Arrangements will be made without obligation to take them to Randle Cliff Beach and back.

Randle Cliff Beach, one of the most accessible salt water resorts, is only 33 miles from the District line. There is a new bus line running over this road from Washington for those who do not have a car. Those who prefer to go down by train may do so for 25 cents a round trip.

This tract overlooking the bay is one of the prettiest spots bordering the section from North Beach Park to Plum Point, it being a part of the vast holdings of the late Col. Randle, who, prior to his death, had planned to name it similar to Randle Highlands, located in the vicinity of Twenty-fifth streets and Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Some of the most beautiful bungalows and homes are located in the Randle Highlands section. It is the intention of U. S. Randle to improve the Randle Cliff section on a plane equal, if not superior, to Randle Highlands. Commencing two years ago this fall, Mr. Randle laid plans to promote Randle Cliffs and is going forward in cooperation with the community interest.

He is in daily touch with the community and is sparing neither time nor expense in improving conditions.

The roads leading to areas of the vast section are rapidly being reconditioned, giving easy access to cottages. A concrete pier was constructed a few years ago and considerable activity on the part of the Randle Cliff citizens Association made available a fine sandy beach.

Cooled Homes Introduced in Development

Chevy Chase Land Co. Installs Modern Air System.

At the Chicago Fair this summer, visitors will find an attractive house overlooking the lake, containing a complete air conditioning system.

That the Century of Progress includes in its exhibit of modern, scientific wonders an invention to create cleanliness and regulation of humidity of air, for the occupants of an individual house, large or small, is significant of the trend home builders will follow in the future.

The traveling public already acknowledges the air conditioned train a necessity; hotels introduce air conditioned dining rooms; shoppers buy in air conditioned stores. The great exposition assumes that it would have overlooked an inevitable factor in progressive building had it failed to offer visitors an example of an air cooled and conditioned private home.

Anticipating what the fair proposes to do, the Chevy Chase Land Co. has already installed in four of the completed houses, and is in process of installing in the others of its new development, the Hamlet, at East-West highway and East Blackthorn street, in Chevy Chase, Md., the most complete and modern system of air conditioning.

A cooling unit has been installed at 7 East Blackthorn street. This convenience is so new, the average prospective purchaser hardly grasps the possibilities for comfort and cleanliness involved. It filters and cleanses the air in the houses, freeing it of dust and impurities and keeps up a continuous circulation of reconditioned air by means of an intake and exhaust in each room.

The crowds visiting the Hamlet have been impressed with this novel feature. Nothing could be more indicative of the forward-looking and progressive spirit of the Chevy Chase Land Co. than that they are the first to introduce an air cooling and conditioning system into private homes in Washington, company officials state.

Taylor Attacks Jerry Builder As Menace

Issues Plea for Curb on Unfair Practices Through NRA.

Abuses in the land development and home building industry which should be cured were cited recently by Waverly Taylor, chairman of a division for these activities of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, in a statement issued to the National Recovery Administration concerning a code of fair competition for builders.

Speaking of "jerry builders," Mr. Taylor said they construct homes of poor material, using inefficient and unskilled labor. "They make such homes salable often by surface decoration, by special features and gadgets," he continued. "The quick deterioration of such homes is not only a fraud upon the purchaser, but tends to destroy values of neighboring properties as well. The jerry builder is therefore a public menace who must be controlled through some code which takes specific recognition of the problem which he presents."

Mr. Taylor also attacked so-called "free lot" schemes. "Files of the United States Postoffice and Attorney General's office, the better business bureaus of the country and the real estate boards of the country, are filled by the long history of largely unsuccessful attempts to eliminate this most common fraud," he pointed out. "Millions of dollars could be saved the public if this could be eliminated, as is contemplated by the code. Our Baltimore correspondent estimates that more than $500,000 has been lost in Baltimore through this fraud alone."

The remainder of Mr. Taylor's statement follows:

"Profit from resale 'guarantee, now a common bait used by the unscrupulous operator, could be controlled and possibly entirely eliminated by the code. Thousands of widows and orphans of the country have suffered by this fraud despite the strenuous efforts of the Federal Government and local governments aided by the ethical portions of the industry.

"Inaccurate and misleading advertising could be controlled by the code. It is probable that if the industry is entirely organized as is contemplated by the code, more wholehearted cooperation on the part of newspapers, radio and other advertising media could be obtained.

"Selling a property on which the title is clouded could be controlled. Unscrupulous operators take advantage of the inexperience and ignorance of purchasers to sell them property for which a good title cannot be delivered.

"The selling of lots through high-pressure methods at prices far in excess of real value in distant communities to persons who have no opportunity to inspect such lots personally. The Nation-wide sale of lots in Muscle Shoals and similar abuses will occur to everyone as illustrative of this evil which we desire to eliminate. Only through a Nation-wide code can the public be protected in this matter.

"Unfulfilled promises for improvements, utilities, &c., against which there is no recourse at present, or at best only legal recourse which is too costly for the purchaser who usually is the victim of such a device.

"The organized real estate men of the country have made great progress in fighting the common frauds outlined above. In some States license laws have done much to curb and eliminate some of these practices. All States do not have such license laws. Moreover, the operators most commonly guilty of such practices move quickly from one State to another and it is frequently only by Federal action that they can be brought to justice.

Urban Land Use.

"During the past decade the American public has indulged extensively in real estate speculation as well as in other forms of speculation. The result has been a very great and unjustified expansion of subdivision development. Special assessment laws have made such developments possible far in excess of current demand. The results of this use of the taxing power as an aid in land speculation is proving disastrous for many communities where special assessment bonds are a charge against the general faith and credit of the city. There are no statistics available as yet on default of special assessment bonds throughout the country, but it is common knowledge that such defaults are very extensive. Where the general credit of the city is involved, obviously the cost of premature and ill-advised subdivision developments falls back on the community as a whole.

"It is exceedingly important both from the standpoint of economy as well as from the standpoint of orderly and sound development that a better theory and practice of urban land utilization and home building be developed. This the association is earnestly striving to do.

"We believe that a code for the land development and home building industry, setting up a strong, Nation-wide agency to control this field, can aid not only the industry but every community in controlling and directing this great activity in the future. It is not conceivable to us that this can be done in any manner except through an independent code for this industry.

"It is the desire of our association to aid in the development of sound home ownership in every possible way. We have in the past frequently brought forward construction measures to this end. Three years ago it was our group which initiated the proposal for the Federal Home Loan Bank.

"Two years ago we were helpful in formulating legislation which resulted in the Home Owners Loan Corporation, which is saving thousands of homes for their owners."

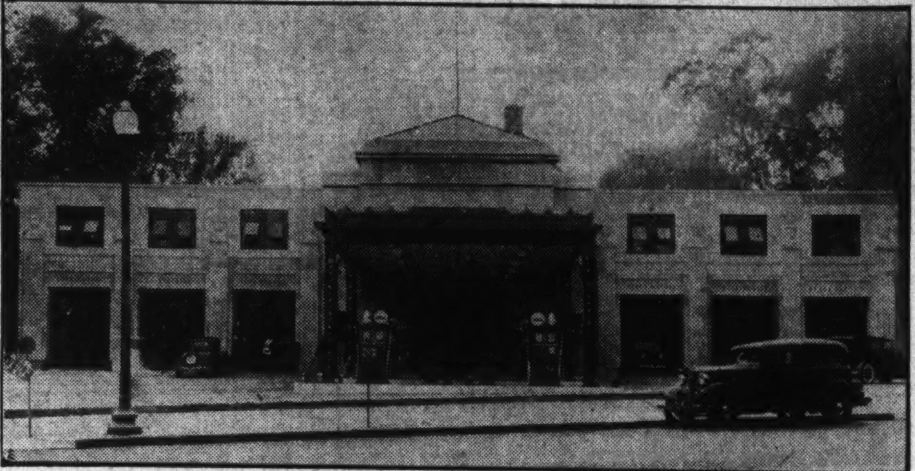
Goodyear Service Station Opens Formally



Post Staff Photo.

New and specially-designed station of Goodyear Service, Inc., at Connecticut avenue and N streets northwest, which will have its formal opening from Wednesday to Friday of this week.

New Goodyear Station Called Nation's Finest

Occupies Former British Embassy Building at Connecticut and N.

The successor to the British Embassy at Connecticut avenue and N street northwest, the specially designed station of Goodyear Service, Inc., will be opened formally by a 3-day celebration from Wednesday to Friday, June 27 to June 29. On Wednesday evening, R. S. Wilkes, manager of the Washington branch, will entertain several hundred guests at a buffet supper in the building and an inspection of its facilities.

During the three days, officials of the Goodyear Co. from Akron will be here to observe the working of what they regard as the most completely equipped station in the country for all of those little things that the properly maintained car needs to keep it new, from a drop of oil on a door hinge to a changed tire.

With proper regard for the character, past and present, of the neighborhood, Goodyear officials have developed the station along lines of classic simplicity and functional order. As the Goodyear crew have been rehearsing the servicing of hundreds of cars during the last week they have proven to their critical neighbors that the changing of tires, greasing of chassis and repair of batteries can also be done in a de luxe fashion.

Main Building Two Stories.

The main building of the station is two stories high. Its facade in classic Indiana limestone, solves in an interesting way the problem of wide doors for automobiles which today confronts so many home owners and architects. The door openings and the doors themselves are made skillfully a part of the general simple design of the facade.

A canopy of fine wrought iron extends well into the middle of the wide driveway space in front, dominating and almost concealing the gasoline and air and water supply available for passing cars. If further service is needed it is all rendered inside the station.

In addition to the usual facilities for changing or repairing tires, the building is equipped with all of the very latest gadgets for brake and light and battery testing, for inspection, greasing and oiling body, motor and chassis and for those minor adjustments and tightening of bolts that keep the modern car silent and smooth after scores of thousands of miles.

In explaining this service, Mr. Wilkes said yesterday:

"Repairs cost the average car owner about one and a half cents a mile. This special lubrication service we provide here costs not more than a tenth of a cent a mile and it will usually save the repair bill. There are from 19 to 70 points on a car that should be tended to every thousand miles or so. To take care of each properly requires 11 different kinds of lubricants alone. This station has secured the best of each kind with the special tools for applying them. We make a record of each point serviced, report its condition if in need of more than minor repairs and remind the customer when it is time to have the car checked again.

"This can only be done in a station specially designed for the service. And that's what we think we have here. The cars move in almost a straight line from point to point, as on their original assembly lines. They come in Connecticut avenue and out into Nineteenth or N streets. The result is that this elaborate service can be given quickly and economically. The station is equipped to change as many as 500 tires in a day. We do not know how many cars we can service until we try."

Incidentally, the opening of the station will be the occasion for the demonstration of the revolutionary new "G3" tire which Goodyear introduced this spring and which has proven so satisfactory that the company is now selling it with an unconditional guarantee.

Australia Demands More U. S. Turpentine

An increase of building and construction in Australia has resulted in stimulating demand in that country for American turpentine, according to a report made to the Commerce Department in Washington by Assistant Trade Commissioner Wilson C. Flake, at Sydney. Practically all Australian turpentine imports originate in the United States.

300 Realtors Attend Annual Board Outing

Beer and Sports Enliven Picnics; Many Officials Are Present.

Attended by 300 realtors and their guests, the outing of the Washington Real Estate Board at Annapolis Roads Club last Tuesday was the finest in the social history of the organization.

The long auto caravan of the real estate men on their annual picnic, moved promptly to the scene of the merrymaking. Traffic arrangements completed by the Metpolitan and Maryland police were perfect. Escorts from both bodies were provided.

No more delightful spot could have been chosen for the enjoyment of the day. All arrangements for a pleasant sojourn had been prepared from the time of arrival early in the afternoon to departure late in the evening.

On arrival there was good beer to slake the thirst after the long drive. Then came sports and games. There was musical and vocal entertainment and a buffet supper served in baskets and eaten on the portico of the clubhouse or on the broad, breezed-cooled beach.

Among the guests were C. M. Towers, District collector of taxes; E. A. Dent, District surveyor; Capt. Hugh P. Oram, executive officer, Zoning Commission; Calvin C. Lauber, District fire marshal; Col. John W. Oehmann, District inspector of buildings; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highways division; Carl J. Bergmann, president, District of Columbia Council of Building and Loan Associations; Robert J. Cottrell, secretary, Washington Board of Trade; Dorsey W. Hyde, secretary, Washington Chamber of Commerce; Clifford Lanham, superintendent, District division of parks and trees.

During the afternoon there were golfing, tennis, horseshoe pitching, baseball, fishing, boating and swimming events. The sports program was followed by the buffet supper, served from 5 to 7 p. m.

Homer Phillips and Jack Grey tied in the golf tourney for The Washington Post Cup and the play-off will be held later. The Evening Star gold medal, offered the winner of the horseshoe pitching contest, was won by Morris Luchs. The Washington Herald Cup, offered in the swimming event, was won by Jack Weedon. The baseball contest for the Washington Times baseballs resulted in a tie between the Brokers and Builders teams. The Brokers won the toss.

The success of the party was due to the efforts of Fred A. Smith, chairman of the program committee, assisted by the following workers: Baseball committee, John K. Mealy, chairman; James F. Salkeld, Frank S. Phillips, Claud Livingston, jr.; supper committee, Karl E. Jarrell, chairman; T. C. Willis, Frank Bell, Joseph A. Herbert, jr., Carl G. Rosinski, William M. Throckmorton; entertainment committee, C. H. Hillegeist, chairman; Francis A. Murray, A. H. Borjes, L. H. Brodie, O. T. Carr, George H. O'Connor.

A small child's bedroom is furnished completely in maple with a crib, a chest of drawers and a maple boudoir chair in chintz.

Snapped at Midsummer Outing of Washington Real Estate Board

The building and loan associations of the city as well as the District of Columbia Government were represented at the jolly party. At the left in the foreground is Carl J. Bergmann, president of the Building and Loan Association Council of the District of Columbia. At his right is C. M. Towers, District Collector of Taxes.

These excellent musicians furnished music for the merrymaking throughout the afternoon and evening. Here they are about to begin another of their beautiful compositions. As they prepare, several realtors and guests stop to listen to—aye—even to assist in their next number.

A. C. Houghton, president of Washington Real Estate Board, presents gold medal to Morris Luchs, winner of the horseshoe pitching event.

New Radiators Combine Beauty and Efficiency

Radiators have gone modern in recent years. The better radiators are carefully designed by artist-engineers, and represent the finest union of beauty and heating efficiency ever achieved in radiation. They have thin walls and slender, graceful columns, with emphasis on the perpendicular. Standing along a wall or under a window, the trim, smart lines of the new radiators make them quite unobtrusive.

Office Building Expert Warns On Rental War

But Past Year's Reports Show Improvement, Owners Are Told.

Speaking recently before approximately 500 building owners and managers gathered at Toronto for the twenty-seventh annual convention of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers, George W. Klein, of Indianapolis, chairman of the renting committee, pointed out that a National survey just completed showed for the first time since January 1, 1930, a slight improvement in office rentals.

"This fact is especially encouraging," stated Mr. Klein, "because more than 600,000 square feet of recently constructed space is included in the survey.

"The past year indicates better earnings in almost every industry except that of office buildings. How we are situated is shown by the fact that country-wide vacancy on January 1, 1934, was approximately 16 per cent greater than that which existed on January 1, 1929, but a study of relative gross income shows the actual average amount of rental income collected during 1933 was but 60 to 65 per cent of the 1929 income. This disproportion must be corrected—and corrected immediately by higher rentals and the extinction of ruinous competition, born of ignorance and lack of conviction of sound values. Otherwise, the time is not far off when tax-collection bodies will be in control of the entire industry.

"There is probably no industry," Mr. Klein said, "in which cut-throat competition has gone to the extent that it has in ours. We all realize this, but are helpless to stem the tide alone, because the market can be upset by the competition of a comparatively small percentage of the buildings in any city. We must sooner or later realize that buildings can not be filled by taking tenants out and putting them in another, and consequently we should devote our efforts to maintenance of present occupancies at proper rentals instead of sacrificing income to occupancy."

"Office building space costs practically as much to produce today as in former years," he said, "and while it is argued that the law of supply and demand controls—to the extent that it has overshadowed value—we should be cognizant of the fact that the supply is not inexhaustible, as additional office buildings will be difficult to finance, and demand is already increasing and must continue to increase."

Mirrors Add Pleasant Note In Decoration

Clever Use Can Bring a New Charm to the Small Home.

Important as the mirror is for shaving, for milady to powder her nose, or similar utilitarian purposes, it has yet another function in the home. From the standpoint of interior decoration, it provides an air of spaciousness when space is at a premium in the small, modern home.

Mirrors are particularly adaptable to remodeling, for they can be obtained in any size and shape and so can be fitted to a particular space. Take, for instance, the problem presented where two narrow windows are so close together in one wall as to give a cramped appearance to the room. To tear down the intervening wall space and throw it open into one large window is an expensive proposition. Yet the same effect can be achieved by building in a plain, pier mirror. This gives the impression of one wide stretch of light, and, in fact, the room is made lighter by the reflections afforded.

Mirror window sills are not only practicable but serviceable and very beautiful.

Useful in Remodeling.

An uninteresting niche, in an old house, may be lined with mirrors and shelved with them. This shelving sets off and adds luster to small objects of art, potteries or treasures of other lands.

Again in remodeling, mirrors may solve the problem of what to do with ungainly pillars in archway or hall. By paneling them with mirror glass, they become a focal point of decoration, adding a mystical touch of multiple reflections.

Perhaps your problem in remodeling is a door in one side of the room that gives an unbalanced effect. In such a case, a built-in panel mirror, painted to resemble a grille door, will give the necessary balance and also will afford an impression of greater width.

In small foyer entrances to apartments, where little or no furniture can be used, carved mirror wall panels are most effective. Plain strips of mirror may be painted to look like bird cages with canaries on diminutive perches, and used as the motif in solarium or dining room.

Will Brighten Stair-well.

One of the most difficult parts of a house to treat artistically is the stair-well. Narrow mirror panels can be placed so as to lend enchantment to this ordinarily uninteresting passageway.

Since judging the quality of a mirror is difficult for the amateur, manufacturers have simplified the process by official grading, in collaboration with the Bureau of Standards of the U. S. Department of Commerce.

Grade "AA" represents as near perfection as it is possible to manufacture. Mirrors of this quality are entirely free from major defects. Grade "A" allows no major defects in the central area, but may contain a few well-scattered bubbles or other minor defects. These two classes, however, are a very small percentage of the entire mirror production.

Sufficiently flawless to satisfy the average buyer is Grade No. 1, which permits only certain ordinary defects inherent in most plate glass, such as scattered bubbles and faint hairlines.

Grade No. 2 contains more readily seen defects, such as light, wavy lines, occasional coarse bubbles and sometimes a wavy defect known as "bull's-eye."

Grade No. 3 may contain all the defects found in plate glass. The latter grade should be examined carefully before purchasing; it may be satisfactory for some needs, but not for others.

Proper Care Important.

The care of mirrors is important. They should be washed in clear water, with a clean, soft cheesecloth and dried with cheesecloth, then polished with chamois. If the mirror surface has not been cleaned often enough, a commercial paste or cake may be used. It then should be wiped off with soft cloth and polished with a cloth moistened in alcohol. Care should be taken in washing framed mirrors that liquid does not get between frame and glass.

Annapolis Roads Club Will Reopen

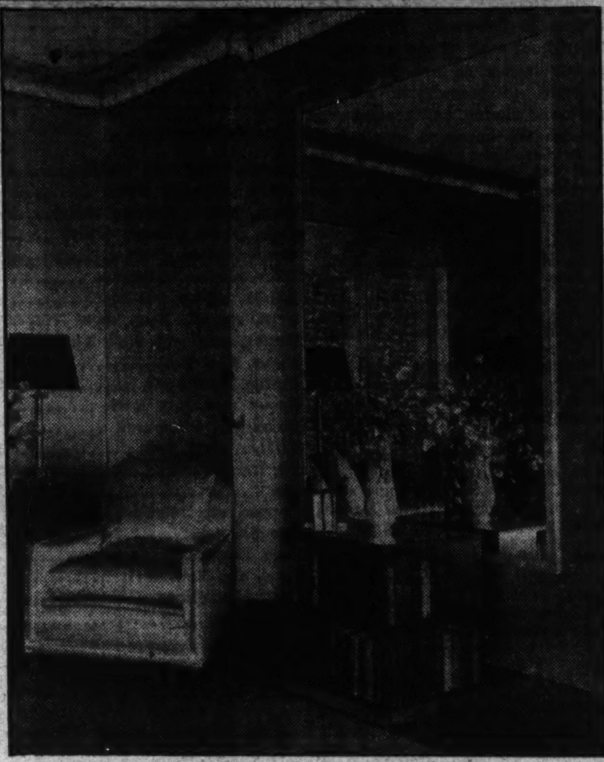
New Management Takes Charge July 1.

Annapolis, Md., June 23 (Spl.).—With a lower tariff for membership, the Annapolis Roads Club, popular and fashionable beach resort near Annapolis, will be formally reopened under new management July 1, it was announced yesterday.

The final court transaction in connection with sale of the property to the Equitable Co. of Washington under mortgage proceedings, has been consummated, and the Equitable Co. has leased it to the New Annapolis Roads Club, Inc., headed by S. G. Loeffler, of Washington, who has had 14 years' experience in handling golf courses and clubs. Edward I. Farr will manage the clubhouse, beach club and golf club. He was formerly manager of the Marblehead Club, Philadelphia, and manager of the Beaver Dam Country Club.

All life memberships and other holdings under the old regime were automatically erased with the transfer of the property and the new scale of membership adopted shows three classifications as follows: $50 annually for use of golf and beach club, and no further charge except for locker; $25 for use of the beach club only; $10 entitling holder to use golf club for $1 for each day, and beach club, 50 cents per day. The Washington office of the new club, in charge of Frank B. Ochsenreiter, is located in Room 212, Munsey Building.

How Mirrors May Be Used in Home Remodeling



Old-fashioned "sliding doors" between living and dining rooms once were popular, but never beautiful. The same space can be treated in a manner that lends light and spaciousness to the room by the use of double doors lined with mirrors, as illustrated above.

Wall space in a small room may be utilized to give an air of greater distance by building in a mirror in the manner shown in the lower photograph. Both treatments are particularly adaptable to remodeling.

HOLC Reports 306,887 Aided In First Year

$923,416,733 in Bonds, Cash Advanced Since Law Took Effect.

A total of 306,887 individual homes throughout the country have been refinanced to date by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, marking the first full year since the passage of the home owners' loan act, according to the weekly report of the corporation covering operations up to June 15, issued recently.

Bonds and cash amounting to $923,416,733 have been advanced to mortgagees, taxing authorities and other creditors to save these homes from foreclosure or tax sale, and expended on necessary repairs, the report showed.

Applications to the numbers of 20,942 were received during the week ended June 15, the smallest number of applications in any week since the first of the year, and possibly an indication that the flood of applications for aid has begun to taper off.

Office Quickly Organized.

The home owners' loan act, authorizing $2,200,000,000 in bonds and cash for relief of home owners, was signed by the President on June 13, 1933, and by early September offices which were set up to administer the act were functioning in every State. A "wholesale" department, to take over home mortgages held by closed and restricted banks, was organized shortly afterward.

Investigation of applications and closing of loans were accelerated especially after the guarantee of principal of the bonds became certain early this year, and for the past several months loans have been concluded at the rate of approximately 15,000 transactions, averaging $45,000,000, weekly.

During the week of June 15, 16,442 loans, to a total of $52,308,676, were closed. To date applications for loans number 1,465,941, amounting to $4,702,441,796. The amount of the average loan closed is $3,008.

An additional $900,000,000 in bonds for the refunding of past-due mortgages, making a total of $3,100,000,000 in resources of the corporation, was authorized under the National housing act, passed by Congress recently.

Varnish, Wax and Oil Tables.

If you have a table that you wish to finish, select a high grade water-resisting spar varnish that will not turn white when hot liquids are inadvertently spilled upon it. Waxing or oiling will help keep it in good condition.

Realtors Plan Careful Study Of Housing Bill

Many Changes in Business Method and Service Are Involved.

The National housing bill, implementing President Roosevelt's plan for drawing some $1,500,000,000 of private capital into home building and reconditioning under Federal mutual mortgage insurance—the expected central pivot for the future swing of mortgage practice and home building, becomes a central topic for the coming annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards at Minneapolis this week.

The convention will discuss the changes in outlook involved in this bill, the Administration plan for putting the legislation into sound operation and changes in business method and service involved under the bill.

The association has offered its services in working out proposed details of the application of the plan to local communities. It emphasizes the significance of the discount power given to Home Loan banks under the plan, and the importance of developing a well-organized appraisal system as a foundation for the proposed mortgage structure.

The convention will center on changes of method called for by changing general business and social conditions.

Seattle Man in Mortgage Talk.

W. Water Williams, Seattle, president of the Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, will address the mortgage and finance division on "Mortgage Banking Under the New Deal." L. E. Mahan, president of the L. E. Mahan Co., St. Louis, will talk to the mortgage specialists on adjusting the mortgage business to meet present conditions. A. D. Fraser, Cleveland, will speak on the organization and administration of a mortgage business.

The securities act of 1933 and the important question of regulations with respect to real estate mortgages will be discussed by Robert E. O'Dea, of the Chicago Title and Trust Co.

Albert L. Deane, president of the General Motors Holding Corporation, will address the Land Developers and Home Builders Division on Federal aid for the home builder and owner.

Miamian on Selling.

Robert L. Davison, New York, director of research for the Pierce Foundation, will outline to the home builders present trends in building materials and equipment.

"A New Deal in New Home Selling" will be discussed by Guy W. Ellis, vice president of the Keyes Co., Miami Beach, Fla., known to all realtors for his work in National sales conferences.

Grooming properties for the new market will be a forward-looking topic of the new Institute of Real Estate Management. R. M. Dinsmore, of Brooklyn, will open this discussion.

C. A. Mullenix, president of Cuyahoga Estates Co., Cleveland, devoted exclusively to the management of income property, will talk on "Creative Management."

Arthur S. Kirk, of the Chamberlain-Kirk Co., Des Moines, Iowa, will talk on "Building and Operating a Management Business." George F. Anderson, Chicago, will address the management institute on security devices in leases.

Secretaries Meet at Noon.

A. N. Gitterman, managing director of Realty Advisory Service, New York City, will address the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers on real estate data, its filing and use to New Deal appraisers. Realty Advisory Service maintains a statistical department for collating, codyfying and abstracting information of all sales, leases, mortgages, building plans, alterations, &c., in the Borough of Manhattan, collates monetary indices, building materials and labor costs and special data to show neighborhood and population trends.

Conditions under the New Deal that have a bearing upon appraisal of industrial property will be discussed by K. Lee Hyder, M. A. I., Milwaukee, assistant vice president of the American Appraisal Co. The discussion will have special reference to appraisal for financing.

To enable secretaries of real estate boards to circulate through all meetings, the realtor secretaries division will hold its own sessions at the noon interval—as Dutch-treat luncheons—on June 27, 28 and 29. Up for informal discussion are (1) Secretary's duties under the real estate brokerage code; (2) Summary of National legislation that affects property rights; (3) Would a National real estate sales campaign be practical?

Refinished Floors Improve Interiors

Refinished floors add much to the appearance of the home interiors. Floors should first be thoroughly washed with soap and warm water. Worn places should be touched up with stain or paint, as needed, and then the floor given a coat of shellac, varnish or floor paint, as the case may be.

Repaint 3 to 5 Years.

The average frame house requires renewed paint protection every 3 to 5 years. Metal work, if exposed to moisture and the action of rust, may require more frequent recoating.

"Spatter" Gives Floors That Colonial Finish

The splatter floor finish, widely used in colonial houses, especially in New England, is obtained by painting the floor in a dark shade and spattering it with contrasting color in lighter tones. Spattering is done by dipping the brush into the lighter color and then striking the handle of the paint brush sharply, continuing until a uniformity of spatter is obtained.

Old Ivory Finish.

To create a finish having the appearance of old ivory, tint light ivory paint with a little raw sienna and burnt umber. Over this ground finish, a glaze coating of raw sienna mixed with burnt umber may be applied.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JUNE 24, 1934

Stock Trading Is Dullest in Many Years

Market Gains Six-tenths as Turnover Drops to 233,350 Shares.

New York, June 23 (AP).—With trading for a Saturday session the dullest in nearly ten years, stocks made a gesture toward recovery today but failed to match the exuberant rally of the grain market.

After four days of declining prices, the share market met sufficient support at the week-end to lift prices of leading issues fractionally to more than 2 points.

As selling dried up, traders had to bid for stock to cover short commitments in evening-up their accounts for the week-end. Volume on the stock exchange during the two hours of trading totaled only 233,350 shares, the smallest turnover recorded for a like session since September 13, 1924. A week ago turnover amounted to 576,295 shares.

Motor Shares Improve.

Motor shares, which were targets of selling yesterday, reflected improvement in their technical position and recovered fractions to more than a point of their losses.

The Standard Statistics Co. average price for 90 stocks moved up six-tenths of a point to 78.1.

Generally, the character of the market was not changed essentially. Speculative inertia was pronounced, as most traders clung to the sidelines waiting for incentive to renewal of activity. Despite efforts to dispel timidity of speculators in accepting Federal rule of exchanges, caution was the dominant note as Wall street waited for the exchange control act to become operative July 1 and for a better view of summer business prospects.

On Rising List.

American Telephone, United States Steel, General Motors, General Electric, Chrysler, American Can, Montgomery Ward, Santa Fe and New York Central were fractionally higher at the close.

Passage of the housing bill in the final session of Congress attracted much interest, but had no effect upon the securities markets, for it was felt that the $200,000,000 home renovation plan would not develop rapidly enough to have any appreciable effect upon general business before autumn, and that new home building probably would not develop in volume until next spring.

Indications of active Treasury accumulation of silver appeared, some after the new silver policy act was signed, but financial markets on the whole remained apathetic, as inflationary implications for the nearer future seemed lacking.

The dollar was again inclined to strengthen in the foreign exchange markets. Political and economic developments in Germany were watched with some apprehension, but the Reichsbank maintained its firm grip on the mark. Some important international banking quarters were still inclined to look for eventual devaluation, despite Dr. Schacht's vigorous statements to the contrary.

U. S.-Canadian Wheat Exports Rise in Week

New York, June 23.—Exports of wheat (including flour as wheat) from United States and Canadian ports, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., for the week ended June 16, 1934, totaled 3,611,730 bushels, as compared with 2,539,031 bushels in the previous week and 5,915,579 bushels in the corresponding week of last year. For the season, July 1 to date, wheat exports aggregated 195,903,583 bushels, as against 272,634,874 bushels for the same period a year ago.

Corn exports for this week were 2,000 bushels, compared with 1,000 bushels in the preceding week and none last year. For the season, corn exports totaled 695,000 bushels, as against 4,941,742 bushels for the like period in the previous year.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Domination of Reserve System by Treasury Makes the Shift to Long-Term Governments Last Week an Insignificant Development.

By Ralph West Robey.

Two or three years ago a change in the portfolio of the Federal Reserve System of the character that has just been made would have been viewed, and properly so, as a development of extraordinary importance. This change has been a shift of $66,000,000 from short-term Government obligations to 14-year bonds. At present, however, the move scarcely is worthy of attention except as an indication of the direction in which we are moving in matters of finance.

The reason such a step would have been assigned such importance only a short time ago is that it is directly contrary to accepted policy for a central bank to keep its funds tied up in long-term obligations. Underlying this policy is not mere academic theory but the fact that a central bank's primary responsibility is to maintain the liquidity of the credit system of the country. It does this through serving as a buffer against unexpected strains, using for this purpose the ultimate reserves of the banking system.

Reserves May Be Compared To Savings Against Rainy Day.

These ultimate reserves are somewhat in the nature of savings that everyone likes to have put aside against unexpected misfortunes. One hopes that it never will be necessary to use them, but nevertheless he recognizes that he may have to and consequently in his investment of such funds he considers two things, safety and realizability. If he does not have the first, the savings may be lost; if he does not have the second, he will be unable to get the funds when he needs them.

Now, a central banking system is faced with the same type of a problem. It must invest only in the safest paper available, but over and above this it must keep its funds employed in such a manner that they are available. If it fails to do this it will be unable to meet the strains that forever are developing even in the best-run banking system.

Specifically, what this means from the point of view of a central bank, is that it must never invest its funds in anything but self-liquidating paper — paper which will be paid off in a few months at the most through the completion of a normal business transaction. If its portfolio consists only of this kind of paper there will be a constant replenishment of its funds. The reserves, in other words, may be used over and over as a revolving fund instead of becoming permanently exhausted on the first operation through being tied up in long-term investments.

Central Banks Have Bought Only Short-Term Governments.

In following out this policy it has been the practice of central banks to limit their holdings of Government obligations to short-term paper. This has not been, let me emphasize, because this was any safer than the long-term paper, but simply because it was easier to realize upon in case of necessity.

During the last few years, however, the Federal Reserve system has been brought so completely under the domination of the United States Treasury that all possibility of reducing its Government portfolio as a means of replenishing its funds has been eliminated. Whether it holds long or short term obligations, therefore, is of no moment. Its portfolio is equally frozen in either case, for were it to start to sell its Governments, and the Treasury did not come to the support of the market, the prices would break wide open.

In such a situation the question naturally arises as to what would happen should a strain develop. The answer is that the Reserve banks would look to the Treasury. Then comes the question: But where would the Treasury get the money? The answer is: Borrow it as long as possible, and then start the printing presses.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 86.3 Level

Trading Dwindles to Ebb as Transfers Total Only $4,033,000.

New York, June 23 (AP).—While prices were fairly steady in today's brief bond market, trading was virtually at a standstill throughout the greater part of the session.

Transfers totaled only $4,033,000, par value, the lowest Saturday's aggregate since September 9, last year. This compared with a turnover of $6,273,000 on Saturday, a week ago.

The Standard Statistics Co. average for 60 domestic corporate loans was unchanged at 86.3. On the week this average showed a loss of fourteenths of a point.

News Is Scarce.

News and views were scarce and most potential buyers and sellers were inclined to remain on the sidelines until the political and economic outlooks become somewhat clearer. At the same time prime investment bonds maintained their top positions and a number of secondary issues rallied moderately.

Among gainers of fractions to a point or so were loans of Armour & Co., Baltimore & Ohio, St. Paul, Chicago & Northwestern, Cuba Northern, Denver Gas, Erie, Goodrich, Great Northern, Inland Steel, International Hydro-Electric, International Telephone, Lehigh Valley, Louisville & Nashville, Morris & Co., N. Y. Central, New Haven, Northern Ohio Traction, Northern Pacific, Postal Telegraph, Union Pacific, Western Maryland and Western Union.

List of Losers.

Small losers included liens of Wheeling & Lake Erie, Warner Bros., Utilities Power & Light, Standard Oil of New Jersey and California, Southern Railway, Southern Pacific, Pennsylvania Power, Missouri Pacific, American & Foreign Power and Alleghany Corporation.

U. S. Government securities were unusually quiet and slightly mixed.

In the foreign department obligations of Australia recovered up to 2 points. The Germans, however, were again reactionary.

Guano Deposits Threatened.

Steps are now being taken by the Chilean Government to regulate the guano industry and protect guano-producing birds, in an effort to avert the threatened exhaustion of the country's rich guano deposits, according to Consul F. B. Atwood, in a report made public by the Commerce Department.

Curb Leaders Gain Slightly; Oils Decline

Trading Turns Dullest in Month; Few Issues Are Active.

New York, June 23 (AP).—Trading was the slowest in nearly a month on the Curb Exchange today and price fluctuations were confined to a point or less. Active issues were few in number.

Oil shares, which had shown a decided downward tendency throughout most of the week, were in fair demand as a result of short covering in preparation for the week-end closing, and a number of the leaders improved small fractions to around a point, among them Gulf Oil, International Petroleum, Humble Oil, Imperial Oil and Standard of Indiana.

Other issues showing improvement at the close included Technicolor, National Bellas Hess, Hiram Walker, Armour & Co. (new), Carib Syndicate, Fairchild, Fisk Rubber, General Aviation, Great Atlantic & Pacific and Holinger Gold.

Utilities and metals were extremely apathetic, but the former group showed good resistance to a moderate amount of selling. Such issues as American Gas and United Gas preferred, gained around a point, and Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, Electric Bond & Share common and preferred, Cities Service preferred "B," and others were slightly higher.

Revivals Found in Ascendency In Spite of Seasonal Handicaps

By Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., New York, June 23.—While business continues to be swayed by the dominance of seasonal influences, recovery is in the ascendency, although latterly it has become steadier, with a conspicuous absence of spectacular gains in any one division.

The slow broadening process in evidence since the first of the year has removed the isolated peaks that outlined progress a year ago, but has left the general level higher than it was at that time, despite the weight which the great mass of unemployment throws heavily upon it.

The general pace of business has yet to be slowed, as the narrower gains revealed in comparisons with a year ago are not indicative of a general let-down, for it was in June, 1933, that the impetus of the New Deal and rising prices pushed activity in many branches to within striking distance of the 1931 level.

Business More Cheerful.

With legislative uncertainties removed by the adjournment of Congress, business sentiment has assumed a more cheerful tone, as during the balance of the year attention may be concentrated on pertinent administrative affairs and trade development, unhampered by the necessity of making constant adjustments to retardative extraneuos influences.

Early estimates on fall distribution are running from 15 to 25 per cent above the 1933 figures, as the Government seems determined to permit no relapse in trade movements, and the plans which are to be disclosed shortly may result in a more liberal upward revision of this percentage.

Both from an industrial and commercial standpoint, the reports received from all parts of the country this week depict the situation as continuing favorable, with only minor seasonal declines noticeable, as yet. If anything, the contrary prevails, and improvement would be more general, if it were not for labor difficulties, both actual and threatening, in a number of districts.

Restraints Breaking Down.

There is a gradual breaking down of the restraints, which have been making headway difficult, and as soon as bearings will have been taken of the changed situation, an upswing based on a more solid foundation than that which developed a year ago is in prospect.

Fewer complexities are noted than a month ago, and the present is being viewed as a resting period before the march forward is resumed. Prices gradually are reaching a more normal level, having shaken off most of the artificial stimuli, which failed to bring the desired increase in buying.

In fact, it is becoming increasingly evident that the greatest invigorator to purchasing power from now on must be provided by the capital goods industries, the recovery of which has been throttled by fears and threats, which have made business men timid about contracting for capital outlays, even though manufacturers of consumers' goods have completed plans for releasing millions for new equipment.

Hides—The week's sales included about 34,000 hides transferred at Chicago at 9½ cents a pound for light native cows and Colorado steers; branded and heavy native cows at 9 cents. These prices were unchanged from the previous sales. In the New York spot market 2,600 heavy native steers sold at 10½ cents a pound.

Farm equipment—"While the abrupt rise in sales since the first of the year was checked during June in some lines," says Dun & Bradstreet, "other branches were benefited, so that the showing for 1934 is expected to be the best one recorded for the trade in three years."

Zinc—United States production in May totaled 30,992 tons against 30,562 in April. Domestic stocks at the end of May were 104,732 tons against 109,375 a month earlier.

Carbon black—Bookings for July delivery have been comparatively light thus far and producers are said to expect a slackening demand over the next two months. June deliveries are estimated below those of May.

Canned foods—The price on California pears, 1934 pack, has been advanced, putting choice brands on the basis of $1.85 per case, Pacific Coast.

Wheat Values Jump Under Buying Rush

European Loss Report Is Trade Incentive; Corn and Oats Rise.

Chicago, June 23 (AP).—A big outburst of speculative buying shot wheat and rye straight upward more than 3 cents a bushel today and corn more than 2 cents.

Sensational reported drought losses both of bread grains and of feed grain crops in Europe, losses estimated at approximately 1,400,000,000 bushels as compared with last year, supplied the chief incentive to buyers.

Fears of a damaging heat wave in Canada added to the skyward impetus of prices, and so did reports of probable outright failure of the wheat crop of southeastern Saskatchewan Province, Canada, involving 10,000,000 bushels.

Wheat Closes Buoyant.

Wheat closed buoyant at virtually the day's top quotations, 2¾ to 3⅛ cents above yesterday's finish, corn 1⅝ to 2⅛ up, oats 1 to 1¼ advanced, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 10 cents.

Conspicuous among the day's developments in the wheat market was the fact that Kansas City prices showed much greater strength than wheat values elsewhere, notwithstanding arrivals of new crop wheat at Kansas City were enlarging rapidly.

Indeed the movement of freshly harvested domestic winter wheat in the Southwest today reached the greatest volume yet this season, totaling 2,056 cars at 10 Southwestern terminals. Unlike experience on any previous day, the pressure of this wheat was readily absorbed, one reason given being that millers were active buyers at Kansas City, paying liberal premiums for good milling wheat.

Jumps of wheat prices in Chicago began as soon as trading commenced, but were successively outdone by Kansas City, where a maximum rise of 4⅛ cents a bushel was shown at the close. Participating in the Chicago stampede to purchase were numerous Eastern stock market sources and Chicago professional operators as well as flour milling interests.

Europe's Wheat Shortage.

The European wheat crop shortage was estimated at 480,000,000 bushels as compared with the harvest in 1933. The companion breadstuff rye was figured as showing a deficiency of 229,500,000 bushels.

Incidentally Liverpool dispatches laid special stress on reports today of severe drought over eastern Australia, emphasizing that drought effects have been world wide.

A leading crop expert said that corn destruction by chinch bugs this season would be almost continuous throughout the entire 1934 corn growth period.

Provisions advanced with grains despite downturns of hog values. It was pointed out that lard was selling below present cost of manufacture, and that indications of decreasing stocks of lard were apparent.

Food Prices Rise 2 Cents To New High

New York, June 23.—Wholesale food prices continued to advance into new high ground in the past week. The Weekly Food Index, compiled by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., for June 19, rose another 2 cents, to stand at $2.19. This increase followed advances of 3 cents in each of the two weeks preceding, and brought the current index to the highest level since August 12, 1931.

Compared with the like week of last year, when the index stood at $1.89, food prices show a rise of 15.9 per cent and it is interesting to note that the total rise since March 1, 1933, now amounts to almost 50 per cent.

The Dun & Bradstreet Weekly Food Index of wholesale prices (the sum total of the price per pound of 31 articles in common use) compared with preceding weeks and years is given herewith:

Women Called Brain Trust Of Business

Sales Expert Says They Control 85 Per Cent of All Purchases.

The real brain trust which most controls the business of this country is its women, according to James A. Sterling, advertising and sales promotion manager of the Norge Corporation, Detroit, manufacturers of Rollator refrigerators and other home appliances, who is in town to introduce a summer sales drive at a meeting sponsored by Columbia Wholesalers, Inc., distributors for this area, held at the Mayflower Hotel on Friday night and which all Norge dealers from a wide surrounding area attended.

"American housewives are our real brain trust," said Mr. Sterling. "They control the purchase of 85 per cent of all goods sold at retail. Upon their clear thinking, careful buying habits, the destinies of all manufacturers and retailers depend. No tradesman dares overlook their comparative shopping methods. They seldom make a buying decision in haste, particularly in the purchase of home appliances which require major investment and are bought for lifetime satisfaction.

"After shrewd comparative shopping the average housewife selects the one electric refrigerator which has most vital differences, compared with others. Price is seldom a determining factor in the selection, because, when buying for lifetime performance, a woman knows the cheapest price may often be most extravagant. She judges differences in mechanism, convenience features, operating cost and styling which makes one product stand out from others as a better buy. Thus, in every line of business, the product having the most demonstrable vital distinction, provided its plus values are made known through newspaper advertising, is the one which wins greatest popular demand."

Retail Failures Rise Highest Since April 26

New York, June 23.—A rise to the highest level since the week ended April 26 featured business failures in the United States for the week ended June 14. The total reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was 251, compared with 239 in the week preceding, and 396 for the same period of 1933.

Retail failures rose to 149, against 145 a week earlier, and an increase of 10 defaults was registered for the manufacturing group. There was no change in the other commercial classification, while a decrease of 2 failures occurred among wholesalers.

When analyzed by geographical divisions, gains were confined to the Middle Atlantic, South Atlantic, Central East, Central West and Pacific. In three regions, the New England, South Central and Western, the number was reduced.

Export Trade of Italy Declines to Low Level

Italy's export trade declined to a notably low level during the first quarter of the current year, according to a report prepared in the Commerce Department's division of regional information.

In the January-March period exports were valued at 1,271,400,000 lire, a decrease of 14.7 per cent compared with the corresponding period of 1933, and this showing was particularly unsatisfactory in contrast with the coincidental advance in imports by 4.2 per cent to 2,006,700,000 lire.

Bank Clearings Of Week Rise 0.5 Per Cent

New York, June 23.—Bank clearings continue to show some irregularity at a number of points. The total for this week at all leading cities in the United States, as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., was $5,580,286,000, an increase of 0.5 per cent over the amount reported for the corresponding week of 1933. This contrasted with a gain of 3.5 per cent a week earlier. At New York City, clearings were $3,878,489,000, a loss of 4.4 per cent, while the total of $1,701,797,000 for all outside centers was higher by 13.6 per cent than that of a year ago.

Both New York City and Boston again contributed losses this week. Substantially higher clearings are shown at some of the outside centers. The large increase at some of these points, however, reflects the continued restriction in banking operations at these cities a year ago. This week's clearings, as well as those of last year, cover large settlements for corporation tax payments, due at this time.

Figures for leading cities, compared with those of last year, are printed herewith; also, daily bank clearings for the year to date:

Cotton's Gain Is Trimmed In Late Trading

July Closes at 11.94 as General Market Rises 3 to 5 Points.

New York, June 23 (AP).—After a moderate advance in the early trading on unfavorable weather reports from the Southwest, cotton reacted partially under continued July liquidation and week-end realizing.

October contracts after advancing to 12.26, or 8 points above yesterday's closing, finished at 12.22, while the general market ended steady at net advances of 3 to 5 points.

During the first hour, in addition to covering and local or scattering commission house demand, there was buying here through brokers with foreign trade connections, and prices showed considerable firmness on the outlook for continued dry weather in Texas tonight and tomorrow.

Active months sold 8 to 10 points above the previous finals, with July advancing to 11.99 and December to 12.38, but July liquidation continued in considerable volume and there was some scattered selling in the late trading. Closing quotations showed reactions of about 4 to 5 points from the best on the more active positions.

There was heavy switching from July to later months, but the trade bought July freely at the wider differences and the selling of the later deliveries was absorbed by buying on the weather news and the favorable action of the wheat and stock markets.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 105,000 bales, against 155,000 last year and 74,000 two years ago.

U. S. Acquires 100,000,000 Units Of Silver

Plans Ready to Purchase 1,300,000,000 Ounces Under Money Act.

By Richard L. Gridley.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Approximately 100,000,000 ounces of silver have been acquired by the Federal Government at a cost of around $50,000,000 since the Roosevelt Administration began the rehabilitation of silver, it was estimated semiofficially this week.

About 65,000,000 ounces were believed to have been secretly acquired in London and New York over the past few months by the Government's $2,000,000,000 exchange stabilization fund. The cost was believed to be from 40 to 50 cents an ounce.

An additional 20,000,000 ounces were acquired last summer at 50 cents an ounce from Great Britain, representing that country's June 15 war debt payment; 8,000,000 ounces of newly mined metal have been acquired at 64½ cents an ounce from American producers since December. Several million ounces more are believed to have been purchased directly in the open market in the past few days.

Large Purchase Planned.

Secretary of Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., was drawing plans yesterday for the purchase of nearly 1,300,000,000 additional ounces of silver to carry out provisions of the silver purchase act of 1934, which provides that the country's silver monetary reserves be increased until they reach one-third of the size of the monetary gold stocks.

Morgenthau said he expected to bring about a rise in the price of silver which many Administration and Congressional leaders hope will contribute to higher commodity prices. Elaborate safeguards have been put into effect to prevent speculators from "cashing in" on the Government's price lifting scheme .

If the estimated 100,000,000 ounces recently acquired were obtained at an average price of 50 cents an ounce, the Government has a huge paper profit, as each ounce in silver represents $1.29 when used as monetary backing. The profit on 100,000,000 ounces at 50 cents an ounce is $89,000,000.

Possible Federal Profit.

If the entire 1,300,000,000 ounces to be acquired under the law is obtained at favorable prices, the eventual "profit" of the Government might easily approach the billion dollar mark.

This "profit," however, is not to be carried on the books of the Treasury Department. Metal bought under the new silver purchase act is to be carried at cost price. Under the law as fast as a dollar is spent for silver, a dollar in silver currency will be printed. If the silver is bought at less than $1.29 per ounce, some silver will be left over, but will not appear on the books.

Preparations for increased use of silver money are being made. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing will shortly begin to print millons of dollars worth of new silver currency.

In an effort to increase its use it is being printed in $5 and $10 denominations. At present the outstanding silver currency consists only of $494,225,271 in one-dollar certificates.

Silk Producers Concerned.

The almost complete dependence of Japan's silk industry on the American market is beginning to cause concern among producers in that country, according to a report to the Commerce Department from its Tokyo office.

MEN
SINCERE MEN OF
THOUGHT AND ACTION

Within the past few weeks we have hired several men in Washington and surrounding territory who today will tell you they are in the most pleasant and profitable business of their lives. Maybe you, too, will meet our requirements and find that a connection with us will prove profitable for you.

We have nothing to sell you. If you are acceptable we do not ask you to do anything that other men in Washington are not doing successfully each day. But we do most emphatically state if you meet our requirements as to character, references, &c., we will give you as good, if not better, opportunity than you have ever had to make a good, honest, honorable living for yourself and your family, on a compensation plan of bonus plus liberal commission, with no investment of any kind from you. The work is dignified and pleasant and you will be glad to look your friend in the eye and tell him about it. The pay is exceptionally good. Especially interested in men from Washington and northern Virginia.

If you earnestly want an opportunity to better yourself and are willing to put sincere thought and action into your work we will be glad to meet you personally Monday morning at 9:15 in the Blue Room of the Hamilton Hotel. Come prepared to spend the entire morning.

Washington Takes Rank as Four-Week Stand in Midst of Summer Heat

JANET GAYNOR,
one of the most ingenuous of the cinema's younger stars, who is said to take on a new maturity in her role opposite Charles Farrell in "Change of Heart," adapted from a story by Kathleen Norris, current at Loew's Palace Theater. The Gaynor-Farrell screen partnership is one of the most popular Hollywood is able to offer.

The Advocates of Film Reform State Their Cases With Ardor

Opinions Are Both Informed and Uninformed, But All Manifest Willingness to Condemn the Good With the Bad.

By Nelson B. Bell.

THE deep-rooted earnestness of those engaged in the campaign of reform, aimed at the motion picture industry, that is sweeping the country has been eloquently attested during the past week by the widespread and divergent responses elicited by this column's comments upon the purposes and methods of the Legion of Decency, the Federation of Women's Clubs, the Research Council and the religious and civic groups that are concentrating their forces upon the furtherance of the crusade.

Many of the reactions, as they have expressed themselves over the telephone or by letter, have betrayed a complete unfamiliarity with even the most fundamental concepts of those engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

They blame the screen for evils of which it could not possibly be guilty to the degree that the conscientious objectors pretend to believe.

The implication in many instances is that juvenile delinquency was unknown in the world prior to 1909, when the first motion pictures attempting the relation of a dramatic narrative were being made. This, of course, is arrant nonsense.

Another assumption that can not be sustained is that the entire structure of the picture industry is degraded, sodden and destructive. One is asked to believe that no decent impulse is possible to those primarily concerned in the making of the world's film fare.

It is only to these extravagances of condemnation that this department objects and finds it impossible to support.

By frequent declaration and the printed record of many years, we yield to no one in resentment at the obtrusion of indecency upon the screen, in the living theater or upon the printed page of modern fiction.

As among these mediums of expression we believe the cinema to be least guilty of transgression. Its versions of fictional and stage works are the cleanest made available to the mass public in quest of entertainment. This is patent to anyone who reads and attends the theater.

Our quarrel, if we have any, with the present drive for betterment is not that it seeks to eliminate the evil, but that in so doing it is apparently willing to condemn all that is good, without differentiation, particularization as to what is deemed unfit for public consumption or any specification of the definite objects of its retributive processes.

This is no part of equity, fair play or justice.

* * * *

ONE of the most comprehensive treatises upon the viewpoint and intent of those actively engaged in fostering the campaign of reform bears date of June 18, 1934, over the signature of Robert S. Lloyd, S. J., headmaster of the Georgetown Preparatory School, at Garrett Park, Md.

My respected correspondent flatters the writer by stating in his opening paragraph:

> Yesterday I read your article appearing in The Washington Post, entitled "The Human Equation is a Vital Element in Our Wave of Reform" and today again I read your "follow-up," entitled "Major Motion Picture Producers Conform Voluntarily to Wishes of Reformers."

He continues then with evidence of our obvious failure to make clear the attitude of mind in which we contemplate the movement that is sweeping the country in opposition to objectionable screen material, by saying:

> The tenor of each article leads one to believe that as a dramatic critic you are less interested in the common welfare of the American audience, which is desirous of clean entertainment, than you are in throwing up a smoke screen or an alibi or perhaps a little perfume over the degraded exponents of pictorial filth.

During a long acquaintanceship with leaders of the motion picture industry, dating back practically to the inception of this form of entertainment as an important factor in American amusements, I have met no one whom I could stigmatize as a "degraded exponent of pictorial filth."

There have been many mistakes, many lapses of judgment and numerous unfortunate film "trends," but the circumstances and conditions surrounding the gigantic business of supplying the bulk of the world's pictures are so complex, involve the exercise of so many executive minds and cover such tremendous ramifications that I find it impossible to identify the object of this particular denuncation.

The film industry fundamentally is a commercial project, governed by

Nautical Farce Enters Fourth Hilarious Week

'Sailor, Beware!' Establishes a New Stock Record at the National.

"Sailor, Beware," the nautical farce-comedy by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson, will sail into a fourth week at the National Theater beginning Monday night.

The June success of this rollicking comedy explodes a theory that Washington is a one-week town for stage attractions. In the past Channing Pollock defied this limited engagement belief by playing "The Fool" for a fortnight. "The Green Pastures" is another footlight favorite which ventured two weeks.

"Sailor, Beware," is the only attraction to win a four-week engagement in the ten-season history of the National Players. Singularly, the other plays which enjoyed a month were also presented by Manager Stephen E. Cochran. At the time he was operating the gone, but not forgotten, President Theater he played "White Cargo" and "Rain" to highly prosperous four-week engagements.

As most everybody knows, "Sailor Beware" is the saga of a sailor and his lass, "Dynamite" Jones, of the U. S. N., cherishes a garter as a memento of each romantic conquest. Miss Billie "Stonewall" Jackson is the monopolist of much of the virtue still discoverable in the Panama Canal Zone.

These two meet, and all the men of war and all the lights of love along the waterfront begin to bet on the outcome. The theme is ancient, but ever new. The solution is love. It is acted with a thumb to the nose and the four-week engagement attests its popularity with playgoers.

Roy Roberts and Ruth Abbott continue in the rich lead roles and the other "E" street favorites are pleasantly cast.

For the final week of the "Sailor Beware" engagement the usual matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday.

Plans Proceed To Inaugurate Biting Satire

Lyell MacLean, a new member of the Pierce Hall Players, has been cast in a prominent part in "Rhapsody in Blah," the new play by Frank Baer, which will be given its premiere performance on Thursday evening of this week. Miss MacLean was an active member of her dramatic group in the Castellja School of Palo Alto, Calif., before she recently came to Washington.

The first act of the play opens in the office of Congressman Hercules Rapp in the House Office Building with a conversation between Edmund Evans and Dorine Calcote, who have the roles of secretaries.

Appearing later in the scene are Harry Barnhart, as a bootlegger; Jesse Veitch, as the Congressman; Lyell MacLean, as his sister; Charles A. Bell, as his son, and Virginia True, as his daughter. Others in the play are Yerby Pannill, Paul Alexander, John Kendrick, Ruth Snodgrass, Kent Dyer, William Austin Davis, Clare Sargent, Charles A. Gillman, Clarence Ruebsam and James Kelley.

SALLY BURRILL,
feminine star of the "Words and Music" revue which comprises the sum total of the stage portion of this week's bill at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater. Miss Burrill is surrounded by a large cast and chorus of Chester Hale girls in one of the most elaborate stage productions the Earle has offered in many months of well-balanced vaudeville bills.

KAY FRANCIS,
who, as "Dr. Monica," is the screen star now featuring the cinematographic portion of the bill at the Warner Bros.' Earle Theater. The play of a young woman physician is said to afford the deep-throated Miss Francis one of the most fruitful opportunities she has had before the cameras.

At the Play in New York

By Mark Barron.

NEW YORK, June 23 (AP).—Inspired by a healthy upturn in theatrical business during the last year, Broadway producers after another fortnight will begin active work on an imposing schedule of new shows for the coming season.

An advance review discloses that the theater is reclaiming a number of celebrated writing names, and also indicates a boom market in musical shows.

Before going on tour with "Ah, Wilderness," George M. Cohan will stage a new play from his own pen called "He Won't Want You To" . . . At last that comic novel of a romantic Southern belle, "Cora Potts," has been dramatized for an August debut. Ward Greene is the author . . . Elisabeth Bergner, the English-Jewish actress who was ruled off the screen in Germany, will make her Broadway entrance in Margaret Kennedy's play, "Escape Me Never."

NOEL COWARD will have two new plays for the fall. One is "Conversation Piece," with Yvonne Printemps playing her first English-speaking role in this country, and the other is "Point Baline," which will bring Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne back from London . . . Paul Green's play about a steam shovel, "Potter's Field," is scheduled again, this being about the fourth straight year it has been listed.

Rowland Stebbins, who produced "The Green Pastures," will have as his initial entry a play about North Carolina mountaineers called "Tight Britches," with Jean Dixon in the leading role . . . Thomas Mitchell, back from his Hollywood sojourn, resumes with a Ben Hecht-Charles McArthur manuscript, "The Moon Shooter." Its theme offers an American Indian, a sort of modern Don Quixote, who decides to reform the world.

ELMER RICE, the most successful of the playwright-producers, has three works due. They are "Judgment Day," a melodrama with a European setting; "Between Two Worlds," which has its setting on an ocean liner, and "Not For Children," a satiric comedy . . . Claire Spencer's well known novel, "Gallows Orchard," has been dramatized by Noel Pierce. This is a seasoned entry, as it was tried out three years ago by Pauline Lord at Magnolia, Mass.

George S. Kaufman (in collaboration with Moss Hart) at last has written a play which isn't a comedy. It is "Merrily We Roll Along," in nine scenes with a cast of 100 . . . Then there is that dramatization of the biography of Nijinsky, the famous dancer. Paul Muni likely will play the title part.

Dubose Heyward and the Gershwin brothers, Ira and George, are composing an opera of "Porgy," the Negro play which was an outstanding hit of 1927.

Romance Finds Fruition When Hart Pens Hit

Admiration of Dancer Is Beginning of Later Close Association.

When the blonde and lovely Marilyn Miller, then a slinder wisp of a girl of 19, was starring in "Sally" 15 years ago at the New Amsterdam Theater in New York and attracting enormous audiences, a love-struck youth of 16 who was employed as an $18-a-week stenographer in one of the theatrical offices in the building over that playhouse used to drop in on matinee days (he was friendly with the doorman) and watch her dance.

To him she was a fairy princess, an unattainable dream goddess. If someone dowered with the gift of prophecy had taken him aside and told him that it was written in the stars that 14 years later she would be starring in a show written by himself and that he would be calling her "Marilyn" and taking her out to dinner and chatting with her in her dressing room between scenes he would have said that such a consummation, though devoutly to be wished, could not possibly come to pass.

And yet it has, for the poor young stenographer was none other than Moss Hart, coauthor with Irving Berlin of "As Thousands Cheer," that amazingly successful revue in which Miss Miller has been costarring with Clifton Webb and Helen Broderick at the Music Box in New York since last September.

While the piece was being written last summer he found himself invited to dinner by a friend who did not know of his youthful love-from-afar of the blonde actress.

"There'll be a lot of interesting people there," explained his friend, "including Marilyn Miller."

Mr. Hart's heart began to pound and he gasped:

"Do me a favor, will you? Let me sit alongside of her. Of course, you haven't the faintest idea of what it will mean to me, but it will mean a lot, I assure you."

He literally walked on the circumambient air all day and found himself stumbling and stuttering when he was presented to her that night.

Before the dessert was reached he asked her if she would be interested in assuming the leading role in the projected revue and almost collapsed when she said that she was quite free and would be delighted if the part were worth while.

"I'll make it worth while," he gallantly responded.

And so it came to pass that she was engaged a week later.

Kiddies' Days Are Announced

Every Monday and Friday, until Labor Day, will be Kiddies' Day on the Wilson Line and at new Marshall Hall Park.

Round trip rates will be reduced to 25 cents for adults and 10 cents for children on the boat leaving Washington at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. At Marshall Hall Park all rides will be half rate on these two days.

These kiddies' days have long been popular with thrifty mothers.

There will be three round trips every Monday and Friday, leaving Washington at 10 a. m., 2 p. m. and 5:30 p. m., and leaving Marshall Hall Park at 12 noon, 4 p. m. and 6:45 p. m.

JOE PENNER,
the lad who has become the favorite radio entertainer of the masses and who appears in person on the stage of Loew's Fox Theater this week as headliner of the vaudeville half of the bill. Mr. Penner is noted as duck salesman, cigar juggler and hat bouncer, as well as one of the most original singing comedians the stage has developed in years.

LUPE VELEZ,
the Mexican firecracker, recently in Washington on a week of personal appearances, who currently enlivens the screen at Loew's Fox Theater in "Hollywood Party," a lavish Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, with music, in which Jimmy Durante, Laurel and Hardy, Polly Moran and other stars of the M-G-M lot also cavort.

The Four Fords Offer Unique Spectacle of Celtic Harmony

When Engaged Jointly in Making Films They Become Smooth-Working Unit; Off the Set, However, They Are Four Scrappy Brothers.

WHILE the four Ford brothers of Hollywood, are no match at the moment for the Canadian quintuplets, as family appeal, they present a record intrinsically their own, as far as the film industry is concerned.

When John Ford completed the last scenes of the Fox Film "The World Moves On," which was in a few respects the largest in scope of his many directorial undertakings for the company, he and his brothers held one of their after-the-battle huddles.

They emerged with two clear concepts concerning the production and its broader ramifications. One was that "the family" as a focal point of human interest was again restored in films; the other that a new young player combination of importance had been discovered in the work of Madeleine Carroll and Franchot Tone. But the family idea appealed to them particularly, of course.

The brothers were not always named Ford. Their real family name is O'Fearne, and being Irish, originally, and brothers, they quarrel often.

"But it is not a real fight we do," explained Jack Ford. "It is more in the way of criticism over technical matters which come up while we are immersed in a production."

Phil and Ed, assistants to John, become strangers to their brother chief the moment work begins on the lot. They answer with a "yes, sir" and there is a ruthless hardness in their dealings which goes almost beyond actual necessity, as fellow craftsmen. Very often the actors new to the Fox lot do not know that the boys are brothers unless they are told.

Francis is the only actor among them and has "taken it" from his brothers under the lights, standing up valiantly through it all.

It has always been something of a miracle to Fox studio executives that so many brothers have not once had a serious quarrel which ended in estrangement. The bond of family seems stronger than any other influences. Perhaps it is films.

The Ford boys were all born in Portland, Me. John attended the University of Maine, at Orono, and planned to go into business, but the success of his brother Francis in directing and acting at Universal became a serious incentive for altered plans and John headed for the West Coast, where Francis took him on as an assistant, only after he had served in odd jobs around the studios.

He began working for Fox as a full-fledged director after he had done over 50 pictures elsewhere, being signed in 1919 by the Fox studio. He has worked for Fox almost exclusively since and has directed close to 40 productions.

His younger brothers came on West in their turn and were made assistants after they too were impressed with the fact that they must put in long periods of work, doing anyhing and everything on the lot. No one has ever been able to get a "still" of the Ford brothers in a group picture. They are too active, even for that. "And besides, we'd only fight over grouping," Jack explains.

In spite of the fact that John Ford has such productions as "The Iron Horse," "Cameo Kirby," "Arrowsmith," "Four Sons," "Up the River," "Pilgrimage" and "Lost Patrol" to his credit, he feels that there are certain universal notes rung in "The World Moves On" which have never given him a finer diversity of play in a single script.

"My actors felt this throughout the absorbing scenes and in many instances, particularly with such well-schooled people as Siegfried Rumann and Madeleine and Franchot, the scenes played themselves. This 'for the family' thing gets into your subconscious. Before long we were all one ourselves."

Nevertheless it is the Ford family which continues to hold precedent as a Hollywood industry exhibit. John is understood to be the leader of the bunch, in view of his veteran experience.

He always manages to gain the confidence of his players, no matter how externally severe his handling may appear to be, and his brothers concede that that is the real secret of his directorial prowess.

Facilities Are Diversified at Nearby Resort

The "leisure problem" is no problem at all to the thousands of Glen Echo Park fans, for an hour or a day can be profitably spent at the great resort in healthful outdoor recreation of all kinds and for every age.

The Crystal Pool offers peerless facilities for swimming, diving and splashing in its pure water. It's a hot weather tonic.

A turn or two on the thrilling coaster dip, the airplane swings, down in the old mill, or any of the 50 fun-making devices is certain to make one better fitted for the daily task, whatever its nature.

Every evening except Sunday the Spanish Garden Ballroom is the mecca for the dancers.

Country Dance A New Feature At Bay Resort

Dances that were popular when mother was a girl will be revived next Wednesday night at Seaside Park ballroom on the occasion of the inauguration of a weekly series of country dances.

The weekly country dances are designed to appeal particularly to the "Family Day" visitors to Seaside.

Frank Flanigan's snappy seven-piece orchestra will continue to play on week-ends the kind of music that the younger set prefers.

Next Thursday is Episcopal Day at Seaside.

Due to increased week-end patronage the Chesapeake Beach Railway has added additional trains on Saturdays.

Society Makes Offer to Find Film Remedies

In an effort to coordinate suggested changes in motion picture technic offered as the result of recent criticisms the American Society for Visual Education, through National headquarters in Washington, has issued an announcement of policy wherein the society volunteers to serve as a National clearing house for all such matters, favorable or unfavorable, from this time on. In this manner the society hopes to be able to assist in effecting any necessary reforms, or at least to aid in obtaining a compendium of thought on what changes or recommendations should be made, if any.

A general invitation has been issued through the executive secretary of the society, Mary Ann de Zevallos, and Maj. John Stewart Hunt, corresponding secretary, to organizations, groups or individuals, irrespective of race or creed, to communicate with the society's offices at 1622 H street northwest, Washington, D. C., or New York City, with the idea of opening a discussion and arriving at a possible conclusion.

Communications may be in such form as best may suit those initiating their views, and it is hoped to be able to develop, from this mass of opinion, some concrete idea of just what are the main criticisms of the films today, and if possible, some comprehensive plan for future wholesome development, not necessarily of the film industry as a whole but mainly for those propositions identified as pertaining principally to the educational angle.

During the past four years the American Society for Visual Education has been engaged in a study and analysis of the educational importance of the films. It is this experience that now is offered, with the proffer of any possible service that may be available under the circumstances. The society already has fairly definite ideas upon which to base a possible course of action.

Tracy and Colbert To Costar in Film

"Are Men Worth It," film adaptation of Tiffany Thayer's novel, "One Woman," will costar Lee Tracy and Claudette Colbert.

A Young "Show-Stealer" and His Bodyguard

The young gentleman on the left is Baby LeRoy, veteran star of the screen, who thinks nothing at all of stealing scenes from such novices as W. C. Fields, with whom he appears next in "The Old-Fashioned Way." On the right is Pal, official bodyguard of Master LeRoy, without whom the baby star refuses to go to the studio or fulfill any other of his numerous professional engagements.

Team Popular.

Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland have been teamed for the fourth time in "Her Master's Voice," which will go into production shortly after their present picture, "Melody in Spring."

For Gertrude.

Gertrude Michael's work in "Cleopatra" being unfinished, Judith Allen fills the part first scheduled for Miss Michael in "She Loves Me Not," with Bing Crosby and Miriam Hopkins.

Maid Acts.

Libby Taylor, Mae West's comically talented colored maid, last week stepped before the camera on the "It Ain't No Sin" set to play in the picture the part she plays in life.

Advocates of Film Reform

the same laws of supply and demand as govern the conduct of any other giant American industry. As was remarked last Sabbath in this space, a great deal that appears upon the screen, is enacted upon the stage and is printed in books appears in those places and is placed on the market because it has been satisfactorily demonstrated that that is what a vast number of American buyers wish to purchase and make profitable.

The human equation IS vital to this discussion and the successful outcome of the campaign now in progress.

In another paragraph of Headmaster Lloyd's interesting commentary this is said:

> You refer to the article by Mr. Edwin Schallert as "an exhaustive resume of the Hollywood viewpoint"—that is a little too strong for the simple reason that no one man can ever adequately "exhaust" the exposition of cinema degradation.
> You state: "What the patron wants is something to lift him into a state of mental exhilaration that he has always craved but can only achieve vicariously." By implicaion, you evidently hold that the average audience seeks vicarious mental exhilaration by witnessing the breakdown of law and order in the lives of others, especially racketeers and gangsters. If such is true you should not have limited yourself to the designation of racketeers and gangsters but you should have included the modern prostitute, pervert and purveyor of immoral filth.

The illustrative passages published last Sunday served only to point a state of mind in which a vast number of people approach any excursion into the theater. There are, however, names, descriptions and allusions that one customarily omits from the columns of the daily press, just as the Legion of Decency wishes them omitted from public entertainment, and for the same reason.

• • • •

A FURTHER consideration of our earlier remarks reveals the following:

> Both articles carry the phrases "wave of reform" and "wishes of reformers." This seems to imply that reformation is possible. It strikes me that the term "reform" in the present instance is inexact. We can not speak of "reforming" a disease . . . . One speaks of "charming" a snake, but never of reforming one.

This, I take it, is figurative hyperbole.

The concluding paragraph of Father Lloyd's letter is one to which I can wholeheartedly dedicate such cooperative efforts as I am able to exert:

> I do hope that you will have the goodness to cooperate with the League of Decency, the Federation of Women's Clubs and all the groups of Protestants, Catholics and Jews who are sincerely interested in preserving clean, healthy entertainment for the American people.

There can be no quibbling here. It brings up, nevertheless, the point that many have chided this department for having referred to the reform movement as "subterranean," "subtle" and "insidious."

It has seemed to me that it is all of these things by reason of a lack, as already stated, of particularization, the naming of names of those things which are to be condemned and boycotted and an equitable willingness to safeguard those things in the cinema which have been good.

There has been and will be no inclination on the part of this department to condone filth and demoralization on the screen, or elsewhere.

Neither will there ever be a willingness to encompass in any destructive gesture the forces that have brought to the silver sheet such distinguished and uplifting exhibits of the art of the cinema as "Cavalcade," "Little Women," "The House of Rothschild," "Maedchen in Uniform," "The White Sister," "Cradle Song," Catherine the Great," "The Private Life of Henry VIII," "Lady for a Day," "The Sign of the Cross," "The Ten Commandments," "Intolerance," "The Birth of a Nation," "The King of Kings" and innumerable others of comparable intelligence and worth.

RUTH ABBOTT,

leading woman of the National Theater Players, who for the fourth consecutive week appears in the role of Miss Billie "Stonewall" Jackson in "Sailor, Beware," the ribald farce by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson, which is shattering all stock company records at the National. The Players and many local actors are well cast.

Mystery Drama Scheduled for National, July 2

Following the engagement of "Sailor, Beware," the National Players will present what Critic Percy Hammond calls "the best mystery melodrama of the 1933-1934 season," "Invitation to a Murder."

This new play is a real chiller, fashioned by Rufus King, who collaborated on "Murder at the Vanities." It is running on Broadway at present and there is feverish activity among the Hollywood producers to land the movie rights.

Playwright King has fashioned dialogue and incidents that are calculated to give the most blase a thrill. In one scene a rich and powerful California lady lies in a deathlike trance, shrouded, while the grisly organ music of her funeral fills her mansion. Lorina Channing feigns death with the aid of a struggling physician to trap a relative who has been trying to poison her.

"Invitation to a Murder" offers the National Players cast good roles. Roy Roberts and Ruth Abbott will play the leads, with Freddy Sherman, Mary Loane. Raymond Bramley, Mrs. Adelaide Hibbard and Romaine Callender.

Roadside Group To Give Extra 'Demand' Show

A special "demand" performance of "The Octoroon" tomorrow night, June 25, is announced by the management of the Roadside Theater, located just off the Rockville pike, 6 miles beyond Bethesda.

Enthusiastic response to the revival of Dion Boucicault's masterpiece of the 1850s, both in demand for tickets and in the participation of the audience in the performance by loud hisses, cheers, and even floor stamping, has made this additional performance feasible.

Latin Actress Risks Health for Sake of Her Career; Harold Lloyd to Begin New Film Soon, He Says; Hollywood Oddments and Such.

By Speed Kendall.

Hollywood, June 23.—Rosita Moreno, brunette Latin actress, virtually took her life in her own hands yesterday when she walked on the set at Paramount studio. She did it against the instructions of her doctor, who told her to go, instead, to the hospital for the removal of her appendix. An attack on Monday stopped production on "Ladies Should Listen" until her return yesterday. She stakes her health against a good break in this and two productions at other studios before she will submit to an operation.

Punished For Disobedience.

Orders are orders, Jean Parker discovered yesterday when her sail boat was ordered taken from her. Moguls at M. G. M. issued the ultimatum because she, against orders, ventured alone beyond the breakwater at Los Angeles harbor. A lot of picture work is scheduled for her, and executives are taking no chances.

Just Tired Out.

Maestro Ted Fio Rito was lulled to sleep today by his own music. He fell smack out of his chair, fast asleep, at the radio studio where he and his orchestra are rehearsing for a two-reel musical. Too much prosperity and not enough rest are blamed for his embarrassing moment. He has four jobs—making this film, playing at the Cocoanut Grove, preparing a vaudeville routine and broadcasting.

Good News For Lloyd Fans.

Harold Lloyd sent word to his studio yesterday from New York that he will start production almost immediately upon another picture. It will be almost two years between the exhibition of his recently completed "The Cat's Paw" and the last previous one, "Movie Crazy," and Lloyd doesn't intend permitting another lapse of time between pictures. He and his wife will first take a trip though the National parks or go to Honolulu for a month.

New and Novel Experience.

Three hundred beauties working in the chorus for "Dames," out at Warner Brothers, had an unusual experience today. They had to wear black cotton stockings! Busby Berkeley, the dance director, insisted on this innovation to get the proper black and white effects he desired.

A Common-Sense Concert? 'Tis Only a Critic's Fond Dream of a World Without Vanity

Reviewer Gives Us Fairy Tale In Which Some Will Find Moral

Pianist Is Clothed for Comfort, His Name Unadvertised; Program Is Ad Libitum, There Is No Applause; Ah, He's Yearning for the Impossible.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Percival Pollard once remarked that "to dream of impossible things impossibly is the only dreaming that is worth while." I assume that he meant the kind of dreaming in which one indulges during waking hours, for it is only in consciously directed dreams that the impossible comes logically to pass.

When we dream with open eyes we do not have to clothe our wish-fulfillments in Freudian symbols, for the will is in harmony with the imagination. The tentative laws of science, the evolutionary hypothesis, the theory of relativity were all the outcome of day-dreaming under the guidance of the intelligent will to discover. Even music critics have their dreams of improbable things that may be true, and this is one of mine:

I found myself in a crowded concert hall waiting for the entrance of a young Patagonian pianist. (The vogue of the Russians had evidently declined). The name of the musician eluded my mental snatches at it, and I inquired of my neighbor, who informed me curtly that he did not know. In his facial expression pity mingled with a mild astonishment. I detained a passing usher and asked him for a program, only to be met with a puzzled stare and a shrug of the shoulders. Curious glances were cast at me by those who had overheard my request, and I began to feel the prickly uneasiness of the socially inept.

Clothed for Comfort.

This discomfort was forgotten when the pianist walked upon the stage, for I was surprised by the unconventionality of his costume. He was attired as for a tennis match—white flannel trousers and a soft silk shirt with short sleeves. The evening was warm, but he appeared cool and comfortable—a refreshing contrast to the dress-suited figures to which I was accustomed. I knew that my enjoyment would not be disturbed by vicarious worry about his wilted collar and his bedewed brow.

After preluding a few bars, the pianist turned to the audience and announced his first number—a work by a composer of whom I had never heard. When he had finished, there was no applause. The faces of the auditors expressed appreciation and delight, and I noticed that some whispered comments were exchanged here and there, but the clatter of percussive palms was absent. The spell of the music remained unbroken by any noisy demonstrations throughout the recital. It was the first time that I had been allowed to enjoy music in public without rude shatterings of my reveries, and I knew that I was dreaming.

As we arose to depart, I besought my neighbor for an explanation of a procedure so novel to me, an anachronistic being from the year 1934. Though seemingly doubting my sincerity or my sanity, he was patient enough to tell me all that I wished to know.

Now the Explanation.

"The practice of advertising individual artists was abandoned long ago," he said. "It is music that we are interested in, and not the performers. Of course, we recognize and appreciate the individual variations in interpretation, but we subordinate the personal element to the musical values. We take it for granted that any artist who ventures to perform in public has an adequate technique and an endowment of brains and temperament. We no longer waste time in disputes over the relative merits of executants. One of the results has been the disappearance of professional jealousy among musicians and their concentrated devotion to their art; another is that musical criticism is now confined, as it should be, to a discussion of music and not to the manner of its performance.

"When a concert is to be given, the principal work on the program is announced, and that is all. Aside from this one composition, the artist does not bind himself to a set schedule, but plays whatever his mood dictates. This permits complete freedom of emotional choice and removes the sense of restriction. No artist should be obliged to play Bach when he feels like playing Beethoven, and how can he tell weeks in advance how he is going to feel at a given hour?

"You say that you are surprised at the pianist's costume. What I can not understand is the reason why performers allowed themselves for so long a time to be hampered and pinioned by conventional evening dress. The amount of energy that a pianist expends is equivalent in foot-pounds to hard physical labor, and he should be comfortably clothed for the task. I am appalled when I think of the hours of distress that have been imposed upon performers in the past by a foolish formality.

Applause? That's Crude.

"As for applause—why, that crude method of showing appreciation is only a tradition for us—something that we know once existed as a curious nervous excitement which we have outgrown. The musicians were the first to protest against it, because it disturbed their poise more than it pleased their vanity. Any musician who is sensitive enough to be a creative interpreter is able to feel the emotional response of the audience. He does not need to be deafened by an uproar to know that he has succeeded in conveying his ideas and sentiments. Besides, it is a distinct shock, both for the performer and the listener, to be recalled from spiritual exaltation by a racket.

"Since you are going to wake up presently, I hope that you will not repeat what I am about to tell you. I have heard that the change from noise to quiet in the concert hall was strongly objected to by certain egotistic musicians like——"

Confidences, even those of the future, should be respected.

Vienna Boys' Choir Booked for Capital

Famous Group to Return in Coming January.

When the Wiener Saengerknaben (Vienna Boys' Choir) visits the United States next season for a concert tour, which will bring them to Washington in January as one of the attractions in Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey's first Sunday series in Constitution Hall, they will be augmented to 24 members. Moreover, they will have with them their distinguished director, Dr. Georg Gruber, who was unable to leave Vienna for the recent round of concerts in Europe and America.

Since returning to Austria last March the boys have been singing regularly in the former Imperial Chapel of the Hapsburgs. The important part which they play in the Holy Week observances each year requires their presence in Vienna at that time, and their tours always must be completed before Easter.

The choir boys have already departed from Vienna for their summer home in the Austrian Tyrol, where they will remain until September. They will take part in the Salzburg Festival, giving a concert in the Mozarteum on September 5, and will soon thereafter start on their long concert tour. During their sojourn in the mountains they will prepare a new opera and a number of new choral works for their season's programs.

The American tour, which will take them to the Pacific Coast, already is booked for some 90 concerts. So great was their popularity last season that the original booking of 80 concerts was increased to more than 100 before they left this country.

Convention Here Emphasizes Club Women's Achievements in Educational Fields

D. A. R. President Will Speak At Session Opening June 30

Federation Among Pioneers in Field; Call to Denver Meeting Stresses Need of Training Nation's Daughters as Well as Sons.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

The acceptance of the educational element in all "forward-looking" activities of women will direct many women leaders to the seventy-second annual convention of the National Educational Association at the Washington Auditorium June 30 to July 6.

The broadened scope of the association is reflected in the presence on the program of many speakers of widely diverging ideas. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Russell William Magna, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and representatives of other women's organizations.

The Daughters of the American Revolution were among the first to recognize the importance of educational campaigns to instill in the minds of their members and the people of the United States the objects and ideals which inspired the organization of women descendants of Revolutionary patriots. The D. A. R. first sounded the note of patriotic education and they have carried on this project very effectively in every city and State in this country and throughout the world.

Aided Mountain Children.

The D. A. R. first recognized the need of the boys and girls of the Southern mountains and established classes and mountain schools which have become models for every organization undertaking this kind of work.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs also has contributed valuable assistance to the educational progress of this country. It was at the request of the U. S. Department of Education that a survey was conducted by the General Federation of the illiteracy population of the United States. The volunteer workers of the Federation not only found and listed the men and women who could not be listed as literate but also made careful tabulations of the circumstances contributing to their illiteracy.

An important topic of discussion in at least one of the sessions of the N. E. A. will be the educational opportunities being afforded unemployed women at the camps being established in key places of the country under the auspices of the Federal Emergency Relief. Mrs. Roosevelt is taking an active interest in these camps. Since only a limited number of the 2,000,000 women out of work in this country can be given the privileges of these camps, their selection is being based on their desire and adaptability to the educational and vocational advantages furnished.

Federation Meets in July.

Education and educational projects and opportunities also will be an outstanding theme of discussion at the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs at Colorado Springs, Colo., July 16-18.

The National Capital's delegates to all business and professional women's meeting is an evidence of the interest the women of this class here take in the welfare and standards to be maintained by women of their own groups. Washington's business and professional women have written their names high on the record of accomplishment in national and civic service.

The call to the meeting at Colorado Springs has been issued by Mrs. Geline MacDonald Bowman, National president. Mrs. Bowman is identified with the work of the Washington Business and Professional Women through her frequent visits here. In this call, Mrs. Bowman stresses the necessity of preparing daughters as well as sons to earn their own living.

"Everything happening in the rapidly changing economic and social order in our country today vitally affects the lives and future of business women," the call points out.

12 Million on Jobs.

"Women's active participation in the economic life of the country is probably her most dramatic development. Twelve million women in America today help earn the bread and butter for the Nation, an increase of 50 per cent in the last 10 or 12 years in spite of the economic situation. The concern of this organization is not only that women today shall have an equal opportunity and reward for the development of whatever capacities they may possess, but that all future generations of girls shall have an equal chance in life with their brothers. It is economically unsound to throttle enterprise and talent, because of the accident of sex. Practically every family today needs to prepare its daughters as well as its sons to earn their living."

The regent reported the presentation of two Good Citizenship medals to students of the Rockville Junior High School, and two to the Bethesda Chevy Chase Junior High School, for outstanding citizenship. The chapter voted to present two medals to the schools next year. The chapter history was read by Mrs. Edgar W. Moore, in the absence of the historian, Mrs. J. Henry Brown.

National Balloon Race of 1934 Will Start From Birmingham, Ala., July 28, at Nightfall

Three Winners to Constitute U. S. Team in Bennett Contest

Powerful Searchlights Will Illuminate Big Field for Take-off; Event to Climax Aero Club's Midsummer Celebration.

Birmingham, Ala., will be the scene of the National balloon race of 1934, it was announced here last week by officials of the National Aeronautic Association.

The race is scheduled to start Saturday, July 28. The winners of first, second and third places will constitute the American team which will compete in the Gordon Bennett International race, to start from Warsaw, Poland, September 20.

What is declared to be a decided innovation has been included in the event this year, in that the start of the contest will take place after dark, with the first contestant leaving the field at 9:30 p. m. The others will follow at intervals of five minutes.

Powerful searchlights will be employed to follow the balloons as they depart and similar high powered lights will be used to illuminate the field during the inflation period. The event will be held at Legion Field, the Birmingham Municipal Stadium.

The race is being sponsored by the Birmingham Post in conjunction with a number of civic organizations. The proceeds will go to the Crippled Children's Clinic. The start of the race will climax the annual mid-summer celebration of the Birmingham Aero Club. Efforts are being made to bring Army and Navy stunt flying teams to Birmingham for the race.

Entry blanks have been sent to prominent balloonists throughout the United States. This will be the fourth event of this character at Birmingham, the previous ones being the National Balloon Races of 1920 and 1921 and the Gordon Bennett Race of 1920.

Under normal conditions the course of the balloons will be northeast. In the past the gas bags have been seen over Columbus, Dayton, Akron, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Buffalo and cities in Canada. The winner of the 1920 International Race landed at the north end of Lake Champlain.

Reserves Wait Delayed Active Duty Orders

Treasury Fails to Issue Funds in Time for Early Notice.

Several hundred District Reserve officers assigned to regiments and other activities of the Organized Reserve of the Third Corps Area are anxiously awaiting orders for active duty training, scheduled to take place next month.

In addition there are approximately 200 C. M. T. C. trainees in the District of Columbia and immediate vicinity awaiting instructions for the July encampment. The officers particularly affected by the delay of orders are those assigned to units of the 428th and 429th Infantry regiments scheduled for 14 days of training beginning July 1. Other units designated for training in July are the 364th Medical Regiment, beginning July 8, Quartermasters, Chemical Warfare and Ordnance Groups, and the 913th Antiaircraft Coast Artillery regiment July 22.

It is the policy of the Third Corps Area to issue orders 30 days in advance of the opening of camp. It was learned last week that funds for Reserve training have not been released to the War Department by the Treasury, and that until the money is made available to the Corps Area, orders will not be issued. It is contemplated that if the Corps Area portion of the War Department training allotment is not received in time to issue orders, postponement of the training period for the first two regiments will be necessary.

C. M. T. Camps.

Citizens Military Training Camps will open July 8 for 30 days. Washington trainees will be sent to Fort Myer and Fort Monroe, Va., and Fort Washington, Fort George G. Meade and Fort Hoyle, Md. The War Department appropriation bill, recently passed by Congress, provides funds for the training of 1,650 C. M. T. C. applicants in the Third Corps Area.

Disappointment is in store for many of the young men of Washington who have been accepted for training but will not be ordered because of reduced funds. These candidates will be reconsidered if vacancies occur prior to the opening of camp due to withdrawal of applicants now accepted and slated to go.

As the War Department is desirous of ascertaining the number of officers affected by this legal prohibition, instructions have been issued to corps area commanders as to the number of officers of the Organized Reserve under their assignment jurisdiction who come under this restriction. The War Department has stated that in the event this prohibition becomes the permanent policy of Congress, officers affected would cease to receive practical military training and that it would be expected, in most cases, that they would cease to take any active interest in the units to which they may be assigned.

Civilian Conservation Camps.

The assignment of Capt. Harry Henry, of the Thirty-fourth Infantry, Fort Meade, Md., as subdistrict supervisor of the Civilian Conservation Corps, with headquarters in the Munitions Building, has been announced. Capt. Henry replaces Capt. Thomas E. May, who has been detailed by the War Department as instructor for the Oregon National Guard.

Officers who have been ordered to active duty with the Civilian Conservation Corps for six months are First Lieuts. Joseph Anthony Ronan, Medical Corps, of Alexandria, Va.; Howard Katzman, of 1600 Sixteenth street northwest, and Joseph B. Stanley, Air Corps, of 1712 New Hampshire avenue northwest. Lieut. Col. Ralph C. Bishop, Field Artillery, of 3701 S street northwest, is ordered to active duty for 14 days at Fort Hoyle, Md.

Reappoinments.

The following reappointments in the Officers Reserve Corps were made last week by the War Department: Lieut. Col. John J. Butler, of Alexandria, Va., specialist; Maj. Willis R. Lansford, of Bethesda, Md., Signal Corps; Capt. Joseph A. Llompart, of 119 Rittenhouse street northwest, Ordnance Department; Capt. Richard S. Paulett, of 3830 Harrison street northwest, specialist; First Lieut. Arthur Current of the Chastleton Hotel, Quartermaster Corps; First Lieut. Alexander L. Craighill, of 3064 Q street northwest, Field Artillery; First Lieut. Ernest R. Welch, of 1262 Columbia road northwest, Infantry; Second Lieut. Lloyd B. Kidwell, of Lyon Park, Va., Coast Artillery Corps; Second Lieut. James M. Henderson, of 2519 Twelfth street northwest, Finance Department, and Edgar E. Hon, of 314 East Capitol street, Auxiliary Reserves.

Conner Ends Four Decades In U. S. Army

Chief of First Corps Area Is Praised Highly by Pershing.

Forty years ago a young Mississippian in his teens, born and reared in Slate Springs in Calhoun County, reported at the United States Military Academy on the Hudson for admission as a cadet.

This young Mississippian of the early '90s, then Cadet Fox Conner, now Maj. Gen. Fox Conner, has just completed four decades of service in the Army. He is commanding general of the First Corps Area with headquarters in Boston, a post he has held since 1930.

During the World War Gen. Conner was in charge of the operations section at Gen. Pershing's headquarters. On the anniversary of the completion of 40 years of active service, the war-time commander in chief issued a statement concerning Gen. Conner.

Praised by Pershing.

Gen. Pershing said: "I consider him one of the outstanding officers of the World War, and I speak from an intimate knowledge of his services in France. As chief of operations of the American Expeditionary Forces he brought to this important task a keen mind, sound judgment, devotion to duty and rare professional ability which contributed in no small measure to the success of American arms.

"While a cadet at West Point Gen. Conner gave promise of a briiilliant future, and displayed the same qualities of leadership that have marked his long and distinguished career. He is one of the ablest men in our Army today and a credit to the Military Academy and his profession."

Received Shell Wound.

During the visit of the French Mission to the United States in 1917 Gen. Conner served as liaison officer to Gen. Joffre. He was one of the first American officers to reach France, arriving June 13, 1917. In October of that year he was appointed assistant chief of staff in charge of the operations sections of the general staff.

Always a believer that the commanding generals should be close to the scene of action, Gen. Conner was wounded by fragments of a bursting shell at Seicheprey, France.

For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished services he was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal. He also has been decorated by France, Great Britain, Belgium and Italy.

He served in Cuba with the Army of Occupation in 1899 and commanded the Hawaiian Department at one time. Recently he has devoted a considerable portion of his time to the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Masons Played Major Role in Colonies – District Philatelists Argue First-Day Sales

Historic Gunston Hall Was Ancestral Home of Noted Line

Founder Represented Landed Gentry in a Vicinity Famed for Its Contribution of Men Who Led Fight for Independence.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

Neighbor to the distinguished Colonial worthies who lived in Georgetown, and what is now the City of Washington, was George Mason, of Gunston Hall. Because he gained wide fame as the author of the Bill of Rights by no means detracts from his placid life as a citizen of the Old Dominion in the days before the American Revolution.

George Mason represented the landed gentry of this immediate vicinity. In this historic countryside, called the Athens of Virginia, these country gentlemen who became Colonial celebrities lived a delightful life of mingled sport and cultural pursuits. Their hunters and their stables were the pride of their hearts, but so were their substantial libraries, their stately portraits of Sully, Peale, Stuart and other artists of the time and their heritage of gentle birth.

Out of such soil came the early rulers of this country. Some one has remarked on the great men who sprang up in the restricted area of northern Virginia, say within a hundred miles or so of Washington. Westmoreland County, Fairfax and Alexandria all contributed their quota. Many present-day residents of the District of Columbia and nearby Virginia and Maryland cherish the fact of their direct or collateral descent from these men and women.

That is what makes genealogical pursuits in Washington of such a fascinating nature. Treasure trove upturned in this field means not only the linking together of lost lines of individual families, but new facts about historic personages as well. This unwritten history is of vast value in preserving the record of these days in our National life which are no more.

Out of the quiet of George Mason's study at Gunston Hall came the Bill of Rights which preceded the Declaration of Independence; the constitution of the State of Virginia, and the almost equally famous Fairfax Resolves—all signal guns of American freedom. George Mason has been called "a statesman of the closet" and the term is not amiss. Every great movement needs the thinker and the scholar, as well as the doers.

The roots of George Mason's family tree reached back to Staffordshire, in old England. His colonial ancestors held official positions in the civil and military service of Virginia. Born in 1725, in Fairfax County, Va., he grew up in the fateful years which preceded the American Revolution, when the advance thoughts of freedom from the Mother Country began to stir in the minds of his countrymen.

Helped Found Alexandria.

George Mason was one of the founders of Alexandria in 1749 and he played a leading part, too, in the organization of the Ohio Company.

Something of the notable history of Gunston Hall, the ancestral home of the Masons, is epitomized in a paragraph once written by Charles Moorse, chairman of the National Commission of Fine Arts. He declared: "If Gunston walls had tongues as well as ears, what conversations around open fires they might report: Washington and Mason discussing the Fairfax Resolves that threw down the gauntlet of independence; Patrick Henry getting from the cool and philosophical Mason the fuel for the fires of his eloquence; Richard Henry and Arthur Lee talking of the French Alliance; Rochambeau and Lafayette journeying north after the victory at Yorktown; Jefferson and Madison coming straight from Mount Vernon to get Mason's views as to the location of the Nation's capital. These early exchanges of opinion were paralleled during the World War by the long discussions between Arthur J. Balfour and Secretary Lansing which took place under Gunston trees."

In 1792 George Mason died and the Gunston Hall estate passed to his eldest son, George Mason, of Lexington; thence to the third George Mason. The three by that name sleep tranquilly now in the graveyard adjacent to Gunston Hall, and the Bill of Rights dreamed by the first George Mason of Gunston Hall, now has become an actuality.

Through the generations the Masons of Gunston Hall have served their country well. Gunston Hall has now passed out of the hands of the family, but the Mason tradition is continued by its present owner, and the historic home has been restored to much its original stateliness.

Family Trees

William Alexander Rind.

My attention has recently been drawn to the genealogical article in The Post, April 29, relating to the Rind family. As the gentleman mentioned was my great-grandfather I was naturally very much interested.

Before bringing the line down to the present, as I knew it, I would like to go back to Great-Great-Grandfather Rind and the wife, who had the brains and the courage to carry on the paper after his death. She was born Clementine Grierson, of Dumfries, Scotland. "The Laird of Lag" of the "Border Tales" was probably her grandfather, perhaps her father. Her name has been perpetuated to the present generation.

I have heard that William Alexander Rind had eight or nine children. The only two I am certain of was my grandfather, Samuel Seabrooke, and his sister, Charlotte, who remained unmarried and always lived with him.

Samuel Seabrooke, son of William Alexander, married Maria Kankey, of Prince William County, Va. They had nine children, six boys and three girls. I have been told he published the Washington Intelligencer, then became chief clerk of the Treasury, which position he held till the Civil War, when he resigned to accept the same position with the Confederacy. It was in this move to Richmond from Georgetown and the attendant vicissitudes of war that much of the family furniture and portraits were lost, including two large oil paintings of the first William Alexander and wife.

To return to the nine children of this couple, Samuel and Maria, they were:

William Alexander, unmarried.

James Montgomery, unmarried.

Zebulen Kankey, went in the Confederate navy and was lost at sea.

Samuel Seabrooke, married Miss Virginia Brooke, seven children, large number of descendants living in Martinsburg, W. Va.

Charles Grierson, married twice, first to a cousin, Miss Kankey, of Virginia, by whom there were four children; Robert Grierson, deceased, married Miss Stonnel, two children; Charles Grierson and Annetta. Annie, married R. L. Giss, two children; Virginia and Richard Grierson, Araminta and Daisy, both unmarried. All living in District of Columbia. Second marriage to Miss Berger, one child, Mary Howard, myself.

Robert Grierson, married Miss Lida Conrad, one son, Robert, whereabouts unknown.

Rebecca Elizabeth, married Thomas Mullikin, three children, Brooke, Daisy, and Rebecca.

Virginia Montgomery, married Dr. Julius Conrad, two children, Clementine and Elsie, living in St. Louis.

Clementine, died unmarried at about 18.

I neglected to state in the proper place that I married Robert Balderston Ellershaw and have three daughters, Eugenie Kirkpatrick, Mary Grierson and Robin Balderston.

In closing I would like to say that these two editor grandfathers are the ones I have always intensely admired and longed to know more of. I feel sure there must be much of great interest historically connected with their writings and in their correspondence if it could only be ferreted out.

MRS. R. B. ELLERSHAW, Jr.,
R. 1, Box 52A, Annapolis, Md.

Elbridge Gerry.

Elbridge Gerry married Ann Thompson (1763-1849), a New Yorker whom he met while a member of the Continental Congress. Three sons and six daughters survived him: Catherine, who married Hon. James T. Austin; Eliza, who married Maj. David Townsend; Ann; Elbridge; Thomas Russell (1794-1845), who married Hannah Goelet; Helen Maria; James Thompson; Eleanor Stanford; and Emily Louise, who died in New Haven, December 28, 1894, and was the last surviving daughter of a signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Thomas Stone of Maryland.

Thomas Stone (1743-1787), was one of many men of the times, whose "heart wishes for peace upon terms of security and justice to America," but felt that "war, anything, is preferable to a surrender of our rights." From his election in 1775 until his last term in 1783, when he witnessed the resignation by Gen. Washington of his commission to Congress, he worked long and faithfully in committees, especially that for framing articles of confederation. He married about 1764, Margaret, daughter of Dr. Gustavus Brown, of Charles County, Md., and, with her dower, built a house at Havre de Venture, two miles from Port Tobacco, which was still standing in 1891. Margaret was inoculated for smallpox in 1787, but died from the effects of unskillful treatment. This so distressed her husband that a trip to Europe was prescribed; but he died at Alexandria, Va., in October, 1787, as he was about to embark. Three children survived him: Frederick, who graduated at the "College of New Jersey," and was in Philadelphia, studying law, when he died, unmarried, in 1793, of yellow fever; Mildred, who married Travers Daniel, and had five children, and Margaret Eleanor, who married John Moncure Daniel, and had seven children.

Tucker.

The Tuckers claim descent from Teucer, first King of Troy, whom the Trojans called Teukroy (Tuckers).

One of the same name was the best archer among the Greeks, supposed to be the brother of Ajax.

The most skillful gem engraver the world has ever known was a Teucer (Tucker), who lived in Rome in the time of Augustus.

John Tucker, first of the name in England, was at the Battle of Hastings, October 14, 1066, under William the Conqueror and was granted by him the coat of arms in 1079 and also the estate of Tavistock, County Devon.

A direct descendant, Wilhelmus Tucker, married Josea Ashe, and their son, George, married Maria, daughter of John Hunter of Gaunt. Queen Elizabeth conveyed the manor at Milton-next-Gravesend to this George Tucker in 1572. The Tuckers also went into Wales, where they held, for over 400 years, the Sedlyham property and used the same coat-of-arms.

George, John and Robert Tucker, grandsons of the George previously mentioned, left England in 1636 and went to Bermuda, where a relative of theirs, Capt. Daniel Tucker, had been commissioned governor February 15, 1615. George, being heir to his father's estate of Tavistock, County Devon, returned to England after the troubles there had been settled. John and Robert came to Massachusetts, Robert settling in Weymouth and John in Hingham. John's son, Jabez, settled in Westerly, R. I.

Lawrence Sanford.

In reply to K. S. C. in The Washington Post of May 27, 1934, I wish to say that Lawrence Sanford married Catherine Porter. Their daughter Sarah married Capt. Ebenezer Eveleth and died in 1862.

Lawrence Sanford was a member of the Lodge of Washington in 1804 and his brothers Robert and William Sanford in 1790 and 1804 respectively. William Sanford died in 1813.

Thomas Sanford, son of Catherine Porter and Lawrence Sanford, was born in Alexandria May 2, 1780. He married Esther Leavens at Marietta, Ohio, November 27, 1803. He was one of a committee appointed to make arrangements for the proper reception of Gen. Lafayette, and was present at the Grand Masonic banquet given in his honor at Clagett's Hotel, February 21, 1825. Thomas Sanford had nine children. He served as worshipful master of the lodge from December 27, 1812, to December 27, 1813. He was the ninth master.

I have obtained this information from an old Masonic book. Thomas Sanford was my great-great-grandfather.

Williams—Israel.

Certain members of the Israel family advise me that the wife of Robert Israel, "who died in Anne Arundel County, Md., in 1795," was Priscilla Baker.

Their nine children were Mary, Sarah, John, Ruth, Elizabeth, Bazil (Basel), Beall, Amelia and Robert.

If interested further in the dates of their births and who they married, will be glad to furnish the information by phone any evening.

Air Post Issue Of Greece Has Great Beauty

Unwatermarked Group in Seven Values; New Stamp for Peru.

Many countries of the world issue handsome postage stamps. From time to time these columns will record the history of some of these issues and illustrate the various stamps.

The recent issue by Greece of the air post stamps for the Italy, Greece, Turkey, Rhodes service is exceptionally beautiful and comprises seven values. This issue, with values and designs, follows: 50L, green and orange, airplane propellor and head of aviator; 1d, blue and brown, the temple of Neptune at Corinth; 3d, dark violet, airplane over Hermoupolis; 5d, brown orange and dark blue, allegory of flight; 10d, deep red and black, map of the route; 20d, black and green, head of Hermes and airplane; 50d, dark brown and deep blue, allegory of flight. The stamps are unwatermarked and perforated 12.

Peru issues two new air-mail stamps of the same general design—2s, bright blue, and 5s, dark brown—showing an airplane in flight over land and sea. The stamps were engraved and printed by Waterlow & Sons, Ltd., London.

Norway has issued a 35-ore, mauve, to its current series and design.

Portugal honors the eighth anniversary of the dictatorship of Gen. Carmona by issuing a 40c, violet commemorative, with a portrait of the general in full uniform. A change in color of the 25c, "Lusiad" type, from blue to light green, is announced.

Stamp Issue Debated By Philatelic Society

The Washington Philatelic Society met Wednesday evening at Hotel Carlton, Vice President Bond presiding. J. W. Fawcett, by request, repeated a part of an address made at the Collectors Club. Then an informal discussion of the first-day sale question was held. From the views expressed it was indicated that Washington would not lose its identity as a philatelic center.

On motion of Dr. Haworth the board of directors was instructed to present the views of the society to the Federation of Stamp Clubs.

The club will meet Wednesday at the Carlton but the meeting scheduled for Wednesday, July 4, will be omitted.

Philatelic Notes

At the meeting of the Washington Stamp Club of the Air Tuesday President Kunze talked on first-day matters and this week on Tuesday at 8:15 p. m. he will discuss the Newburg stamp.

Rear Admiral Byrd Chapter, U. S. C. S., met last night at the home of its skipper, J. B. Merritt, 111 C street southeast. The chapter will sponsor a cachet July 4 on the U. S. S. Ranger.

San Marino issues two values of the 1932 postoffice series surcharged in black with a new value: 3.70L on 1.25L dark blue and 3.70L on 2.75L dark violet. Four values of this issue have also been surcharged with new values and inscribed "12-27 Apeile 1934" and "Mostra Filatelica" for the Philatelic Exposition at the Milan Fair: 25c on 1.25L dark blue, 50c on 1.75L dark brown, 75c on 50c dark red, and 1.25L on 20c blue green.

The Postoffice Department has announced another new stamp. A three-cent commemorative of the 300th anniversary of the founding of State of Wisconsin by Jean Nicolet, an explorer who landed in 1634 near the present city of Green Bay, will be issued but to date no facts regarding size, color, design and date of first-day sale have been announced.

2 Cachets Tell Story Of New Postal Edifice

J. H. Jenkins has a cachet which might be called a "three-in-one" cachet issued on September 26, 1932, at the laying of the cornerstone of the new Postoffice Department Building by President Hoover on the 143d anniversary of the establishment of the United States Postoffice by President Washington. It was also a first-day cancellation for the "Benjamin Franklin Station" in the old Postoffice Department building. And it was the first-day sale in Washington of the 8-cent air-mail stamp. The cancellation "Washington, D. C., Sept. 26, 5 p m. 1932, Benjamin Franklin Station" is excellent.

This cachet together with the one issued on Monday at the dedication of the new building make a unique pair of historical cachets.

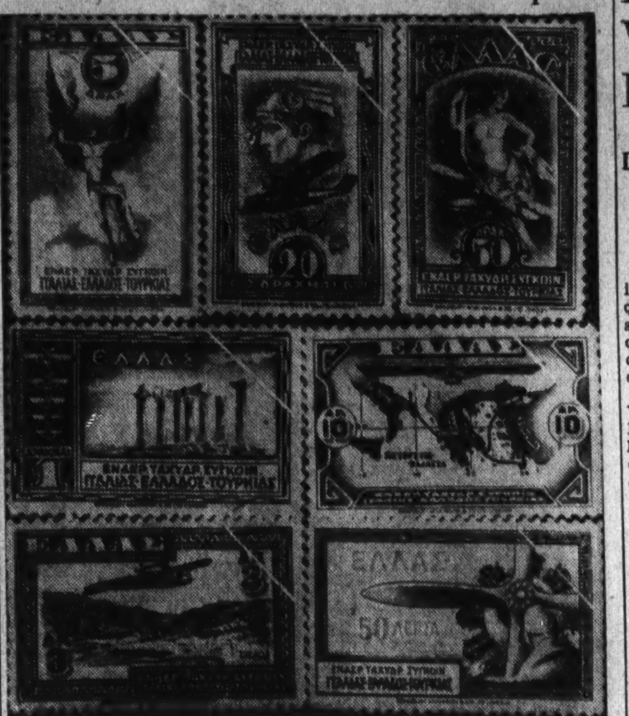
Rare Bermuda Stamp Sold in London for $825

The 1849 1-penny, black, Bermuda stamp in the collection of the late Arthur Hind was sold in London for $825. This stamp is listed by Scott at $1,750.

This rare stamp was a circular die stamped on the envelope. In the upper half of the circle the word "Hamilton" appears and "Bermuda" in the lower. The year was stamped in the center. The signature of the Hamilton postmaster, W. B. Perot, had to be written in to be valid.

Regular adhesive stamps were not used in the islands until 1856, when a stamp with the profile of Queen Victoria was issued. The Hind collection also contained a Bermuda 1 penny, red, of 1854, as well as the rare 1-penny black.

A Handsome Set of Grecian Stamps



This beautiful set of air mail stamps has been received by Harry B. Mason from Greece. The stamps are used in the air service between Greece, Italy, Turkey and Rhodes.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

The price of United States stamps as well as foreign issues is steadily increasing. In the past few months there has been a marked advance in all issues and Washington dealers say that by fall the increase will be from 35 to 50 per cent over quotations of today. The catalogues for 1935 are all to quote price increases and even now the collector is paying a few cents more apiece for almost any stamp he purchases. Of course there are stamps to be purchased at a good rate when the collector bargains for the issues most needed, but as a general proposition the advance is well under way.

A perusal of the advertisements of many of the leading stamp dealers of the country, as well as many foreign houses, show marked advances in many issues. The "buy now" sign is out on almost every page of advertisements in the philatelic press as well as in the daily papers. Foreign exchange is of course an excuse for many advances and for some time some of the largest houses have been selling foreign issues at 25 per cent advance. When the Philatelic Agency removes a United States stamp from its list it is the signal for an advance in price and so it is that the advance is on in all quarters.

It is even noted that in many of the auction sales held of late, some unusually high prices have been reported. At auction market sales some real bargains are obtained, yet on the other hand high prices often result when an especially fine copy of a stamp is desired by several collectors. A check on the catalogues at a number of recent auctions shows this steady increase.

The National Parks stamps will be placed on first-day sale at the parks as well as at the Philatelic Agency in Washington.

The first stamp on sale of this series will be the one cent denomination, the Yosemite National Park design, the date being July 16. Other issues will follow.

More Cities Given Air Mail Service

Pendleton, Oreg., Dispatches First Plane Loads.

Air mail service has been authorized by the Postoffice Department for the following cities, which have had no prior service:

Sheridan, Wyo.; Casper, Wyo.; Augusta, Me.; Concord, N. H.; Montpelier, Vt.; Burlington, Vt.; Charlottesville, Va.; Lynchburg, Va.; Roanoke, Va.; Bristol, Va.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Lake Charles, La.; Huron, S. Dak.; Aberdeen, S. Dak.; Charleston, W. Va.; Huntington, W. Va.; Missoula, Mont.; Wenatchee, Wash.; Pendleton, Oreg., and Lakeland, Fla.

Each postmaster has been furnished with a special cachet and the usual treatment of philatelic mail has been authorized.

Yesterday Pendleton, Oreg., dispatched air mail for the first time on route A M-12 between Salt Lake City, Utah, and Portland, Oreg., just inaugurated. Three trips were made as follows: Trip 2 eastbound to Salt Lake City, leaving 8:43 a. m.; trip 5 westbound to Seattle, leaving 3:52 p. m.; and trip 3 eastbound to Spokane, leaving 6 p. m.

Other cities named above will dispatch first mail on later dates, but no advance notice will be given out.

Those interested in air mail covers for cachets should forward them to the postmaster of the city concerned in advance of the opening of the route. It is essential that a letter of authorization to hold for first flight be furnished each postmaster, so that they may be able to discriminate between business and philatelic mail.

Unique Block of 100 Used Stamps Received

A most unusual block is being shown by Charles Kohen. It is a sheet of 100 Nicaragua stamps, used entire on a parcel of registered mail. Seldom is an entire sheet of 100 stamps used on a single piece of mail.

The stamp is the 15 - centavos, brown, 1914-1922 issue, surcharged in violet "Correos 1928." The cancellations are very good, but there are several errors in the surcharge, "1028" and "1128" and also "Correos" appearing several times on the sheet instead of the correct "Correos 1928."

This stamp alone is catalogued at 50 cents unused and 15 cents cancelled, but an entire sheet of 100 places quite a premium on the block.

Collectors Club Stand Challenged by Speaker

The Collectors Club met Tuesday at the Thompson School with a large attendance. F. L. Rice presided. Several applications of membership were received. An auction sale was held.

J. W. Fawcett read an address on first-day sales in Washington and took issue with the club for going on record as favoring first-day sales at the place of commemoration. He asked the club to rescind its action. A. E. Gorham objected and the matter was passed over for another meeting.

Permission has been granted to the club to hold outdoor meetings for the exchange of stamps in the park at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Nineteenth street Saturday afternoons, the first meeting being held yesterday.

The club will meet as usual Tuesday evening at the Thompson school at 8 o'clock.

F. B. Leech Writes On Fake '94 2-Cent

Detailed Information on Counterfeit Given.

Francis B. Leech, president of the Washington Air Mail Society, has an article in "Stamps" entitled "The 1894 Two-Cent Counterfeit." The article shows unusual care in preparation and Mr. Leech spent many hours examining the official records of the Chicago counterfeit, as the stamp is known.

A block of four of this counterfeit stamp is now in the philatelic collection at the National Museum, having been donated by P. M. Wolsieffer, of Philadelphia. The stamps were first advertised for sale in a Chicago paper in March, 1895, "115 worth for $100, and through this lead postoffice and secret service operators captured the counterfeiters, who were convicted and sent to prison. Nearly 70,000 stamps were confiscated.

These two-cent stamps, carmine, were printed on a thin coarse woven paper from copper electrotype plates in panes 5x5, 5x3 and in strips of five. They measured 19½x22½ mm., perforated 12, and nearly perfect rose-carmine color. Even the gum was smooth, evenly spread and light yellow.

Postage Stamp Stories Are Told in New Book

"The Great Cat of the Jungle," "The Prison Island," "The Spark That Set the World Afire," "General Gallieni," "The White Man's Grave" and "The Founding of Libreville" are all correct titles of stamps. In "Adventures With Postage Stamps," as prepared by H. E. Harris, of Boston, each of these captions tells the story of a stamp, the illustration being the stamp itself.

The beginner in philately is greatly aided by a knowledge of the history of each postage stamp, as it tells of some historical incident of its country. The reader who can tell something about "The Great Cat of the Jungle," as well as "General Gallieni" can locate the stories in his stamp collection.

Study of U. S. Stamps Is Purpose of Society

The Bureau Issues Association is a philatelic society with a mission. It is composed of a group of outstanding students who have organized for the systematic and intensive study of the United States stamps made by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Its officers and commitee chairmen hold their positions through research and study. The society publishes articles on features of stamp manufacture and development, color analysis and research, varieties, guide lines, methods of production, plate markings, &c. Its committees report on booklets and booklet panes, precancels, bureau revenues, colonial issues, plate numbers and plate varieties. H. M. Southgate is president and Ara Marcus Daniels, of Washington, is secretary-treasurer.

Fear That City Will Lose Place Is Discounted

Dealers Desire D. C. to Retain Position as Stamp Center.

Washington philatelists have been interested the past week in the question of first-day sales of postage stamps. This matter has been discussed rather heatedly at times at club meetings, as well as in private circles and at the stamp shops.

It seems that the question of Washington being in any danger of losing its place as a first-day city has been overemphasized. This city evidently will continue to hold its own as a philatelic center.

Dealers desire Washington to continue as a first-day city and it will be, of course, yet there can be no question that the first-day sale of stamps in the respective localities commemorated still will be the order of the Postoffice Department.

Library Lends Valuable Help To Philatelists

E. W. Beitzell Builds Up Fine Resources for D. C. Society.

In every well-organized philatelic society the librarian is one of the really important officers. Stamp literature is as essential to the stamp collector as the album itself. The collector, whether a beginner or a specialist of years of experience, needs assistance in many ways. By reading and the perusal of catalogues he acquires knowledge. The daily newspaper, the radio, the public library all recognize that philately is more than a diversion and an occupation of merit. Philately, of course, is the systematic collection of postage stamps and has become a science.

The library of the Washington Philatelic Society is one of the best in the city. E. W. Beitzell, the librarian, devotes much time to the library work and desires to make the library a real source of philatelic reference for all stamp collectors in Washington. Mr. Beitzell says the catalogues, books on stamps and philately, pamphlets and magazines represent more than 20 years of effort on the part of the society to build up its library.

In Mr. Beitzell's care are 110 stamp catalogues covering a period of many years, 20 books on philately and stamp collecting in general, 85 pamphlets and 1,050 philatelic magazines. Current philatelic weekly and monthly publications and catalogues are being added to the library each week. Two large scrap books are available for reference and new books are in process of making at all times. The daily press supplies this material.

Mr. Beitzell has upward of 2,000 index cards that are constantly in use and kept up to date. This material is proving valuable to the members of the society as it is so indexed that the matter sought can be located in the library's collection without delay. More of the members of the society are constantly searching the material for all sorts of philatelic information and the library has proved its worth many times over.

J. S. Bogris, of Salt Lake City, Utah, has a large and valuable stamp collection. "Stamps" has told of its many rare varieties. Washington philatelists are interested in this collection because H. A. Robinette procured for Mr. Bogris two of his rarest stamps, the 2-pence violet and dull violet, and the 4-pence black and gray-green of British Central Africa. Both of these stamps are of multiple watermark. Each is catalogued at $1,250.

Wisconsin Tercentenary Stamp Scheduled July 7

The 3-cent Wisconsin tercentenary postage stamp will be placed on first-day sale at Green Bay, a first-class postoffice in Brown County, Wis., Saturday, July 7. Sale in Washington will be on July 9.

The stamp will commemorate the 300th anniversary of the founding of the State of Wisconsin and the early explorations in that region by Jean Nicolet. Details as to size, color and design of the new stamp will be announced later. The theme of the stamp is Deming's painting, "The Landing of Jean Nicolet, at Green Bay, 1634."

To Join Federation.

The Washington Air Mail Society, at its meeting Monday, voted to become a member of the National Federation of Stamp Clubs. E. W. Beitzell presided, in the absence of both President Leech and Vice President Heath.

The society voted to sponsor cachets June 30 and July 1, the dates of the change in air mail rates from 8 to 6 cents.

Rules for Aircraft Repairs Simplified

Vidal Seeks to Reduce Aviation Costs.

New and more direct methods of approving alterations and repairs to licensed aircraft have just been placed into effect by the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce, Eugene L. Vidal, director, announced last week.

Heretofore it has been necessary for manufacturers to submit detailed drawings and technical data to Washington before repairs or changes could be approved and the aircraft returned to service.

A repair agency now will need only to send to the aeronautics branch, for record purposes, information to show that proper repair specifications were followed.

"The new methods," explained Mr. Vidal, "have been adopted to eliminate involved procedure and consequent inconvenience and expense to manufacturers and repair agencies. They are in direct line with our desire to remove, where possible, and without affecting safety, any regulations or policies which may stand in the way of reducing aviation costs, or which may otherwise unnecessarily hamper the industry."

The new methods, worked out by Col. J. Carroll Cone, assistant director of aeronautics in charge of air regulation, and his staff, also provide that specifications that do not affect the primary structure may be approved at the factory by a Department of Commerce inspector.

H. M. S. Cairo Gets British Crew Cup

The Hugh Rodman Cup, competed for annually by rowing crews from the British Fleet, was won this year by H. M. S. Cairo, according to word received at the Navy Department last week from Sir William Henry Dudley Doyle, K. C. B., of the British Home Fleet.

This trophy was presented to Earl Beatty, Admiral of the British Fleet from 1916 to 1919, by Admiral Hugh Rodman, U. S. N., in the name of the officers and men of the Sixth Battle Squadron, which operated with and formed a part of, the Grand Fleet during the World War.

The U. S. S. Farragut, destroyer of 1,500 tons, was accepted from the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation and placed in full commission by the Navy last week.

The commandant of the First Naval District, Rear Admiral H. H. Hough, took over the vessel for the Navy. Commander Elliott Buckmaster, U. S. N., is in command. The first destroyer to be placed in commission since August, 1922, the Farragut was sponsored by Mrs. James Roosevelt.
